The fight of the teachers in defense of their living and teaching conditions cannot be won by themselves alone. The experience of the Chicago and Havana teachers, to take only recent events, proves this. The militant mass demonstrations of the Chicago teachers were successful in winning a measure of relief. But the attacks on the school system and on the teachers directly and indirectly are not only continued but intensified. In Cuba it required the action of the entire population to oust the dictator who oppressed the country including the teachers.

The teachers are employees of the state. In defense of their interests they must contend directly against its enormous power and manifold apparatus of coercion and repression. The character of the movement which can successfully resist its onslaughts is indicated by the hurricane which swept Machado out of office. Such a movement the teachers cannot build nor even lead.

In a word the teachers movement must seek allies among those strata of the population whose interests bring them into conflict with the state. Local estate associations, chambers of commerce, civic betterment societies, etc., etc., sometimes fight government policies in pursuit of their special interests, principally in the matter of reduction of taxes. But this coincidence is more apparent than real. Local estate associations everywhere are now pressing for reduction in taxes at the expense of the school system and the living and teaching conditions of the teachers. The present drastic economy program in education is proceeding under the whip of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

More fundamentally, the real estate associations and chambers of commerce are the organizations of the ruling classes who instigate and carry through the attacks on the teachers THROUGH THE STATE. The state is their state. Their conflict with it is an attempt to REFORM ITS POLICIES IN THEIR INTEREST AT THE EXPENSE OF THE WORKING CLASSES WHICH INCLUDE THE TEACHERS. That is why they were not found in the ranks of the demonstrators in Chicago and Havana. If the teachers depend on them they will be betrayed. That is inevitable.

The position of teachers in capitalist society as a section of the working class marks out the road they must travel in resisting the blows of the capitalist class. They must join hands with the workers. Only the working class movement of which the teachers must become a part, as they have in France, can solve the problems of the free school system and the living and teaching conditions of the teachers.

This fundamental orientation must be reflected in the policies of the teachers movement and its organizational forms. The organization of teachers unions has already given the historic answer to the question: what organizational forms shall the teachers movement take? It follows that the basic organizational form of the teachers resistance is the trade union. And it makes it necessary for the teachers to enter the trade union movement. The defense of culture leads to the trade union movement.

This fundamental orientation and this fundamental organizational form does not exclude other, temporary forms of organized resistance. But it indicates the relation in which they must stand toward the teachers trade unions and the trade union movement.

Strike of the Doll Workers Grows

New York.—The second week of the Doll and Toy workers strike finds the strikers militant and fighting. Already strikers have been beaten and arrested by the police. The picket lines are holding strong and most of the doll trade is out. With prospects of the strike continuing indefinitely, we must not put faith in the NRA; and also the negotiations in Washington between the bosses' Association and the Union, over the codes, may fall through. Preparations for strike relief must be started immediately. We must appeal to all labor unions and other labor organizations to help us during the strike. Many of the strikers cannot pay their initiation fees, because they have no money. Therefore this outside assistance will be gladly welcomed.

Workers demand shop meetings in the union hall and not in the shop, because the boss will try to get the weak ones to go back to work by promises. He is doing this in order to break the strike and afterwards to worsen our conditions lower than before the strike. Also see that these meetings are held regularly, and that full reports are given to the workers to act upon and decide.

alive in the breasts of the social democratic statesmen that the portals of their respective bourgeois ministries have not yet been closed to them for aye. No intoxicating vapors of victory were sung in Paris. The vocabulary of triumph made way for the vocabulary of defeat.

Nagui, as if recalling Vandervelde's greetings to the Vienna assembly, remarked rather maliciously about the "communes who used to come to international congresses as ministers of state, and who are now emigres". The Russian Menshevik Abramovich, whose wisdom is held in doubt even by his comrades in view of his questionable achievements before and after the 1917 revolution, declared that "the German capitalists knew the socialists would not fight". The Czech Menshevik Winter spoke off-handedly of the "collapse of the German party" (only yesterday it was the backbone of the Second International). The secretary of the International, Fritz Adler, casually mentions in the course of his report that the German "Social Democracy was crushed". Even the most hopeful among the delegates, the same Vandervelde who still presides over the International and yearns to transfer his presidency to the cabinet of His Royal and Pious Majesty, King Albert of Belgium, ran pump nothing more inspiring from the wells of his eloquence than the proclamation that "the International still lives despite all disasters".

Of major disasters, there has been no lack for the Second International since August 1914, when it passed—ministers and intendents—into the camp of imperialism. That it has been able to survive as a movement embracing millions of workers is due to no inherent powers of its own, nor even to the support of a bourgeoisie frightened by the prospect of the social revolution.

The principal source of strength of the social democracy since the Russian revolution and the end of the world war has been drawn from the degeneration of the Communist International induced by the policy and the regime of world Stalinism. If Stalinism has succeeded in maintaining its stranglehold on the official Communist movement only by living parasitically off the defeats of the proletariat which it helped to multiply for the last ten years—the social democracy, in turn, has been able to prolong the breathing spell it gained after the failure of the first spontaneous, and unsuccessful, post-war revolutionary wave, by a parasitic living off the blunders and crimes of Stalinism. Its strength has been essentially the weakness of its principal confederator for the support of the proletarian masses. "Our policies and successes may not be perfect, but those of the Communists are worse"—that is the beseeching note that has formed the motif of the pleas of the social democratic statesmen for years past.

Each time that a new impulsion swept tens and hundreds of thousands of socialist workers away from their old moorings and set them on the road towards Communism at a lively pace, they encountered a perfectly harmonious united front between the reformist and the Stalinist leaders standing in the way of their progress. Stalin, Brandler and Zinoviev did as much as mortals could to extend the lease of life of the German (and international) social democracy by the course they pursued in 1923. The powerful Leftward movement of the British proletariat in 1925-1926 was brought to an abrupt halt and turned backward—not so much by Purcell, Cilline and Swales, as by Stalin, Bucharin and Tomsky who propped up those tottering pillars of British capitalism. The widespread mood for struggle engendered by the terrific crisis of world capitalism, did not strengthen the Communist movement by an influx of socialist militants; instead, the latter were violently repulsed by the stratagems of the Third Period and driven back into the reformist camp.

In other words, not all of the Catholic obscurity about the "united front from below" has succeeded in eliminating infinitely more effective and genuine united front "from above"; between the social democratic leaders and what passes for a general staff in the ranks of Stalinism. The former have exercised all their strength to pull back the Leftward movement of the masses into the reformist swamp; the latter have left no means untried to push back into the same swamp the workers moving towards Communism. A more harmonious and more disastrous division of labor has rarely been seen in the history of the proletariat. And it is only by understanding the tragic significance of this process that one can explain how the corpse of 1914 was able to revive and to grow so strong in the past decade.

The Second International did not revive, it goes without saying, as a revolutionary proletarian organization. It became an objective obstacle to the revolution. Nor did its revival even as the numerical addition of national petty bourgeois parties of labor take place along an unbroken line. Quite the contrary. Even in the course of its rejuvenation, it passed through more than one convulsing crisis. Many of them afforded the Communists the opportunity of extending on to a world scale that which was accomplished in one country in 1917: the final historical liquidation of social reformism. Under the stunning blow of the German catastrophe, the Second International is passing through such a crisis at the present time. That is why the former and future ministers of state assembled at Paris conducted their affairs in so lugubrious an atmosphere.

The classic party of reformism, the German social democracy has been mercilessly crushed and its leading staff scattered by the Fascist club despite all the assurances it gave of its anxious servility. The "great" Austrian social democracy, praises for whose cheap Viennese bread and municipal apartment houses were sung all over the world, clings pitifully to the sword-belt of Chancellor Dollfuss and prepares to resign itself to the fate of its German brother party like a doomed criminal in the death cell. The French socialist party is split into two independent parties, the Center of Leon Blum and Co. and the Right wing of "future ministers", Renaudel and Marquet who are even now negotiating with Daladier for places in the Cabinet. (With genuine French delicacy, the Renaudel wing still remains, as a pure formality and a concession to socialist public opinion, inside the same party as Blum and Aurio, while carrying on what has become more than a flirtation with Daladier, in spite of the stern, forbidding decisions of party congresses. A true-to-life Continental triangle, a French ménage à trois!)

Matters are anything, worse in England. First, the defection of ministers MacDonald and Thomas, and then the definite disaffiliation of the strong Independent Labour Party from the Second International, have not strengthened the position of the Second International in Britain. What is left is the Labour Party. And as the Menshevik correspondent of the New York Forward, Ivanovitch, observes, with a considerable amount of injured justification, "it should be kept in mind that the English and the other European socialists grew up in such sharply different spiritual circumstances that they were never able to find a common language. To the European socialists, the Englishmen were always too cold-blooded about important theoretical and principled questions, they were too great opportunists, conciliators, and short-sighted practicalists." And the parties mentioned constitute most of what is of real consequence in the Second International.

The day of miracles having passed it is futile to look towards the Second International for a genuine progressive movement. The working class of the world can march forward only by casting it off, by accelerating its disintegration, by driving it and its whole ideology out of its ranks. But in marching forward, the socialist workers are instantly confronted with the problem: Whither shall we go?

The answer is not so simple as it was a decade or more ago. In those days, the break with reformism led almost directly to the Communist International. At the present time, what has changed in the situation is precisely the fact that the discreditment of the Second International goes hand in hand with the bankruptcy of the Stalinists. The workers repelled by international reformism are not attracted by international Stalinism. At the present time, the existence of distinct and irreconcilable currents in the Communist movement makes imperative a qualification of the general slogan: On to the Communists!

The Leftward moving socialist workers are confronted with the choice of a decadent Stalinist apparatus and—the Left Opposition, the inheritor of all that is revolutionary and progressive in Marx and Lenin. In many of the organizations which have hung about the Second International and Communism, the choice is even now being made. These include the British I. L. P., the German Socialist Workers' Party, the Revolutionary Socialist Party of Holland, the Norwegian Labor Party and groups of a similar trend. Among them the ideas of the Left Opposition, the impulsion towards a new banner, a new program and a new organization, are making irresistible advances. Tomorrow, the same choice will occupy the thoughts of thousands, tens of thousands and more socialist workers as they realize more acutely the truth of Luxemburg's judgment that the Second International is a sinking corpse.

The importance of the Paris Congress of the I. S. I. does not lie in the frustrated thwarted aspirations or the revived hopes of the bourgeoisie. It lies only in the powerful subterranean movement of the reformist workers to the Left, a movement which has already broken through the bureaucratic crust in full force at some points. The situation dictates the most astute and comradely attention of the Left Opposition. The union of the truly revolutionary socialist militants and the regenerated sections of the Communist parties strangled by the Stalin machine, is the guarantee of the tremendous future which lies ahead. The unbattered banner of the Left Opposition will be the proud standard of the coming movement.

"...Among individual party members of some cells there began to circulate within the past period assigned anti-party syllabuses and questionnaires on the history of Bolshevism, of the Comintern and of the January plenum decisions, which were distributed to individual members in connection with the cleansing of the party. Such documents were discovered in the cells of the Sacharof (Sugar) trust, in the transport institute, in the chemical-technological and the evening machine building institutes. All these documents contain perversions of party history, program, policy and strategy, and on some questions—open Trotskyist interpretations."

These lines were published in Pravda of July 19, 1933, No. 2733. They are taken in full from the decision of the secretariat of the Kiev city party committee adopted June 28th and published in the Kiev Proletarian Pravda on July 3rd.

"The decisions," says Pravda, "contain a censure of the secretaries of the party cells of those organizations in which the 'syllabuses' were discovered: one author of these crisis (syllabuses) Kanavsky, is expelled from the party, another, Viaznikoff, is strongly reproved and taken off from all party work, the third author of these anonymous crisis, Haritonoff, is turned over to the regional cleansing committee."

The Stalinist bureaucrats are amazed—are they still a few people in the party who dare think for themselves? They ask: "How did it happen that during two months (time crisis, harmful and inimical to the cause) the bureaucrats would so gratuitously substitute the word Leninism for Stalinism? Have been going the rounds of the Communists under the guise of scientific syllabuses?"

Pravda explains the cause of this "strange" phenomenon.... "When anonymous Trotskyist crisis make the rounds in the biggest cells, this indicates not only the loss of party feeling (read: the ineffectiveness of the G.P.U. and the apparatus to stem the advance of Marxian ideas among the party masses) of those who used them but also the lack of vigilance and the weakening of ties with the cells of those leading party organizations under the very nose of which all this took place."

These quotations need no comment. They speak volumes for the growth of Bolshevik-Leninist influence and ideas among the working class, in the "biggest cells" of the party and throughout the Soviet Union. The cynical bureaucracy, with all its repressions and deportations is powerless to halt the wave of sentiment for the Left Opposition.

Chauvinist Policy or Stalinist Antics -- Which?

New York.—The incredible antics of the Stalinists have by now become so commonplace as to cease to be matters for wonder. Nevertheless in the interests of working class education—of how not to act—let us record a monstrous piece of Stalinist confusion. More ridiculous than any are the Puerto Rican Anti-Imperialist Ass'n. which carried on a "struggle" against the T. W. Grant Store in Harlem, New York.

"Together with several other Spanish speaking auxiliaries of the Stalinist party this mockery of a revolutionary organization, the anti-Imperialist League put forward a demand that 'fifty per cent of the employees of the Grant Store should be Latin-American.'"

So astounding was the nature of this "error," that when we first heard of it in the bourgeois press, we believed it a calumny against the workers' organizations. We were unable to believe that people calling themselves Communists could present such a demand as even the reactionary leaders of the A. F. of L. have not yet dared to bring forward. It was hard to conceive that people calling themselves internationalists could go to such an extreme as would only result in the pitting of one nationality of workers against another.

The Stalinist demand can have only one interpretation—the company should fire a certain section of the workers employed by them now and replace them with Latin-American workers. We were finally convinced that this was no bourgeois calumny when we saw its confirmation in the Stalinist Liberation, an article was published in this sheet which not only repeated this demand but which was nothing short of a nationalistic and chauvinist tirade of the worst sort. This demand is not only anti-working class but is especially ludicrous when advanced by a section of foreign born workers. Just another example of the bankruptcy and stupidity of the "Communist leaders" among the Spanish speaking workers in New York.

The Boston Needle Trades Right Wing Unions Growing -- T. U. U. L. Isolated

In May 1933 the International Ladies Garment Workers called a strike in the dress industry. The industry was seventy-five percent unorganized. The International controlled the majority of the organized shops, while the Industrial Union had a very small number of organized shops, the majority of its members being in unorganized shops. Conditions in general in the industry were very bad. Workers were earning as low as seven and eight dollars per week and in many cases even lower. This was true of the union as well as the open shops. The Industrial Union due to its wrong policy and with the aid of the International terror policy lost most of its membership, and was not in a position to call a strike, did not even have a policy to propose to the workers. The old policy of unity from below did not work, the International members did not respond. When the members of the Left Opposition in the Industrial Union more than a year ago pointed out the necessity of reentering the International in a body, they were bitterly attacked in the good old Stalinist fashion. The Industrial Union leaders said they had patience, the workers will have to come to us when they realize the betrayal of the International. But time went on and the Industrial Union lost more shops, more members.

In the International the workers were very discouraged, had very few active elements and were very discouraged. However, these few did fight, demanding that something be done to better conditions. The International in order to maintain control in the shops gave all kinds of concessions to the bosses and did not want to call a strike. To the workers they gave all their excuses. Finally they decided to show the workers that they tried to improve the conditions, at the same time hoping to organize more shops and have more funds. For this they called a strike in May at the end of the season. The strike lasted about a week. They demanded nothing from the bosses, and thus they succeeded in getting agreements in many shops that had fought the union bitterly for many years. The workers were told to be satisfied, since they had gotten a union. In some cases they even managed to get small wage increases and the promise that next season they would get better conditions since they would be organized. The Industrial Union also called out its shops on strike at the same time that the International did, demanding only what the International did and sent the workers back at the same time. Many of the Industrial Union members that worked in open shops were told by their leaders to go to the International with the shop. In that way the latter gained many members from the former.

Union Members Begin To Stir
A long slack period took place shortly after the strike. The Left wing workers slowly began to make proposals and demanded that something be done to improve conditions. The International members gained courage when they saw that they could win a fight. More workers attended the meetings, made proposals and worked out demands for the coming season.

For the last few years due to the collaboration of the International with the bosses in their attempt to maintain control over the shops, a system was introduced into the industry of one price for each line of dresses. It made no difference how much more work there was on the different styles they were all settled for one low flat rate. The workers had to work very hard and could not make a living. They began to demand that this evil be abolished, and a minimum wage per hour be established for every craft in the industry, that prices be settled in every shop for each garment according to the amount of work in it.

Reject Bosses Proposals
Meetings were called, discussions took place and the union officials under the pressure of the workers also began to admit that the one price system must be abolished and promised to fight against it. The cost of living rising daily they felt that something must be done; the workers were very discontented. The International began to call for conferences with the bosses, telling them that the wages must be increased, at the same time trying to stall the members with all kinds of promises. In the meantime the NRA appeared and the government conciliator was brought in as arbitrator. A membership meeting of the dressmakers was called in Faneuil Hall where about seven or eight hundred workers came to hear the report of the conference, and the proposals made by the bosses through the government and the union representatives. They told the workers that the employers offered a fifteen percent increase for workers making less than twenty-five dollars per week, and a ten percent for workers earning above this sum. In addition they proposed a forty hour week and every thing about the same as before.

The workers felt that this was no improvement; that it meant starvation just as before. A discussion was permitted and the workers let them know what they thought of their miserable proposals. Jennie Chlipowitz, a member of the Left Opposition, took the floor and unmasked the entire proposals, gave a correct analysis of the conditions prevailing in the industry and told them what the proposals meant for the workers in view of the rising cost of living; that the forty hour week would not abolish unemployment since there was a forty hour week existing for years in the industry. She demanded a thirty hour week, and at the same time appealed to the workers not to demand of government representatives to improve their conditions. This can be accomplished only through the united efforts of the working class. She appealed to them not to return to work until they had secured better conditions. The government and the union officials received their answer in a stormy applause when the speaker got through. It signified a strong protest against the offer. The officials were astounded, even frightened a bit; they did not expect such determination on the part of the workers. The government official rose and apologetically asked the workers to be patient since he realized that the speaker represented the sentiment of the workers. He promised them that everything would work out, that conditions will be improved. As a result, the entire offer was rejected by the workers.

The union leaders went back to hold further conferences with the employers and the government arbitrator. They sent the members to work with indefinite prices, told them that another meeting would take place where they will again bring further proposals which they expected to get from the employers. They promised not to make any settlement without the approval of the workers. Then what took place?

Union Leader Confuses Workers

The next week another meeting was called in Faneuil Hall where about a thousand workers came, eager to know under what conditions they are going to work. Kramer, the manager of the International, this time without the conciliator, told the workers that he managed to make the employers change their offer of a fifteen percent wage increase, to twenty-five percent, but that they insist on the one-price system for each line. Again the workers protested against it. They knew that the twenty-five percent increase, on the one-price system with piece work would mean nothing because should the styles this year mean more work, this would in reality be a reduction. Instead, they demanded a minimum wage of a dollar an hour for operators, and that a minimum scale be established for every craft. A motion to this effect, endorsed by the workers, was discouraged by the manager of the union. He succeeded in confusing the workers and got the motion defeated. He again told the workers to go back to work, to wait, that he would again confer with the employers, try to get as much as possible and not to settle without the consent of the workers. The following week the workers were told again that the conciliator suggested to accept the one price piece work system and that all settlements are only temporary pending the acceptance of the code.

Now the code has been accepted. We in Boston are not yet affected by it. We can expect nothing from it. Only the united efforts of the workers can improve our conditions.

Hyman Comes to Boston

A couple of weeks ago the Industrial Union called a mass meeting with Louis Hyman, president of the union and invited the members of the International to participate. They were going to give a report about the New York strike and talk about the Boston settlement, but as usual the International workers, in spite of their dissatisfaction with their union settlement, did not come to the meeting. Hyman spoke on the code in the cloak industry, on the roles played by the Industrial and International Unions in Washington. The Industrial Union spokesmen were not given a hearing there, since they did not represent the cloak-makers. Hyman was given the floor, not to speak, but only to answer questions that were put to him. Among other questions, he answered that if the cloak-makers had been given the chance to elect their own representatives, he would have been elected. He did not say much about the New York strike, what role the Industrial Union played and what they accomplished. He did say however that 30,000 dressmakers were on strike and that the reason the International got such a good code was due to the fact that the workers were on strike. When he was through, Eva Weiner, member of the Left Opposition, took the floor and asked him why he sent in the cloak-makers into the International through the back door, while he is sitting in the Industrial office; she asked him why the leaders of the Industrial union were not there with the workers to help them fight against the betrayal of the corrupt leadership of the International. She pointed out how they failed to carry out a genuine unity policy in the cloak and dress industry. Comrade Weiner also asked him why he did not report what the Industrial Union position was in the recent dress strike in New York, and what it was going to do now that the bulk of the workers were in the International. His answer was mild.

N.Y. Upholsterers Union Growing, Strike Goes On

The balance sheet in the sixth week of the New York Upholsterers general strike leaves Local No. 76 of the A. F. of L. with a grim grip in the trade than it had for many years. The skeleton to which it was reduced since the beginning of the crisis has been fattened up considerably by rallying under its banner about eighteen hundred upholsterers as compared to the few hundred it had before the strike.

With twenty-five shops already settled and negotiations being made daily for more settlements, the spirit and militancy of the strikers has been manifested to such a degree that the bosses and the N.Y.A. mediator, Colonel Phillips, have been forced to heat a retreat. This does not mean, however, that they will be content to mark time. The valuable experiences we have gained so far in the strike will be completely lost if we do not draw the proper conclusions from them. The upholsterers must reject any further negotiations offered them by the representatives of the N.Y.A. The only conceivable solution that the blue eagle can offer us is that we go back under the same intolerable open shop conditions we have been staying under the past few years.

Until all our demands are granted we must continue to strike and engage in intensive picketing. The strike is not yet won; the larger shops are still on strike and using every means to terrorize and demoralize the strikers. We must mobilize our forces in mass picket lines. The demonstration of three hundred of the most militant upholsterers of the union in front of the Trade Shop in Long Island has shown us the way. Participants in that demonstration included not only members of Local 76 but also members of the Furniture Workers Industrial Union.

The enthusiasm with which the latter were greeted is only another indication that their place is inside Local 76. Inside Local 76 they can become a powerful force that can influence and lead the upholsterers in still greater struggles against the employers. Outside of Local 76 they are doomed to remain an isolated sect; small in numbers, weak in influence, and completely separated from the masses, maintaining a meaningless paper organization which would, to say the least, only abuse the confidence of those workers in the Industrial Union who have not yet voted with their feet.

A terrible condemnation of the bankrupt policy of the T.U.U.L. union was very clearly demonstrated at a mass meeting of the upholsterers which was called for Tuesday morning, September 5, at which only seven workers showed up. No comment is necessary when that number is compared to the five-hundred which attend the daily strike meetings of Local 76.

By pursuing their present ruinous course the Stalinist leaders of the Industrial Union are only disorientating, discrediting and isolating the Left wing workers from the main body of workers which is now streaming into Local 76.

We must follow this movement into Local 76 in full force and without hesitation. The Left wing workers must demand once more of their leaders: unity with Local 76, build one strong union in the industry. It is not yet too late. Now is the time.

—LANKIN.

He said that there was no way for him to get into the International now; that the workers were not ready to fight there for his conditions and would not need him. He said that they intended to keep the office, that the workers would eventually come back and would have a place to go. On the question of the dress strike, he said that the Industrial Union had also participated in the strike, and many shops out and was fighting for conditions, nothing more.

Now we ask the leaders of the Industrial Union: How do they expect to get conditions if the international controls the major part of the industry and we are compelled to be guided by their settlements? The Left Opposition says that it is the duty of the Left wing leaders and workers to be together with the bulk of the workers and become a part of the mass union to fight against the betrayal of the international leadership, point out to the workers the correct policy, lead them, guide them and help them win conditions.

Hitler & the Prospects of War

A. A. REVEALING DOCUMENT

The speaker, or the simply cautious reader will reply that our interpretation of the Hitler program is, at best, a hypothesis, which has certain marks of verisimilitude but of no means the stamp of authenticity. To this one can reply: the program moves from the imperative logic of the circumstances and in its politics one must have as the point of departure that the opponent who always make his best moves. The anatomy of Hitler's program is, therefore, not a hypothesis, but a fact. The opposition literature of the National Socialists is exceptionally abundant and contradictory, whereas the governmental practice is still very recent and meager. The author was only aware of this difficulty when he undertook his work. But we were assisted by a fortunate accident which supplied us in time with a political document of extraordinary value.

We refer to an "Open Letter" of Hitler to Papen, published in the form of a little brochure on October 16, 1932. Hitler's political in tone, the "Letter" remained unimpaired outside of Germany. The leaders of National Socialism talk and write too much. Still, it should have found a place on the table of every diplomat or journalist who occupies himself with the present-day foreign policy of Germany. Let us recall the circumstances of the document. Papen was then Chancellor. Hitler was in expectation of opposition—between August 13, when Hindenburg refused to appoint him head of the government, and January 30, when the Field Marshal was forced to yield the command of Germany to Hitler. The "Open Letter" was not destined for the masses, but for the ruling classes, and had as its aim to prove to them that the social regime of Germany cannot be saved solely by bureaucratic methods; that only the National Socialists have a serious program in foreign policy; finally, that he, Hitler, is as far removed from effete resignation as he is from adventurism. The letter is almost void of demagogues. It is serious in tone and veracious in essence. Today, it may be assumed, Hitler would gladly burn his own brochure in the furnace. All the more attentively should his adversaries examine it.

"It is absurd to think," Hitler explained to Papen, "that the power which disarmed us, will today seriously disarm itself without being forced to do so." It is just as absurd to wait for France to agree some fine day or other to the rearmament of Germany. Its enormous military preponderance relieves France of the necessity of an entente with a vanquished foe on the basis of equality of rights. Any attempt to propose a military agreement to France in return for armaments, will not only be very coldly received but will immediately be brought to the attention of the state against which it might be aimed: Hitler is alluding of course to the Soviet Union. It is possible for Germany to gain the right to arm itself only by means of a genuine re-establishment of the European equilibrium. England and Italy are interested in the realization of this goal, but in no case and under no conditions is France. "It is inconceivable to think that the lack of intimacy and of concordance with England and Italy can be made up for by the establishment of better relations with France!" The fundamental thesis of the foreign policy of Hitler, which places a cross over the ideas, or if one prefers, over the illusions of Locarno, leaves nothing to be desired in the way of clarity. In the declaration of May 17, we will not of course find so clear an exposition. But the declaration in no way contradicts the "Open Letter"; on the contrary, it develops and applies its program for a definite stage.

The goal of German policy is the re-establishment of the military sovereignty of the state. Everything else is only a means thereto. But the means need not at all be constructed in the image of the goal. Under no circumstances must Germany present itself to the world with a rearmament program of its own, even less so to this Disarmament Conference. For two reasons no conference is able to adopt a decision which would radically change the material relationship of forces; the very demand for the right to armaments, while remaining a purely platonic demonstration, will nevertheless permit France to suppress the question of its own disarmament and, what is worse yet, bring England closer to France.

This latter result is, according to Hitler, already obtained to a certain degree as a result of the thoughtful policy of Papen. England is forced to support France much more than it wants to. It must be recognized that the criticism addressed by Hitler to the "Gentlemen's Club", and to the Chancellor of the Reich himself as a dilettante and an adventurer, is not merely biting but also quite convincing. The "national" foreign and bureaucratic have no foreign policy at all. The rattling of an in-existent weapon is dictated to them by domestic considerations; they are ready to utilize the nationalist movement while arresting, at the same time, its further growth. Undoubtedly taking his inspiration from Bismarck, Hitler does not recoil from a blow at the last Hohenzollern: Papen and his colleagues are only the epigones of the theatrical policy of Wilhelm II, with this fundamental difference, that the Kaiser had a first class army, whereas they have only the memory of it. Hitler hits a bull's eye here.

It is not hard, after this, to understand how badly mistaken was that part of the press and diplomacy which sought to discover the real program of the present German government in the rhetoric of Papen on the peculiar charm of the man on the point of battle. It must not be lost sight of that Papen, when the Nazis, during the brief period of his rule, treated as a captain of the dragons, feels himself in their midst like a man who is constantly on probation. On May 13, he adopted an unusually loud tone so as to put himself in harmony—but he was mistaken in his calculations. One may have his own opinion about the tastes of an elderly captain of the dragons who, between taking a dose of Groland and drinking down a glass of Hunsd-Jesus water, propagates among young people the advantages of strapping over arthritic shoulders; but one thing is indisputable: behind Papen's discourse is concealed no program. The "pacifism" of the present Chancellor is much more dangerous than the bellicose blarney of the Vice-Chancellor.

In passing, we find the explanation for the sharp contradiction between Hitler's declaration and the previous policy of Neurath, Nadjny and others. Hitler became Chancellor at the cost of accepting a ministry of barons and privy counselors. The camarilla around Hindenburg consoles itself with the idea of pursuing also its policy under Hitler. In all likelihood, it is only the threatening repercussions of Papen's speech that gave Hitler the possibility of finally taking into his hands the helm of foreign policy. It is not Wilhelmstrasse which dictated the declaration of May 17 to the new Chancellor. On the contrary, it is Hitler who subdued the fantasies of the barons and the privy counselors of Wilhelmstrasse.

But let us return to the "Open Letter". With an unusual brusqueness, it attacks the slogan launched by Papen on naval armament: even if Germany had the means—and it hasn't—it would not be permitted to convert them into warships and it would be powerless to violate the prohibition. The slogan of military armament alone drove England to the aid of France; there you have the results "of your truly faithful leadership in foreign policy," Mr. von Papen!

The struggle for the arming of Germany, on sea and on land, must be based upon a definite political idea. Hitler calls it by its name: the need of "strengthening the defense against the latent dangers of the East." It is comparatively easy to motivate. Sympathy for such a program is guaranteed in advance on the part of "clear-sighted persons" in the West—obviously not in France. It is only from the standpoint of "the defense necessary for us in the East", with regard to the Baltic Sea, that England can be persuaded to accept "corrections" also in the naval paragraphs of the Versailles treaty. For it must not be forgotten: "at the present time, it is important for the future of Germany to have an attitude full of confidence towards England."

The German national movement and should demand armament, but the German government must in no case expound this demand. Today, it must insist only and exclusively upon the disarmament of the victors. Hitler considered it self-evident that the Disarmament Conference is condemned to failure. "There would be no need at all," he wrote three months before his advent to power, "for the German delegation to participate interminably in the Geneva Disarmament comedy. It would suffice to expose clearly before the whole world the wish of France not to disarm, for us thereupon to quit the Conference, stating that the peace of Versailles has been violated by the signatory powers themselves and that Germany must reserve for itself under these circumstances the drawing of the corresponding conclusions."

The declaration of Hitler, as Chancellor, only serves to develop this melody. The refusal of the victors to disarm would signify the "final moral and real liquidation of the treaties themselves." Germany would interpret such conduct as the desire "to remove it from the Conference." In that case, it would be hard for it "to continue to belong to the League of Nations." Truly, the "Open Letter" is indisputable as the key to the strategy of Hitler!

The departure of Germany from the League of Nations should be accompanied by a disaffection between France, on the one hand, and England and the United States, on the other. The first pre-conditions will be created for the re-establishment of the "European equilibrium" in which Germany must occupy a growing place. With the concordance of Italy and England, Hitler will acquire the possibility of re-arming Germany, not by petty contraband measures but by big "corrections" in the Versailles treaty. Parallel to this, will be developed the program of "defense" against the East. In this process, a critical point must inevitably supervene: war. Against whom? Should the line against the East prove to be the line of least resistance, the explosion can also take place along a different direction. For, if it is still possible to discuss to what degree offensive means are distinguished from defense means, it is already beyond discussion that the military means suitable for the East are equally suitable for the West.

Hitler is preparing for war. His policy in the domain of economics is not dictated by the abstraction of autarchy, but primarily by a concern over the maximum economic independence of Germany in case of war. To the aims of military preparation must also be subordinated the service of obligatory labor. But the very character of these measures indicates that it is not a question of tomorrow. An attack upon the West in the more or less proximate future could be carried out only on condition of a military alliance between Fascist Germany and the Soviets. But it is not the most turbulent sections of the White Guard emigration that can believe in the possibility of such an absurdity or can seek to make a threat out of it. The attack against the East can take place only on condition of the support of one or several states of the West. This variant is, at all events, the more real one. But here too the preparatory period will not be measured by weeks or by months.

The four-power pact, deciding nothing fundamental in advance, can only organize the mutual contact of the largest states of western Europe: it is a guarantee against hazards of a secondary order, but not against fundamental antagonisms. Hitler will strive to extract from the pact all the advantages for the attack against the East. The regulations of the pact pre-determine no more than ten percent of its future destiny. Its real historical role will be determined by the actual relationships and the groupings of its participants, their allies and their adversaries.

Hitler is prepared for the next ten years not to undertake any military actions against either France or Poland. In the declaration, he fixed five years as the term which genuine equality of rights for Germany in the matter of armed forces must be accomplished. These terms need not, of course, be invested with a sacred significance, but indirectly they nevertheless outline the bounds, in point of time, within which the leading circles of Fascism confine their plans of revenge.

Domestic difficulties, unemployment, the ruin and the distress of the petty bourgeoisie, the mass of course, push Hitler to premature actions which he himself, by a cool analysis, must regard as harmful. In living politics, one must base himself not only upon the plans of the opponent but also upon all the entanglements of the conditions in which he is placed. The historical development of Europe will not meekly obey the order of march worked out in the Brown House of Munich. But this order of march, after the seizure of power by Hitler, has become one of the great factors in European development. The plan will be altered in conformity with events. But one cannot understand the alterations without having before him the plan in its entirety.

The author of these lines does not consider himself at all called upon to mount guard before the Versailles treaty. Europe needs a new organization. But we betide it if this work falls into the hands of Fascism. The historian of the twenty-first century will, in that case, inevitably have to write the epoch of the decay of Europe begun with the war of 1914. Called the "war of democracy," it soon led to the domination of Fascism which became the instrument concentrating all the forces of the European nations towards the aim of "the war for liberation"....from the results of the preceding war. Thus, Fascism, as the expression of the historic blind alley of Europe, was at the same time the instrument of the destruction of its economic and cultural acquisitions....

Let us hope, however, that this old continent still has sufficient vital strength left to open up to itself a different historical road. Trinkipo, June 2, 1933.

Richard Rall

Comrade Richard Rall, an active member of the Left Opposition in Kansas City, passed away Monday August 28. Rheumatism was the official cause but the bosses speed-up—the real murderer.

The auto plant where comrade Rall had been working up to the time of his illness had been driving its hired slaves from seventy to eighty hours a week during the months of May, June and July. This speed-up robbed comrade Rall of all physical resistance to disease and drove him a victim of capitalist exploitation, to death at the early age of 29.

Richard Rall had a rich proletarian background. His father was a militant worker in the early struggles and free speech fights of the western workers. The Russian Revolution opened the eyes of the elder Rall to the need of political action. This turn of events made a vivid impression upon the then young comrade, Richard Rall.

Comrade Rall came to Kansas City two years ago and immediately took up the study of Marx, Engels, Lenin and Trotsky. This brought him to the conclusion that the program of the Left Opposition was the only one that would lead the world proletariat to victory.

Up to the time of sickness, comrade Rall was the organizer of the Kansas City branch of the Left Opposition and the study class of the Spartacus Youth Club which, under his able tutelage grew from twelve to twenty.

Disarmament and War-V.I. Lenin

(This article was published by comrade Lenin in October 1916, in the Social-Democrat, the Bolshevik publication issued in Geneva, Switzerland during the war. It is of especial importance now, when preparations are being made for an Anti-War Congress with the participation of Barbusse and other pacifists. It clearly states the revolutionary line in the struggle against war, and distinguishes it from petty-bourgeois pacifism. To read this document now enables one to measure the distance which separates the line of Lenin and that of Stalin, the "greatest disciple of Lenin".—Ed.)

The adherents of disarmament are opposed to the point in the program on the "arming of the people" for this reason among others, that the latter demand is supposed to lead more easily to concessions to opportunism. We have already examined the most important part: the relation of disarmament to the class struggle and to the social revolution. Now let us examine the question of the relation of the demand for disarmament to opportunism. One of the most important reasons why it is unacceptable is precisely the fact that it, and the illusions created by it, inevitably weaken and take all force from our struggle against opportunism.

There is no doubt whatever about the fact that this struggle is the most important question on the agenda of the International. A struggle against imperialism, which is not indissolubly connected with the struggle against opportunism, is nothing but an empty phrase or a swindle. One of the main deficiencies of Zimmerwald and Kienthal, one of the main reasons for a possible fiasco (failure, or collapse) of these terms of the "Third International," lies precisely in the fact that the question of struggle against opportunism was not even openly posed, not to speak of a decision on this question in the sense of the necessity of a break with the opportunism. Within the European movement opportunism has conquered—for the time being. In all the larger countries two shades of opportunism have been formed: first, a phony, cynical and therefore less dangerous social-imperialism, that of Messrs. Plekhanov, Scheideemann, Legien, Albert Thomas, Sembat, Vandervelde, Hyndman, etc.; and second a concealed form, of the Kantakyn type: Kantakyn, Haase and the "Social-Democratic Co-operative Group" in Germany; Longuet, Pressman, Mayers, etc. in France; Ramsay MacDonald and other leaders of the "Independent Labor Party" in England; Martov, Scheide, etc. in Russia; Treves and other so-called "Left reformists" in Italy.

The sincere form of opportunism is frankly and openly opposed to the revolution, and to the beginning revolutionary movements and outbreaks. It is in open alliance with its government, no matter what different forms this alliance may take, ranking from participation in the ministry up to participation in the war committees of industry. The concealed opportunists, the Kantakyns, are more lurid and dangerous to the labor movement, because they hide the defense of their pact with the government behind fine-sounding and also "Marxist" phrases and pacifist slogans. The struggle against both these forms of the prevailing opportunism must be carried out in all fields of proletarian policy: parliamentary, trade union, strikes, the army, etc.

But in what does the most important peculiarity consist, which distinguishes both forms of the prevailing opportunism? It consists in the fact that the concrete question of the connection of the present war with the revolution and other concrete questions of the revolution are passed over in silence, are veiled over or are treated with reservations as to police prohibitions. And this is done—irrespective of the fact that, before the war, unofficially on innumerable occasions and officially in the Basle Manifesto the connection of the present war with the proletarian revolution was pointed out.

The main defect of the demand for disarmament consists precisely in the fact that in it all the concrete questions of the revolution are evaded. Or are the adherents of disarmament in favor of an entirely new kind of unarmed revolution?

IV.
We go on. We are in no way opposed to the struggle for reforms. We do not want to ignore that disarmament, that if the worst comes to the worst, mankind will live through yet another imperialist war, if, irrespective of the numerous outbreaks of the ferment among the masses and their discontent and irrespective of our efforts, the revolution fails to develop out of this war. We are in favor of a program of reforms, which is directed against the opportunists too. The opportunists would be only too happy if we were to leave to them alone the struggle for reforms, and betake ourselves to the misty distances of some "disarmament" in order to save ourselves by flight from the sad reality. "Disarmament" is just that, a flight from ugly reality, but absolutely not a struggle against it.

A proper one of the main deficiencies in the posing of the question, for example of the defense of the fatherland, among certain Left wingers, lies in the fact that the answer is not concrete enough. It is theoretically far more correct, and practically far more important, to say that in the given imperialist war the defense of the fatherland is a bourgeois-reactionary swindle instead of setting up "general" theses against "every" defense of the fatherland. This is not correct, and also does not "hit" the immediate enemies of the workers within the workers' parties, the opportunists.

In the question of the militia, in working out a concrete and practically necessary answer, we should have said, "We are not for a bourgeois militia, but only for a proletarian militia". And therefore "Not a penny and not a man", not only for the standing army but also for the bourgeois militia, even in such countries as the United States or Switzerland, Norway, etc. And all the more so, because even in the freest republican countries (for instance in Switzerland) we see the Prussianization of the militia, the prostitution of the militia for the purpose of mobilization against strikers. We can demand: selection of officers by the people, abolition of all military law, equal rights for foreign workers with the native-born (this is an especially important point in such imperialist countries as Switzerland which exploit foreign workers more and more shamelessly and leave them without rights) and moreover: the right, let us say, for each hundred inhabitants of a given country to create free associations for the study of the art and science of war, with free selection of instructors and payment of the work of the instructors out of State funds, etc. Only under such conditions could the proletariat acquire the knowledge of war for itself and not for its slaveholders, and the interests of the proletariat unquestionably demand such knowledge. The Russian revolution has shown that every success, even if it is only a partial success, of the revolutionary movement, as for instance the conquest of a certain city, or a certain factory district, a certain part of the army, will inevitably force the victorious proletariat to realize just such a program.

Finally, it is a self-understood that one must not fight against opportunism with programs alone, but by inflexibly seeing to it that they are carried out. The greatest and most fatal error of the now bankrupt Second International lay in the fact that its deeds did not correspond to its words, that the habit of the consciousnessless revolutionary phrase was cultivated (see the present relation of Kantakyn and his partners to the Basle Manifesto). If we approach the demand for disarmament from this point of view, we must first of all raise the question of its objective meaning.

Disarmament as a social idea—that is, as one whose origin is due to a certain social situation and which can have an influence on a certain social milieu, and which does not merely remain the caprice of an individual or of a circle—has evidently arisen from the special, unusually "calm" conditions of existence of a few small states, which have stood aside from the bloody road of the war for a fairly long time, and hope to continue to remain on the side. In order to be convinced of this, it is sufficient to visualize the line of reasoning of the Norwegian adherents of disarmament: "We are a small country, we have a small army, we can do nothing against the great powers (and therefore they are powerless to resist being forcibly drawn into an imperialist alliance with one group or another of the great powers!); we want to continue in peace in our little corner and carry on our little career politics and demand disarmament, compulsory courts of arbitration, eternal neutrality, and the rest" ("eternal" neutrality—like that of Belgium, evidently?)

The petty effort of the small states to remain on the side—the petty-bourgeois wish to remain at all costs far from the great battles of world history—and to use their relatively monopolistic position to remain in an ossified passivity—this is objectively the situation which can obtain a certain success and a certain circulation for the idea of disarmament in a few small states. It is self-understood that this effort is reactionary and rests on illusions alone, since imperialism is drawing the small states after all, in one way or another, into the whirlpool of world economy and world politics.

We can illustrate this by the example of Switzerland. The imperialist situation prescribes for it, objectively speaking, two directions for the labor movement. The opportunists are trying to make an alliance with the bourgeoisie, to make Switzerland a republican-democratic monopoly federation, to make money out of the tourists of the imperialistic bourgeoisie, and to be able to use this "peaceful" monopoly position all the more profitably and all the more quietly. In practice, this policy of the alliance of a small privileged layer of workers in a small country, itself in a privileged position, with the bourgeoisie of its own country, is opposed to the masses of the proletariat. The genuine social-democrats of Switzerland are trying to use the relative freedom of Switzerland, its "international" position (as neighbor to the countries of the highest civilization), as well as the circumstance that Switzerland, thank God, does not speak its "own independent" language but three world languages for the broadening, consolidation and strengthening of the revolutionary alliance of the proletariat of all Europe. "Let us help our bourgeoisie to remain in the monopoly position of dealing in the quietest manner possible in the beauties of the Alps for a long time to come; perhaps then a few pennies will fall off for us"—this is, objectively speaking, the content of the policy of the Swiss opportunists. "Let us help the alliance of the revolutionary proletariat among the French, the Germans and the Italians to overthrow the bourgeoisie"—that is the object-content of the policy of the Swiss revolutionary social-democrats. Unfortunately this policy is still only inadequately carried through by the "Lefts" in Switzerland, and the excellent and the excellent decision of its party congress in Aarau in 1915 recognition of the revolutionary mass struggle for the time being still remains on paper. But that is not the question now.

The question which interests us can be posed in this way: Does the demand for disarmament correspond to the revolutionary direction among the Swiss social-democrats, or not? Obviously this is not the case. Objectively speaking, the "demand" for disarmament corresponds to the opportunistic, narrowly-national, line of the labor movement, limited by the horizon of a small state. Objectively speaking, "disarmament" is the most national, the specifically national, program of the small states, and in no way an international program of international social-democracy.

—N. LENIN.

P. S. In the last issue of the English magazine, The Socialist Review (September 1916), the organ of the opportunistic "Independent Labour Party", we find on page 287 the resolution of the Newcastle Conference of this party—"Refusal of support to any conceivable war of any conceivable government", even if this war should "nominally" be a defensive war. And on page 205 we find in the editorial the following statement, "We do not approve the insurrection of the Sinn-Feiners (the insurrection Ireland in 1916). We do not approve of any armed insurrection altogether, just as we do not approve of militarism and war no matter what kind of form it may take".

Is it still necessary to prove that these "anti-militarists", that such adherents of disarmament, not in small state, but in a great power, are the worst kind of opportunists? And yet they are perfectly right in theory, when they regard the armed insurrection as being also "one of the forms" of militarism and of war.

Inflation Hits the American Working Class

When President Roosevelt was granted the power to reduce the gold content of the dollar by one half and to inflate currency the inter-relation of politics and economics was clearly seen by the stimulation this act gave to the increase of the prices of commodities. Neither of these measures have been carried out, nevertheless, a state cannot adopt such a far reaching political measure, knowing the experience of post-war Europe, without expecting immediate effects upon the economic system and upon prices.

The commodities that the workers buy have increased greatly in price and average over 30 percent in many cities. Many economists deny this and inform us that inflation amounts to only about 1 percent. One of the many tricks they use is the method of taking an average of about 300 commodities, the majority of which the workers do not even buy once a year. In this manner the capitalist spokesman try to cover up the increase in prices of the daily consumed commodities the workers use.

Again the question of currency inflation is coming to the fore. This time directly in relation to the NRA. General Johnson correctly informs the public that unless the machinery for credit is organized as fast as the codes are being signed the NRA will not function properly. This means increased credit inflation now, to be followed by currency inflation later. Within the last few weeks the Federal Reserve Board has been increasing its purchases of government bonds. This is also a form of credit inflation.

The apologetics of capitalism are systematically propagandizing the general public to the effect that there is no inflation. This is true only in the sense that the technical financial machinery of inflation has not been put into motion on a broad scale. The cost of living, however, has gone up rapidly and consistently, and this is what the worker means by inflation, because this is how inflation is expressed in his every-day life. All lies that have an element of truth, or a half truth unexplained constitute the best kind of capitalist propaganda. Such is the case with the question of inflation. When the capitalist economists inform us that there has been no inflation, meaning outright currency inflation, they are correct. But the real problem only begins where these writers leave off.

Currency inflation is only one form of inflation and not the best as experience has proven. Currency inflation will only be resorted to if the other forms and other methods applied fail to bring the desired results. Then we may be forced with the problem of actual devaluation of the dollar.

Credit inflation measures were started under the Hoover administration and have been increased since. The effects, however, were washed out by the decline in world prices. Nevertheless, the policy of the Hoover and later the Roosevelt government, through the different war relief organizations, through the R. F. C. and N. R. A., as well as the banking and currency acts, taken together all constitute measures in this direction.

The currency policy of the government is now following up its firm relief and R. F. C. policy by having the Federal Reserve increase its purchases of government securities in the open market. Since this leads to the replacing of Federal Reserve notes, backed by a minimum of 40 percent gold, by notes, backed by what is called sound collateral, this leads to a form of inflation. The general result is that since the Roosevelt government took office, there have been over a hundred million dollars of the new Federal Reserve Bank notes issued, but this has been more than counterbalanced by the heavy decrease in the old Federal Reserve notes outstanding. The further expenditure of public funds under the recovery plan will stimulate the inflation of credit, started under the Hoover administration.

On the foreign exchange markets the dollar has declined 30 percent. When Roosevelt issued his statement to the London conference instructing the American delegation not to participate in plans for currency stabilization, the policy of "controlled inflation" took another jump upward. The immediate effects of the fall of the nation's currency on the foreign exchanges usually does not effect the domestic prices to a great degree. However, in this case it did move prices upward on the home market. On the other hand, the fact that America is the world's creditor nation has a tendency to force the dollar toward par. But further measures against this tendency have been taken by the government.

Nevertheless, the government measures that is: the conferring of power to inflate currency, the going off the gold standard, the embargo on gold, the power to reduce the gold content of the dollar by 50 percent, the public works projects, the credit inflation and the fall of the dollar on the foreign exchange by 30 percent, all this has had the effect of causing prices to rise rapidly. Senator Thomas, who sponsored the Farm Adjustment Act amendment, said in behalf of his proposed inflationary measure: "If the kind of inflation we are having brings back the 1926 price level, then perhaps we may not need to resort to physical inflation of currency." Thus Senator Thomas informs us that inflation existed prior to the measures of the Roosevelt government. He is correct and today prices have been increased.

The Frazier Jelle and Company, dealing with the effects of inflation on stock market prices listing some stocks from March the third to June the nineteenth, finds that in dollars industrial stock rose 78 percent; rails 80 percent and utilities 65 percent. This is the price advance in terms of dollars. From the standpoint of the theoretical advance in terms of gold the rise in price has been: industrial 45 percent; rails 47 percent; and utilities 34 percent.

Hughes, of the Consolidated Press calculated that the advance due to inflation is between 41 and 46 percent. Inflation changes and price rise in the cost of living differ from the stock prices. The transfer of wealth from currency to commodities and stocks is the logical process of inflation plus the fear of currency inflation.

America's gigantic economic system, its creditor position, and its tremendous gold supply gives this group of imperialists a strong position despite the path of inflation in which it is now traveling. Nevertheless, even these bulwarks are no guarantees against the coming storms.

—HUGO OEHLER.

Discussion on the German Defeat

The article appearing below is a second contribution to the discussion on the problems of the German situation after the victory of Fascism. The views expressed are those of the writer.—Ed.

That the proletariat is the only revolutionary class in modern society is due to the fact that the same forces that atomize all other classes tend to consolidate the workers, making them more and more. It is the only class in society capable of revolutionary organization. But it cannot fulfill its historic mission without Socialist ideology. So long as the proletariat is not imbued with Socialist ideology it remains a class in itself. The workers cannot achieve class consciousness spontaneously or instinctively. To quote Lenin, "it can only be brought to them from without." And again, "Since there cannot even be talk of the working masses developing their own ideology independently during the course of their movement, the question is to be posed only thus: bourgeois or Socialist ideology?"

There is no third. Of course, this does not imply that the workers do not participate in the formation of Socialist ideology. But they participate not as workers but as theoreticians of Socialism, only to the extent to which they are able to master the scientific knowledge of their generation and are capable of advancing it. Lenin expressed his complete agreement with Trotsky in condemning as absolutely incorrect the opinion that "Socialist consciousness is the inevitable direct result of the proletarian class struggle." Socialism and the class struggle spring up side by side and not one from the other. They spring from different pre-requisites. Of course, Socialism as a science is rooted in the same contemporary economic relations as the class struggle of the proletariat. But Socialist consciousness can arise only on the basis of profound scientific knowledge. And the vehicle of science is not the proletariat but the bourgeois intelligentsia. "Thus, Socialist consciousness is something that is brought from the outside (von Aussen hineingetragen) into the class struggle of the proletariat, and not something elemental (urwuchsig) that springs from it."

It is by means of the party, and the party alone, that the proletariat can be organized politically and transformed into a class for itself; and it is by means of the revolutionary party that the proletariat is imbued with Socialist ideology. Thus the party opposes itself to the state. In relation to the proletariat, the class in itself, in capitalist society, the party is an objective force (von Aussen hineingetragen) and not a subjective force (urwuchsig).

The task of the party, as Lenin posed it, lies precisely in diverting the workers' movement from its elemental channels—from its urge to bourgeois ideology as a class in itself—and attracting under the wing of the party—imbuing it with Socialist ideology as a class for itself. Once a party has achieved this task, the fate of the proletariat becomes inextricably linked with the fate of the party which gains absolute control over the allegiance of the workers. This does not mean that the party having once achieved its task cannot degenerate and fail to fulfill its historic role and thus betray the proletariat. If the workers obey the party blindly, it is only because they have been blindfolded by treacherous leadership; it is only because the treachery of the leaders has not been exposed to them. To first blind the workers and then to accuse them of their blindness is to heap treachery upon treachery. The bulk of the workers in Germany have been attracted to the parties that claim to be the agencies of Socialist ideology. They have been trained to believe that the party of social democracy—originally a revolutionary party—truly continued to represent their class interests. Hence they obeyed it. The Communist party of Germany attracted another section but failed to gain over the social democratic workers because its own policies were at the core as treacherous as those of social democracy, and therefore could not counter-act or expose the perfidy of social democratic leaders. The workers attracted to the Communist party could not but obey the Stalinists. Outside of these two parties, there remained that section of the German proletariat that was still imbued with bourgeois ideology and those German workers therefore could not identify their own interests with either the socialists or the Stalinists. If they responded at all elementarily it was only to gravitate into the camp of Fascism.

The German workers who were imbued with Socialist ideology could not and would not act without their parties. Only a petty bourgeois can pretend astonishment at such "subservience or servility"; only slaves or fools could presume that the workers should have broken on the instant with their traditions of decades and have acted on "their own." The solidarity of the workers is no myth. They cohere so solidly, in fact, that nothing can prevent their being organized internationally as well as nationally—but on one condition, and one condition only, if an organization exists capable of directing them in their historic course. Alone they cannot and will not find the way. At all times and under all conditions in capitalist society a true revolutionary party is necessary. No true revolutionary party existed in Germany. There, the leadership usurped the authority of the once revolutionary parties to corrupt the ideology and decapitate the working class. Not Hitler, but the Socialists and the Stalinists paralyzed the workers. By their silence or by their spoken order, the proletariat of Germany was mobilized not to oppose Fascism until the order to act would be given. The order never came, and now Marxists are "amazed" who do not know either what the proletariat is and what it is capable of, or what the party is and what the party may degenerate into. To repeat, the proletariat of Germany was defeated by Fascism because no true revolutionary party existed in Germany. The betrayal of its party reverted the proletariat back into a condition of a class in itself. As such it was helpless in the face of Fascism. Unless this lesson is learned once for all the disaster that threatens mankind will become a reality.

Whether or not Fascism will succeed in establishing itself in the majority of industrial countries is a life and death question for all these countries. An epoch of imperialist wars will inevitably follow the Fascist victory. In every country where the proletariat remains a class in itself, Fascism must win in conflict with the proletariat.

Leaving all other considerations aside for the moment, the proletariat of no nation can fulfill its historic mission, defeat Fascism and reorganize society, unless it is imbued with its international essence. In other words, the proletariat cannot become a class for itself unless the workers in each nation can think and act in international terms. The workers cannot so act—unless a true international party obtains. Regardless of all other forms of organization, if there be no such party, the proletariat will remain politically unorganized, and either remain in or revert to the demoralized condition of a class in itself and therefore prove unable to wrest the power from the bourgeoisie no matter what its strength, no matter what the objective conjunction of events.

Fascism is the inevitable program of those who rule our destinies at present. To their program, and to the program of the Socialists as well as that of the Stalinists, i. e., the (once) Communist Party must be counterposed the revolutionary scientific program—to win the decisive majority of the working class of America, sweeping along behind the true revolutionary party the broadest masses of the population in order to overthrow the bourgeois state within the national boundaries, and to lay the foundations for the socialist state as an integral part of the permanent revolution the goal of which is the establishment of a world-wide socialist society. The necessary and only means for achieving these aims is the international revolutionary mass party based upon the platform of the Communist International of Lenin and Trotsky.

This is the lesson of the German experience.

visory boards and of arbitration will make the alliance complete. Nevertheless the promoters are not at all overlooking its usefulness also as a means of entirely outlawing working class rank and file resistance. In all of this the relations of the government to the various component parts of national economy fits and performs its function to strengthen the hands of the American bourgeoisie in the home market. The executives of advanced capitalism and of the backward labor movement, the presidents, Roosevelt and Green, jointly make their appeal to capital and labor. On a vast scale the means of keeping the working class in subjection are being reinforced.

The NRA as such, that is as far as an actual recovery in the country is concerned, is about to face its decisive test. But, judging by surface manifestations, it would appear that its most essential objects enumerated above, are well on the way to being accomplished. In this respect the NRA climaxes the reorganization of American national economy in its present stage. The offensive against Europe can soon proceed full force. American capitalism again proves itself as the most advanced of capitalism and the full effects of the latest forward steps upon its working class should soon become visible. But this question we leave until a later point in our estimate.

The United States, as we already know, is the world's principal manufacturer, its principal commodity warehouse and its principal banker. The estimated wealth of the United States reaches above the three hundred billion mark and by far outdistances that of any other nation. Its enormous annual capital accumulation since the war had to seek new fields of investments. A heavy proportion thereof was exported to other countries to be employed at a higher profit rate. It became the means of promotion of the exportation of goods and the acquisition of super profits. The total estimated amount of foreign papers held in the United States, including the items listed under foreign investment—runs into $28,000,000,000. But most characteristic of the American intervention in Europe during this period, is the fact that the loans advanced recorded a change from its first form of loans to governments for purposes of stabilization to loans to industrial enterprises. The latter are estimated at about seven to eight billion. American imperialism thus began to lay its hands on the national economy of the European powers. Its general intervention, and the objective of permitting Europe to rise again but within specifically defined limits, to assign to its nations their specific but reduced status in world economy.

In the United States the annual capital accumulation has suffered an enormous reduction during the crisis. But the masters now anticipate its rise at a vastly accelerated rhythm. And for that the NRA machinery of attempted regulation of class relations is to prepare the ground at home for more effective operations abroad. Even bearing in mind the scope of such operations in the past, we should be prepared for the fact that the campaign of American finance capital for the conquest of the world market, will actually in its real magnitude begin only tomorrow.

For this offensive the principal instrument is finance capital backed up by a now more completely organized monopoly, expressed in greater centralization and concentration of finance and industry. One of the initial means is likely to be the advancing of additional large scale loans and credits—influenced by political motives—as a means of promoting the exportation of commodities. But this, in general, will be backed up by the commands of a power of a superior national economy, and with that, heavier political and military ponderance. It is not for the purpose of creation of jobs that the United States naval constructions are now rapidly speeded up.

The crushing defeat suffered by the German working class signals a much freer rein for the American imperialist offensive. To the masters of Wall Street it signifies that the danger of a further extension of the Bolshevik revolution has been allayed. They breathe easier. Their responsibility, as the rulers of the strongest world power, for damping up against the extension of October, has become enormously lightened by the bankruptcy of the Stalinist International. They feel that they can now afford to proceed more ruthlessly and more mercilessly against their competitors in the world market. Their consciousness of power, their consequent unbridled expansion, will know no bounds. It is their much more complete world hegemony, as a means of self-preservation, which is at stake. It is the struggle for the maintenance of capitalism as the continued form of social relations. But the further advance will also lay the foundation for much more furious conflicts within the world arena. That, however, is only one side of the problem. Simultaneously with this develops the shifting of gravity of the revolutionary center from Europe to America. It is here in this country that future revolutionary struggles on a more gigantic scale than anything hitherto experienced can be expected.

OUR COMRADES CRITICIZE THE MILITANT

We have received some criticism from comrades Ainsworth and Hamilton on the article we published in the Militant of August 12, entitled "A Delegate Visits the Soviet Union". The essence of the criticism of both comrades is that this article gave emphasis to the conditions of poverty prevailing. Comrade Ainsworth, however, got the wrong impression when he thinks the article conveyed the idea that the population lives worse than hobs. That it gives one the feeling that people are dying like fleas in a frost or that party officials, in spite of their fixed maximum salary and rigid party discipline, spend their time winning and dining with foreigners in the best hotels, etc. This, of course, is a very much exaggerated impression of the article in question.

Comrade Hamilton states his criticism in regard to what would happen to a casual reader who peruses this issue and, without becoming acquainted with our general analysis, and gets a bad impression from the article in question. It is true that this article did not attempt to give an analysis. The delegate merely conveyed his direct impressions. In the full sense of the word these are penned by a supporter of the Soviet. But that in no way could release him from the obligation of describing conditions as he found them. Even though that conveys a bad picture the truth must be told. And there need be no doubt that the story was one true to actual facts.

Workers Demand Hands Off Cuba

of Morgan that their loans and the magnificent interest rates have nothing to fear from the revolutionary junta. At the same time it is a pitiable attempt on the part of these near-sighted revolutionists to stave off intervention.

But as great as is their awe of the imperialist bourgeoisie still greater is their fear of "rats" and "bloodsuckers"; that is to say, to translate these phrases into the language of the class struggle, of the proletariat, of civil war to oust the imperialists and the native bourgeoisie. Between these two giants the petty bourgeois junta is caught as in the jaws of a vise and is doomed to early extinction.

Already on the third day of its existence it has begun to retreat before the revolutionary ascent of the masses of the proletariat and even recoils before its own supporters. An Associated Press dispatch of September 7 says that the junta has "secretly resolved to disarm all civilians and began to try to restore to their former positions officers ousted Monday night and Tuesday." So cowardice breeds treachery!

That is the road which the Junta is travelling. But that is not the road of the proletariat. Slowly, move in the present overture, it is now raising its voice. Its demands are, as yet, essentially democratic and not incompatible with the existence of capitalist society.

But there are signs that the workers will not stop with demands for higher wages and better conditions. Already in the interior they have seized sugar plantations to force the owners to comply with their demands. A majority of the plantations seized are owned by American interests, who own sixty percent of the plantations in Cuba. The lives of American executives are being threatened by the workers.

Thus the struggle for better conditions and higher wages leads to the struggle against American imperialism. Anti-imperialist sentiments are deeply rooted in the proletariat and in the entire nation. Will the proletariat rise to give leadership to the anti-imperialist struggle? That is the question that the next weeks will decide.

But the workers of Cuba cannot by themselves defeat the imperialist intervention. The economy and politics of Cuba are inextricably intertwined with the economy and politics of the United States. The same capitalists oppress the worker masses of both countries. The fate of the proletariats of both countries are inseparably connected. The struggle against American imperialism is a fight against the oppressors here at home.

The workers of the United States must come to the support of their Cuban brothers. That is the first point on the agenda of the American working class today—a demonstration of the solidarity of the American proletariat with the struggles of the Cuban workers for better conditions and higher wages against the Cuban bourgeoisie and the American imperialists.

Green and Wolf, Dubinsky and Hillman will not organize the movement. They are bound to the imperialist state by their position in the labor movement and through the NRA. It is not their job to stir the masses to action and organize the movement of protest and solidarity.

The Communist movement must take the initiative in building the movement. It must approach every working class organization of whatever political shade or trade union philosophy with the proposal for a united fight against the intervention of the United States in Cuba, in solidarity with the Cuban masses.

TERZANI OUT ON BAIL

Athos Terzani, young anti-Fascist worker accused of killing his comrade, Anthony Pierro, in a fight which broke up a meeting of the Fascist Khaki shirts of America in Astoria on July 14, was released on bail Wednesday afternoon, after spending 47 days in the Queens County Jail in Long Island City. He was given a rousing reception by many friends in the office of the united-front Terzani Defense Committee at 94 Fifth Avenue.

In a public statement issued immediately after his release, Terzani said: "My case is to be handled solely by the Terzani Defense Committee and its attorneys, and all money contributed for my defense should be sent to Herbert Mahler, treasurer of the Committee."

Arthur Garfield Hays, general counsel for the American Civil Liberties Union, has agreed to act as one of the trial lawyers and it is expected that Clarence Darrow, veteran Chicago attorney, also will take part in defending Terzani.

Darrow and Hays won an acquittal for Caligero Greco and Donato Carillo, likewise anti-Fascists, charged with murder here in 1927.

Grover Whalen, one time Commissioner of Police of the City of New York and outstanding red baiter, is now trying his hands at protecting the blue eagle insignia. He surely has his hands full with many strikes in progress in the city and new strike threats popping almost daily.

Radek's Visit to Polish Dictator

The new orientation of Soviet foreign policy which is expressed in the various non-aggression pacts and in the definition of the "aggressor" clause with France and her vassals has brought about a series of "amity acts" between the Pilsudski dictatorship ("Faithful guardian of Western Civilization"—says Maitre Paul Boncour) and the Stalinist bureaucracy.

After the pacts of rapprochement signed under the high patronage of the Quai d'Orsay comes a string of visits and return-visits of representatives of so-called public opinion, receptions to military authorities, exchanges of favors and compliments, etc....

The most significant of these latter was the visit of the one-time great revolutionist Karl Radek, who in his capacity as editor of the big Soviet Daily, the Izvestia, went to Poland on the invitation of Warsaw's official organ, the Polska Gazeta and of the Polish government.

This visit, which followed the "successes" of Litvinoff, was played up by the Stalinist press (see L'Humanite) as evidence of a change of relations of forces in the international arena to the advantage of the working class and the Soviet Union.

Let us first recall the exploits of the famous renegade. Greeted by the whole reactionary press which for several weeks did not cease publishing photos of the honorable editor as well as his declarations, received by Miedziński, the confidential advisor of the butcher Pilsudski, and the director of Polska Gazeta, received by the municipal and governmental authorities; Ra-dek, the Polish Communist, the friend of Rosa Luxemburg (it was he, by the way, who represented the Polish social democracy at the Zimmerwald and Kienthal Conferences of 1915 and 1916) passed through the length and width of Poland, visited the major industrial centers and even spent a day with his mother at his native Tarnow.

He held a most remarkable speech at Gdynia, the Polish port constructed with French capital for competition with Danzig and according to Stalinist writings (which, it is true, date back a year or two), for the preparation of the anti-Soviet war!

Radek alighted his signature to the Golden Book of the town, greeted the Polish work, lauded the Polish men o'war and remarked philosophically that the "seus unity"? As can be seen, his language was very correct and the Pilsudski censorship did not have any cause to intervene.

Nor did the Polish Stalinist party cause the flirt and his flirtation any discomfort. It did not organize any demonstrations to greet the representative of the proletariat. He had already been greeted by the government....

The Stalinists, who in their press did not breathe a word about the declarations of Radek which were published by the whole bourgeois press (they distinguished themselves merely by a campaign against the voyage of the "comelier-revolutionary" Trotsky) and who want to hide his declarations from the eyes of the international proletariat—especially from the eyes of the Polish workers—will probably tell us that all this does not count for much. That is a matter of diplomacy and Communists, members of the party, who have other things to do and are not diplomats, cannot bother with diplomacy. Soviet diplomacy is one thing and the proletarian struggle is another thing, and "the Trotskyists for the purposes of their counter-revolutionary work, want to mix up the two".

Diplomacy? Yes, we realize the need of it as long as the Soviet state is surrounded by a host of bourgeois states with whom it is forced to maintain relations. But proletarian diplomacy should take into account the opinion of the international proletariat and its fundamental interests. In order to please the bourgeois diplomats and to conciliate with them it is not at all correct to compromise the authority of the proletarian state in the eyes of the international proletariat.

Let anyone show us an example of similar declarations in the time when Lenin was alive! Lenin also understood the necessity of diplomacy and even of concessions to be made to it. But you will find no such example. The Stalinists simply don't worry much over the opinion of the international proletariat. They think they can always placate it with a few radical phrases. What counts for everything with them is good relations with the capitalist states who will permit them to build "socialism in one country".

But even Radek's exploits were far surpassed by another Soviet diplomat, another Polish Communist also: Hlanccki. Hlanccki, as representative of the Soviet government, that is to say, of Stalin, in the course of an official audience transmitted to Pilsudski the documents of the Soviet police concerning his once revolutionary past in the struggle for the independence of Poland!

When Benito Mussolini sends his Polish initiator his photo or when the infallible Pope Pius XI sends a cross to Pilsudski in appreciation of services rendered to civilization—that is quite natural. But when the representative of the Soviets thus renders homage to the butcher of the Polish people, that is something that is likely to appear strange to honest Communists, even those who believe in the general line! That this act was carried out by a man with such a grand revolutionary past as Hlanccki's, that is bound to be painful for some, but it only aggravates the odious character of the whole thing. It must also be underscored that such an act is in no way necessitated by any economic and political need.

Before the worker and peasant masses of Poland, fighting against the bloody dictatorship, this act signifies nothing less than the rehabilitation of Pilsudski by the Stalinist bureaucracy as an old revolutionary and a present friend of the Soviet Union.

The actions following close on the heels of the German capitulation show how great a part of the road to degeneration the bureaucracy of Stalin has already left behind it. They only counteract the heroic struggle of the Polish workers and peasants and reinforce the class enemy.

The ideas for which Radek and Hlanccki once fought will have to be and will be defended by the Polish Marxists against Stalinist revisionism.

Stalinists and Saar Referendum

of autonomy—which is absolutely correct—a slogan that will not fail to have an effect on broad sections of the petty bourgeoisie, as well as on the workers.

And the Communists? The Stalinist leadership of the Comintern has issued the slogan "back to Germany"! The argumentation for this outrageous position of the C. P. of the Saar are as follows:

First of all, by 1935 Hitler will long ago have been thrown out of the government (!). In all probability there will by that time be a Soviet Germany (!). But even if Germany should still be Fascist, then there is all the more reason for the workers to return to the Reich in order to strengthen the revolutionary work for the downfall of Fascism. Sentiments of separatism should not be aroused in the workers and in the middle layers of the population sympathetic to them.

This argumentation was presented to the present writer by an authoritative political leader of the C. P. of the Saar as authentic. That this is actually so may be gathered from the party press. Only a few weeks ago, at the beginning of August, L'Humanite (the organ of the French Stalinists) carried an article representing the same point of view.

The whole motivation is of course un-Marxist, hypocritical and ridiculous. The truth is that under no circumstances do these gentlemen want to be less nationalistic than the Nazis, regardless of the price they will have to pay. There may be people who believe that by 1935 Fascism will be replaced by the proletarian dictatorship. The incapable bureaucracy nurtures this belief, which helps it to substitute for lack of perspective with an unduly great optimism. By doing so it is following in the footsteps of the Comintern, whose German representative, the frightfully lamentable Hecker, broadcasts insults on the Moscow radio against all those "capitalists" and "defeatists" who do not believe in the Red October of 1933. The representatives of the C. P. G. have always been Marxists of that type which never hit upon the thought that a revolution is the concern of the class, but rather waited for someone else to start things rolling. On that famous July 20 it was to be the S. P. G. and today—the dissatisfied proletariat of the S. A. (the Brown Shirt Storm Troops). These "leaders" did not want to realize that their party was the one whose task it was to lead the masses to struggle. That idea was reserved only for leading editorials in the Kote Fahne, in practice they merely had their hands full searching for "deviations".

The hope for a swift fall of Fascism betrays a complete lack of the class point of view. That is all. But the suggestion that the Saar workers voluntarily turn themselves over to the Fascist prisons—that is nothing short of criminal.

Every single day workers are murdered, shot, beheaded and hanged, tortured by the tens of thousands and imprisoned under inhuman conditions in Germany. Every distributor of a leaflet is threatened with death. Fascist Germany is one big prison, a ghastly torture chamber for the revolutionary proletariat. And it is into this frightful dungeon that people who still call themselves Communists (what a shame!) want to deliver the workers of the Saar. A party on whose flag the idea of internationalism should occupy the foremost place, which still today speaks in the name of Lenin, Lloeknecht and Luxemburg has sunk so low that in order to gain the praise of the bourgeoisie for its staunch national character, it is ready to send a whole section of a working class right through hell. Such a party rightfully belongs on the garbage heap of history.

The slogan for the Saar workers can only call for autonomy. It is of no consequence to the working class if the bourgeoisie calls this separatism. Its interests are decided by nothing else but the actual facts. It must defend its life and its property in the Saar from murderers and thieves. That is the task facing it.

At the time of the last elections in the Saar (July 1933), when the Communists were praised by the Voelkischer Beobachter and the Angriff for their position in the question of the referendum, that should have opened the eyes of the last worker and decided him, in the interests of his class, not to vote for the signposts of the C. P. It is never good to be praised by the class enemy.

The Left Opposition must take up the struggle with all the necessary energy and clarity against the criminal policy of the C. P. in the Saar. The L. O. bears a heavy responsibility before history as the consistent Marxist leadership of the new German workers' party. We must aid the Saar workers with all our might, before it is too late, before they are delivered into a sea of blood and tears by characterless degenerates.

The German Communist Trial

If this will not perceptibly influence the rate of the accused, it will at least, help to make the nature of the frame-up clear to the world.

Among class conscious workers there need be no doubt that this trial is the culmination of an outright frame-up. Much substantiated evidence is already at hand. Most outstanding is the secret memorandum worked out by the German Nationalist, Oberföhrer. It gives a detailed description of the various links in the chain of events. First it describes the entering of the brown shirted incendiaries through the subterranean passage which leads from the residence of the Reichstag President, Goering, to the Reichstag building and which is the only secret avenue of entry to the building. The incendiaries, having done their job, returned to the Goering residence leaving behind them the dupe, Van der Lubbe, who, astounding as it may seem, went to work at the firing with his Dutch passport and a Communist party membership book in his pocket! The clumsy forgery made by the Nazis in supplying him with a passport is already well known to the world. It was made in Germany with his name spelled with a letter that does not exist in the Dutch alphabet. Since then it has also been proved that for the last couple of years he has not been a member of any Communist party, but a member of the Nazi party.

Oberföhrer was one of the German nationalists who had opposed the coalition with the Fascists. His secret memorandum coming to the attention of the Nazi led to raids upon his home and confiscation of all material in sight. On May 7 he was found dead at his home in Kiel, a revolver with an empty magazine at his side—"a suicide!"

A month later another dangerous witness, the engineer George Bell, who was simultaneously an accomplice, had been put out of the way under still more dramatic circumstances. George Bell had been in charge of the Nazi, illegal, foreign division. He first came to international notice in connection with the Chervonetz forgery trial in Berlin, in 1930. (The notorious Druslovsky central in Berlin, produced in 1924, the forged letter, in 1925, the forged documents about the blowing up of the Sofia cathedral, and wound up by establishing a factory for the forging of Chervonetz which was exposed in the 1930 trial. During the forgery trial George Bell was exposed as an agent of the British oil king, Deterding, within the Reichstag building on Feb. 27 and was the first to bring information to British reporters about the fire. But he became a dangerous accomplice. So, when German soil became too hot under his feet, he fled to Kufstein, Austria where he was murdered by a pursuing Nazi gang on April 5.

All the details of this provocative frame-up are not yet uncovered. But there need not be the slightest doubt that the whole chain of events will be laid bare and expose the provocation for what it is. Meanwhile the lives of the accused Communists are in danger. The Nazi terror still demands its toll. It can be defeated only by an effective mass protest of the downtrodden and all the enemies of Fascism. The working class of the world must not lose one minute in letting its powerful protest be heard.

The Trade Union Question

The Left Wing Needs a New Policy and a New Leadership

The American workers, stirring again on the trade union field after a long passivity and confronting a formidable and well organized class enemy, need their own plan of battle. The class enemy has organization and a plan. That, in essence, is what the N.R.A. really is. In the united and comprehensive program of American imperialism against the world the N.R.A. is that section of the program aimed against the enemy at home, the American working class. The strike movement of the workers, on the other hand, has been elemental and spontaneous, lacking a conscious direction.

Who will assist the workers to formulate their own battle plan in their own interests? Certainly not the present leaders of the A. F. of L. and kindred labor organizations. These in reality belong to the capitalist board of strategy. In the machinery of the N.R.A. they are filling of protection their long established role of labor lieutenants of the capitalist class. A plan and program for the workers in the trade unions, by means of which their struggle could be organized and directed on a national scale, can come only from the Left wing, that is, from the class conscious section of the movement.

But in the present situation which has witnessed the beginning of a colossal wave of strike struggles, the Left wing failed completely in its function. The new events which should have been foreseen and anticipated found it unprepared and impotent. The domination of Stalinism deprived the Left wing of the possibility of influencing the new movement of the masses and of drawing new life and strength from it. The dogmatic program which had been imposed upon it was rotten in life. The leadership of bureaucratic usurpers showed itself to be bankrupt and helpless. The necessary conclusions from these happenings must be drawn without delay. The problem of re-establishing the Left wing, correcting its program and renovating its leadership is the most immediate and burning problem of the labor movement.

There is a new situation in the labor movement which the Left wing must take as the point of departure. The wave of strike struggles did not fall from the skies, nor were Roosevelt and the labor fakers the creators of it. The fearful sufferings inflicted on the masses during three and one-half crisis years; the starvation rations of the unemployed, the multiplied wage cuts and unprecedented speedup which goaded the employed workers to desperation—these were the real authors of the present strike movement. The workers' resentment and dissatisfaction was due for an explosion and it was reasonable to assume that it would coincide with the first signs of an economic upturn.

This was foreseen by the most perspicacious representatives of capitalism. The N.R.A. was devised as a means of coordinating the efforts of the employers and their labor lieutenants with the Government in a single scheme to arrest this movement in its first stages and to keep it within safe bounds. It is possible that the inauguration of the N.R.A. precipitated the strike movement. But at bottom it was caused by the discontent of the workers with their unbearable conditions and their aspirations to improve them at the first opportunity.

These causes will remain and will evoke increasing powerful movements of the masses after the battle of the Roosevelt program has spent itself, leaving conditions substantially unchanged except insofar as they are improved by organized struggle. Bitter experience will work rapidly and mightily to free the workers from their present illusions about the purposes of the N.R.A. The capitalists will not voluntarily improve the lot of the slaves under the beneficent influence of the Blue Eagle. The workers will gain nothing they do not fight for. The labor agents of imperialism will not become leaders and organizers of militant struggles, but on the contrary will do all they can, now and in the future as in the past, to sabotage and defeat them.

The Left wing cannot depart for a moment from these self-evident A. B. C. propositions. What has been happening in the way of working class activity in the recent months is only an anticipation of things to come. It is possible of course, and even probable, that the N.R.A. swindle will succeed in harnessing the new movement for a time. The illusions of the masses are very great. But the higher the hopes the more certain the disappointment and the expression of this disappointment in more resolute and determined class action. The first magnificent upsurge of the workers is, after all, only a tentative beginning, a preliminary testing of their collective strength and solidarity. It is implicit with the certainty of another movement, deeper, wider and more militant.

The Left wing must base itself on this perspective and be ready for it. That means to begin now to reform its ranks and begin to assert its influence in the mass movement. Can this be done on the basis of the trade union policy of Stalinism? No, that is absolutely impossible. Those who try it will be deprived of all influence. On this question the decision has already been rendered by the actual developments in the labor movement.

The trade union Left wing which eventually rises to the magnitude of the new tasks, coordinates the militant forces on a national scale and organizes the real struggle against the capitalists and the labor fakers will consist of those who make a complete break with the bankrupt and discredited trade union policy of Stalinism. The tactical line which the Left wing must take is clearly marked out by the actual course of the movement, and no arbitrary scheme which contradicts this course is worth a cent. The Left wing must put itself in line with the main trend of the workers, assist and encourage their impulse for organization and become itself a force to bring the workers into the unions—into the real unions, not the paper unions. And the Left wing must go with them and organize the fight inside the unions against the capitalist agents in the ranks.

The Left wing—which is, the real Left wing—remains true to principle and to the interests of the workers—and to the masses unions and urge other workers to do likewise without any illusions about the reactionary leaders and without the least A. F. of L. fetishism. Communists do not make a fetish of any trade union organization form. In the future, as in the past, a rise of militancy in the unions will be apt to bring wholesale expulsions and splits. It is quite likely that many of the greatest battles will have to be waged independently, as "outlaw" organizations. The resurgent Left wing—again, the real Left wing, not sycophants and traitors masquerading as such—will remain with the masses under such conditions and not flinch from the formation of independent mass organizations. That, however, is a prospect of the future than a present problem. We will keep it in mind and let no labor fakers' cry

Program and Perspectives for the Cuban Proletariat

The revolutionary events in Cuba have reached a decisive stage. The activity of the masses of workers, industrial and agricultural, has forced its way to the forefront of the struggle. The organization of their forces to fight for their demands and to mobilize the masses to resist U. S. intervention now requires the setting up of their own organs of struggle. The formation of Soviets for the defense of Cuba's freedom is the imperative need of the day.

American intervention already exists, even though no shots have as yet been fired from the thirty warships concentrated in Cuban waters. By its economic might, supplemented by this fleet, American imperialism is exerting a powerful pressure. In face of these conditions it is inconceivable that the cowardly San Martin government can exist very long on its present makeshift basis. It represents the petty bourgeois interests and is incapable of realizing the aims of the people who hate foreign imperialism, to say nothing of the aims of the proletariat. It is oscillating under pressure from two directions—from the masses surging forward, and from the United States. Its alternatives are complete collapse or capitulation to Wall Street. It cannot be conceived of as the leader of the fight to the end against imperialist intervention.

Cuba is now the most vulnerable point in the struggle of the United States for complete hegemony of the Latin American market. Only the fear of serious repercussions in the South, which would also give an advantage to other imperialist competitors, explains the fact that the United States intervention has not yet taken the open form of troop landings and armed attack. But let no one be deceived by the diplomatic maneuvers. The Wall Street magnates will readily stake the life of every American marine to maintain their more than a billion dollars worth of property in Cuba and continue their fruitful exploitation of the Cuban toilers.

Is there any possibility for the Cuban masses to make an end to this scourge under the leadership of the present makeshift government? Obviously not. The Cuban workers themselves, in fraternization with the soldiers, have already indicated the road to be pursued. They have formed Joint Committees, (Comites Conjuntos) which are nothing less than a spontaneous striving to build up their Soviets. The present make-shift government, far more afraid of the Cuban masses than of American imperialism is even trying to sidetrack the calling of the Constituent Assembly. The workers must demand its convocation and raise their demands there. The abrogation of the Platt amendment and the unconditional independence of Cuba and the nationalization of the industrial enterprises' control stand in forefront of the demands. Most of these enterprises are owned by American imperialists and the advancing of these demands will serve to make clearer the distinction of their interests from those of the Cuban people and to develop the irreconcilability of the

New forces are coming forward to the support of the International Left Opposition. Three important European revolutionary groups adhered to our views contained in a declaration submitted to the conference of Left Socialist parties recently held in Paris.

The Revolutionary Socialist Party of Holland, led by the well known militant, Sneevliet, whose record dates back many years in the Communist and revolutionary movement and who recently served time in connection with the mutinies in the Dutch navy, has already definitely

N.Y. Embroidery Workers Gain

New York, N. Y.—Following immediately on the heels of the great dress strike, 3,000 workers of the Bonnaz Embroidery stitchers and pleaters Union of the I.L.G.W.U., Local 66 walked out on general strike in responding one hundred percent to the call of the union.

This tremendous response to the strike call, coupled with all the power and militancy displayed by the strikers, from the very first moment brought the bosses astounded to its knees almost immediately, and made possible a settlement of the strike in only a few days.

The union also pulled out on strike certain sections of the industry which were never organized before, such as the stamperers, pinners, finishers, spoolers and pleating machine feeders. It gained for them a small increase in salary and reduced their working hours from 48 and 62 hours to 35 hours per week. By taking these workers into its ranks the union has to an extent cut aside the ideas of craft unionism to which it has clung tenaciously in the past period. But the union must stop all practice of entering into close alliances with the bosses who wisely were determined to keep these workers from organizing and acting effectively through their unions. The other crafts although not getting any increase in wages also had their hours reduced from 42 to 35 hours per week.

The first reaction of the workers to the agreement reached was definitely against it because it failed to increase the pay. The Lovestoneite representative on the strike committee displayed the usual brand of Lovestone opportunism by speaking against the agreement at the general meeting of the strikers and voting for the same agreement in the small strike committee meeting.

The agreement although now the best that could be reached nevertheless carried when voting on by secret ballot, the vote being 1608 for and 396 against. Summed up in total however the strike can only be interpreted as a victory for the strikers.

It is imperative for the workers in Local 66 to create a strong Left wing group for we do not believe that the A. F. of L. is capable and ready to organize the masses of workers into unions that will be militant fighting organizations of the workers. The masses now following it will be due shortly for a series of disillusionments and will probably and eventually break away from the present lead of A. F. of L. and look to others who will help them build strong fighting militant unions. In order to influence and lead such a movement the Left wing Communist workers must be there to follow the movement closely and guide it at every step. We must begin to sow our seeds of influence immediately in this fertile ground and we will soon be ready to reap a rich harvest. Workers of Local 66, organize into a strong Left wing group! That is the only path you can pursue in order to strengthen your position and win better conditions.

Paterson Strike Ties Up Silk and Dye Industries

The Militant Workers Recognize Fallacy of the Stalinist Paper Unions

PATERSON, N. J.

The strongest sector of the nation-wide strike of silk workers, its Paterson division of more than 23,000 men holds firm. The tie-up in this city has closed every shop, the looms are idle and the workers have responded 100 percent solid to the strike call.

Striking against the intolerable conditions forced upon them by the vicious wage-slashing of the four years of the crisis the producers of silk are determined to take no promises from the N.R.A. and by struggle to jack up their wages from the miserable $13 average to a $36 minimum, to bring down the hours from the slave working day of 11 and 12 hours prior to the strike to a 30 hour week.

Paterson is in the grip of the strike. Men and women, of all nationalities, young and old, those who have never known the meaning of union organizations and veterans of class struggle, are banding side by side on the picket lines, in huge, enthusiastic strike meetings displaying a spirit of militancy equalled only by the heroic battle of 1913.

The great virility of this struggle is vividly demonstrated by the pouring out of the mills of more than 15,000 dye workers who for the first time in 20 years have taken their stand on the picket line ready to see the fight to the end. Bursting the shackles of long oppression and exploitation they are braving the police clubs, and tear gas, flocking into the union halls—a test-lament to the great power that lies latent in the unmobilized mass of workers in this country.

Meanwhile in Washington, negotiations are in progress between the union officials, the manufacturers, and the false friends of labor of the Roosevelt administration. A code for the silk workers is also under consideration. But the workers are watchful. They will not be tricked into any fake agreement, they will not be content with any conditions merely because it bears the insignia of the N.R.A. Already they have turned down a code that perpetuated the wretched conditions that have plagued the silk trade for years.

The real leader of the strike in Paterson is the Associated Silk Workers, an autonomous local of the United Textile Workers which is affiliated to the A. F. of L.

The decisive section of this industry, the 10,000 broad silk workers, are striking under the aegis of the Associated. It is marvelous to see the spirit of these workers. They are not newcomers to the picket line. This is by no means the first strike they have participated in. On the contrary, they have written a tradition in letters of red in the history of American labor. The workers in this union are wary of the betrayers of the American Federation of Labor. Years of sell-outs have brought this lesson home to them. The name of MacMahon, the president of the U. T. W. is anathema to the members of the Associated Silk Workers.

The rank and file of the Associated have thrown new leaders to the fore. The strike committee is controlled by genuine progressives—Left wingers who have been repelled by the horrible mismanagement, the crimes and the fearful bureaucracy of the Stalinists.

But for the dye workers, the ranks of the strikers are united. Here the forces are divided between the Associated and the Stalinist-controlled National Textile Workers Union.

The dye workers are green to the struggle. They came by accident to the paper union of the Stalinists. They were ready to accept any union that reached them first. But it is the universal opinion in Paterson among the more mature workers in the industry that the N. T. W. will be unable to hold the dyes permanently. There is more than one fact that can be produced in proof of this.

The criminal (after listening to the stories of good, reliable fighters one is tempted to say, insane) policy of the Stalinists and their paper N. T. W. has driven many of the best militants into the Associated, made them bitter against the N. T. W. Prior to the strike, the N. T. W. had practically no influence among the weavers, and the weavers, the more conscious group in the silk industry, passed them by when the strike started and made common cause with the Associated. So discredited, impotent and unattractive was the N. T. W. at the outbreak of the strike that this is common knowledge in Paterson—the N. T. W. tried frantically to postpone the date of the strike in order to make "preparations". Further, so great was the stigma of rotten internal life in the N. T. W. and its adventurist tactics, that Stalinists themselves were instrumental in forming a craft union of the warpers, independent of their paper union! One more fact. A member of the N. T. W. organized 3,000 workers—throwers—hitters unorganized and brought them not in to the N. T. W., but into the Associated. Can there be any doubt now whether the Stalinist outfit will hold the dyes?

The advanced, experienced workers in Paterson will have nothing to do with the N. T. W. The inexperienced dyes will not be long in finding out the justice of their decision.

In Paterson as elsewhere the workers are streaming into the real unions. They are paying no attention to the paper outfits run by the Stalinists. There is no place for the Left wingers in Paterson but in the Associated which they can transform into a powerful weapon for the militants nationally—a starting wedge in the struggle against the bosses and the reactionaries.

Swaback to Start National Tour

The long awaited tour of comrade Swaback will begin on September 29th. With the rich experience of the five months which he recently spent in Europe, which included attendance at the pre-conference of the Left Opposition and a protracted visit with comrade Trotsky in Prinkipo, comrade Swaback will have a message of exceptional interest. Branches will have the option of a lecture on: "The Future of International Communism"; or the "Roosevelt Program: What It Means for the Workers".

The larger branches which will retain comrade Swaback for several days and in some cases have both lectures as well as small meetings with branch members and sympathizers. Comrade Swaback's lecture tour is the opening gun of the great new campaign of the Communist League which is designed to lift all of our activity to a higher plane on a new basis. All the League branches will undoubtedly concentrate their full attention on the preparation and promotion of these meetings and utilize them for the strengthening of our movement.

The following is the schedule of cities:

MINE PICKETS SHOT IN PENN.

Fifteen miners picketing the Gates mine in Uniontown, Pa., were severely wounded when armed deputies opened fire on them. A deputy who got into the way of one of the deputy bullets also was wounded. The conditions of the miners in this bituminous region are scandalous. Not even the "blessings" of the N.R.A. with which the miners are being hooked up by the U.M.W.A. officials, has been granted them. The glided lily of Pennsylvania, Governor Pinchot, has of course promised the usual investigation. A more detailed article will appear in next week's

LEAGUE ACTIVITIES

L.O. Issues Stir Party Membership

The situation in Brownsville, New York City, after several months of a campaign against "Trotskyism," is tense. The apathy and lethargy among the league and party is being ascribed by some to the fact that they are beginning to think for themselves. The arrest because crystallized lately; when due to the looseness among the rank and file and the impotence of the leadership, not a single meeting let alone a demonstration was held on International Youth Day. This despite the empty mouthing of the skaters, Gilberts and Shermans, about the necessity of youth carrying on a struggle against war, fascism, etc., etc. It is demanded. The repercussions of this affair has penetrated to the district. The bureaucrats there are asking for an accounting, particularly because of the disquieting rumors of "Trotskyism."

Sherman, the section organizer of the Y. C. L., is slated to be removed. His place will probably be filled by either Al Dasch, who earned his spurs slugging oppositionists, or John Morris, who proved his organizational ability by expelling sympathizers of the Left Opposition from the American Youth Club, when he was organizer of that club.

It was at this opportune time that comrade Shachtman appeared in Brownsville to speak on the future of the Socialist and Communist movements. The impression that his criticism of the bureaucrats, who are strangling the movement, made upon the party and league, can best be gleaned from what happened at the Bob Minor Election rally two nights later at the Brownsville Youth (?) Center.

The gigantic and monstrous (so advertised) rally attracted about 200 workers. The drive of his remarks which dealt with misery, starvation and hunger, were so dry, that an atmosphere of listlessness permeated the hall. It was so bad that the singing choruses of the club and a group of league members had to be rounded up in order to inject some life into the "rally." With the appearance of these boosters Minor was in his element. Thereafter every remark no matter how trivial was greeted with applause. At the end of the Minor eulogistic oration, the chairman called for questions, while the customary heartrending appeal for a collection was being made.

Despite the absence of a single member of the Opposition or even a close sympathizer (excepting the writer of course) every question handed in was on "Trotskyism" and on the very points that comrade Shachtman had raised at the meeting where he spoke. The election "rally" had so suddenly turned into a discussion on "Trotskyism" that Minor was left dumbfounded. Taking the floor again he pathetically appealed for questions from the audience.

After a violent and vituperative harangue in which Trotsky was referred to as an organizer of paid police bands and the head of the worst sort of scabbing scam in the working-class movement, (here several matured workers who evidently remember the part played by Trotsky in the Red October walked out) he made the following answers to the questions:

1. "What is the circulation of the Role of the Party?" (this question evidently prompted because of Shachtman's remarks about the increase from 60,000 before Hitler took power, to the imaginary sale of 300,000 after the Fascist victory.) Answer—"I don't know." This from a Central Committee member and former editor of the Daily Worker.

2. "How did Stalin come to power?" Answer: Not Stalin but the working class came to power. All those who dare to raise this question are but miserable agents of the bourgeoisie.

3. "Why was Trotsky and the Left Opposition expelled?" Answer: Because they disagreed with the workers (!) of the Soviet Union. Don't we expel scabs from the unions, fellow workers? Deep silence on the part of the workers was the answer to this.

4. "Why does the leadership of the C. P. retain its leadership after this group of self-avowed incompetents admitted FULL RESPONSIBILITY for the weakness of the Communist Movement?" Answer: A long lynch incitation against the Trotskyites, followed by: "Only provocateurs and Trotskyite police (!) hands would raise this demand. (Think about inner party democracy.)"

5. "Did Lenin ever say Socialism can be built in one country?" Answer: Stalin-Lenin's co-worker is proving (!!) it. SOCIALISM IS BUILT (!!!).

6. "Why did the German C. P. fail to lead the workers in a struggle against Hitler?" Answer: They did lead (!) that's why comrade Shachtman is in jail. (and Hitler in power and Heckert in Paris.)

7. "Why weren't the tactics of the October Revolution used in Germany?" Answer: "The same tactics were used (!) and the working class to day (!!) stands on the threshold of a Soviet Germany (!!!)."

But the baseless slanders and pompous boasts will not avail. The league and party members are beginning to think and investigate. The truth of the platform of the Left Opposition is sifting through everywhere. And before long an accounting with the bureaucrats will be made. The triumph of the Left Opposition is assured. —LEAGUE MEMBER.

League Growing in Youngstown

Several months activity in the unemployed workers movement is yielding good results for the Youngstown branch. Not only is there a marked increase in our influence and prestige among the organized workers, but along with this we have gained in membership and supporting sympathizers. The demand of the workers for the Militant is increasing steadily and the support of our sympathizers has enabled us to furnish subs to twelve unemployed workers this week. Besides this we distribute twenty-five copies of the Militant each week among party members, the YPSL group, and a few rank-and-file members of A. F. of L. unions.

We have among those who choose to follow our program in preference to that of the Stalinists, the Musketiers or the Social Reformists, several who are active in the local unemployed workers movement and a few who are active members of mass A. F. of L. unions. Our attempt to fraternize and discuss with the YPSL members succeeded after many months of sincere, comradely approach to them. In their ranks is a goodly share of half-heartedness and confusion; but there is also a small number of serious youth who are honestly searching for a class solution to the evils of capitalism. With these elements we shall always find it easy to collaborate, and we hope that from among them will come more than one who will eventually accept Lenin's program of revolutionary Socialism.

The new perspective spurs us on! —N.

Labor Partyites Convene

Chicago, Ill.—The significance of the gathering held at Chicago on September 23 and calling itself the United Conference for Progressive Political Action was not very great. Its representation was such that nothing much can be expected of it in the way of harm and certainly not in the way of any good as far as the American labor movement is concerned. The old intellectual stand-bys who have been yearning for a Labor party to furnish them with an opportunity to play some political role in the movement were there. A few old and young enthusiasts from small groups of the League for Independent Political Action and a non-descript group of old men and women made up the majority of the hundred and fifty or so delegates to the conference.

Farmer Answers Judge There were several representatives of real organizations of farmers. The outstanding representative from the farm regions was a Judge from Iowa, John F. Wirts, President of the United Farmers of America. The incident that occurred at Le Mar, Iowa, where a group of about a hundred farmers gave one of Wirts' colleagues on the Iowa bench the scare of his life was to him, a result of the machinations of a few insane radicals. The only real farmer in the conference answered the Judge simply and effectively when he said that immediately after the demonstration at Le Mar the state and federal authorities began to do something for the farmers.

Two delegates represented bona fide organizations of unemployed workers. Their confusion was great. Nevertheless whenever they spoke the atmosphere became a little fresher. Obviously they were "Musketiers" and all the lack of clarity and all the hesitation so characteristic of that group was recognizable. A red tinge to the conference was furnished by Ben Gitlow who was quite careful not to protrude his Communism and run the chance of antagonizing the conservative delegates.

Warn Against Revolution

Wery one to judge from the first few speeches made at the conference the conclusion would be almost inevitable that the delegates were meeting for the purpose of preventing a revolution in the United States. The more conservative element at the conference, led by Mahony, mayor of St. Paul and Judge Wirts, had the floor for most of the first session. They testified to the ferment existing amongst the city workers and farmers, especially the latter, and warned the delegates that unless a Farmer-Labor party is organized a violent revolution would result. It would be unfair to the other delegates to state that the conference met for that purpose.

There were many sincere elements anxious to further the interests of the workers and farmers. These honest elements actually believe that a Labor party is the instrument by which the American workers and farmers will ultimately free themselves from the yoke of capitalism. They will live, to see the day when the Labor party will be the instrument of saving capitalism and not of destroying it.

Postpone Organization

It was recognized by the delegates that to proceed to form a Labor party at the conference would be the height of absurdity. It would

The first fruits of the "Open Letter to all Party Members" have already ripened and are ready to be plucked (if you care for that kind of fruit). At least on the journalistic field. "The circulation of the Daily Worker has fallen off," the Open Letter of July 13 announced proudly among the achievements of the Central Committee. Having failed to reach the masses in their struggles, in their unions, in their class movements, the Daily Worker has now undertaken a broad flank attack which bespeaks an evitable military-journalistic talent. If the masses are not to be corralled in the field of struggle Edward Newhouse will catch them in the tennis courts or on the golf course. If they succeed in evading Newhouse, they find their nudgy challenged, each morning when they rise to dress, by the fascinating party frock terms of Anne Adams. If they rush desperately to the dining room, Hathaway (surely it is he who prepares those tempting daily menus!) is there to tantalize them with some Cheese Fondue (don't forget to add 1 bit of soda as big as a pea), or Consume Printanier or Lobster a la Newburg (prepared at Camp Nitgedaiget). And after an attack of acute indigestion induced by Browder's latest article, they are turned over to the mercies of Dr. Paul Luttinger (M. D.—$1.65 per visit, and a bargain!).

The layout can't fail. They catch you coming and going: from the breakfast table to the kitchen, and if anyone gets away, he has only himself to blame, for the Daily Worker has done the best it knows how. Take Anne Adams, for example, the Butterplate Queen of Lanterns (but to be confused with Diamond Lil), and the editorial concave (unfortunately anonymous) who guides her through the columns of the Daily. On August 24, we are recommended pattern 1539 (Size 36 takes 4 yards of 39 inch fabric to say nothing of the 3-8 yard contraption), all for 15 cents (coins preferred). To make this adorable costume, "pure dye silks are the most satisfactory" although, Anne tips you off, "a well-dyed wool would look good too." Pure opportunism! Why not make it up out of imported chiffon velvet, or cloth of gold trimmed with ermine? We pass the suggestion on to the Worker editor. Or what's the matter with polka dotted satin which, Bettina Bodwell of the Daily News cables, is being "used for sports clothes at Cannes and Monte Carlo"?

Then those menus. More care should really be taken in getting those up. Wheatons for breakfast is all right once in a while, but there is nothing like braised kidneys well done, with Duchesse potatoes. Nor have we yet seen a reference to how to prepare Shepherd's Pie a la Nollenhustein. Anybody even a Daily Worker reader, who has had to stand the slops of the relief kitchens wouldn't hesitate a minute—we'll wager—between Hathaway's potted shoulder and our squabs en casserole with noodles in a Neapolitan on the side (bake in a moderately slow oven about 20 minutes or until crumbs are well browned). And what about cakes? Are they orphans? Can a really good meal be eaten without them? We call Hathaway's attention to the possibilities of Chocolate Marshmallow Roll with Baltimore Filling and Caramel Frosting. Just delicious!

Or Newhouse on sports. Not bad, only he doesn't go far enough. Even stuff sometimes, but not deep enough. Take August 16: "Tennis is the one major sport registering progressive tendencies. Two years ago Helen Willis Moody blazed the trail by appearing without stockings at Forest Hills and last season Bunny Austin stalked out his plover's chin by wearing shorts on court. Although the Deliberating Body of the West Side Tennis Club deliberated mildly against the principle of shorts, mass pressure by lady players with presentable stems caused a reversal of decision." Granted the mass pressure. But where was the party? Where was the Central Committee? Did it do anything to raise this movement to a higher, political level? If it did, Newhouse certainly fails to mention it. It's little slips like this that keep the Sports Column out of time with the rest of the paper. Bear in mind what comrade Browder once wrote: "A Bolshevik paper should be a Bolshevik paper." (Collected Works, Vol. 1N, page 318.) That's just as true today as when it was written.

Finally, good old Doc Luttinger. We don't want to appear to be ference called for the purpose of dealing with working class problems.

Issues Unclear

Unfortunately no one made the issue clear to the delegates. What was necessary was someone to explain that the reactionaries are taking advantage of the party leadership to set a precedent. It was necessary to point out the difference between the official party and the expelled groups and to insist that in spite of the disruptive tactics of Communist party leadership the party represents an important section of the American workers and should not only be permitted to join but invited to do so. Gitlow was very weak. Weisbord was not effective. The non-Communists made a good fight in their own reformist way but could not overcome the fear of and the hostility to the official party.

Sentiment on the National Recovery Act was divided. The more conservative delegates saw good in it and wanted to give President Roosevelt a chance. Why those delegates who have hope in the N. R. A. should at this time be interested in a Labor party is somewhat of a mystery. Probably they figure that a Labor party should be organized for the purpose of helping Roosevelt put the N. R. A. over. To cut the discussion short the matter was referred to the incoming national committee.

Truax representing the Unemployed Leagues of Ohio, in the closing session and during the discussion on the N. R. A. pathetically asked: "If you go on record in favor of the N. R. A. how can I go back to face the unemployed who are starving? And what shall I tell them that you accomplished in the two days of your conference?"

Poor Truax! He has yet to learn that out of a conference of about a hundred and fifty delegates there are only two real workers and two real farmers nothing much should be expected. —A. V.

carping critics, but science is science, and it ought to be exact. Take his advice to "Gertrude" on August 24: "Six dry prunes have often a laxative effect on the bowels of some persons." Is that what Gertrude wanted to know? We doubt it. What effect would they have on her? And then again, suppose the prunes are wet, what then? He should be more concrete and give illustrations. Thus, in reply to W. J. C. on Trigonitis-Verumontanis, he says that "getting sexually excited without completion of the act aggravates the condition."

Now that's always been a disputed point in scientific circles and ought to be motivated more fundamentally, it seems to us. Or the reply to J. S.: "Your friend is unduly alarmed. Nearly every young, unmarried person masturbates. Those who deny it, lie in the majority of cases. Unless it is indulged in too often, neither the mind nor the body are impaired." Well, what would you call "too often"? It strikes us that this is the nub of the problem. Truth always being concrete, some experiences should be drawn on. Maybe the Polbureau of the party ought to be permitted to say on the matter. Or perhaps a happy medium could be found in the formula: Not too much and not too little. In any case, if you really want to get to the masses, you've got to be more precise.

Ourselves, we're inclined to the opinion voiced by Michael Brown (or is it Helywood Gold? We forget which), the new columnist of the Daily Worker in its September 1 issue: "You have to read the tabs to get the real lowdown on how the other half lives. Really, though it smells so bad, one should hold one's nose and study life in the millionaire slums. Let's be scientific." Now we know why Verne Smith left the Daily Worker to go to Moscow: He couldn't hold his nose! But as to being scientific, by all means!

Workers has struck the Kurtzman Clothing Co. The International Ladies Garment Workers Union is planning a general strike and has been waging a series of minor strike battles in this situation it becomes yet more important for the I. U. W. members to finally learn to take the place of the Left wing is within the mass unions.

To the strikers out now and to those who are yet to strike, the workers of Golden Bros. shop have taught lessons that we hope will not go unheeded.

Although the strike has been called off, rearranged battles remain to be fought. These are the struggles for the freeing of the strikers arrested on the vicious anti-picketing ordinance, a piece of legislation aimed to maintain Los Angeles as the pride and joy of employers.

These trials are now going on. First results have not been good. Two workers were fined $20 each. Two girl strikers, Elsie Meyers and Sally Wedgdon, have been fined $50 or 25 days in jail. This case has been appealed. Three girls are going on trial now.

This fight cannot remain solely in the courtroom. Behind the victimized strikers all of Los Angeles labor must be mobilized.

The fight against the anti-picketing ordinance concerns every worker who is ever going to strike whether he or she is in a union affiliated with the Trade Union Unity League, the A. F. of L., the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, or independent unions. For workers to strike without picket lines is like soldiers marching to war without fire arms.

Around the right to strike and to picket a broad united front can be formed. The acute need of the moment for all workers is the winning of this right. The most important ingredient of successful strikes is strong picket lines. The anti-picketing ordinance stands in the way.

Only action by the workers can remove this anti-picketing ordinance, not legal argumentation before the bosses' courts. Although this latter angle must not be ignored, the following must be driven deep into the consciousness of stirring Los Angeles labor: "Only united action by the workers can do away with the anti-picketing ordinance, and open the road to higher wages, shorter hours and better conditions."

T.U.U.L. Disrupts Doll Strike

The sad pass which Stalinism has reached is clearly manifested in the Doll and Toy Workers' strike. The toy part of the industry, where the Stalinists have a small foothold, is told by them not to join in the general strike. They did this first with leaflets, (distributed by members of the Young Communist League) and then with lists.

They used members of the Communist party and of the Unemployed Council to attack and cut up union pickets of the Gong Bell Toy Shop at 200 5th Avenue, N. Y. C. Giordani, president of the Toy and Doll Workers (paper) Union, was in the shop urging the workers not to join the strike when members of the A. F. of L. union came to pull the shop down. It was then that the attack began. One of the pickets of the A. F. of L. union was cut so badly as to require medical attention.

This action on the part of the Stalinists is strikebreaking, no matter what the intentions. This action is to be doubly condemned as dragging the name of Communism in the mud, and playing into the hands of the A. F. of L. reactionaries. The reformists of the A. F. of L. can now get up on the platform at strike headquarters and tell the workers that Communists are strikebreakers and to have nothing to do with them; and, in fact, to beat them up wherever they meet them. This greatly hinders any work of contacting for the Communist movement and endangers the work of building a Left wing within the union. All attempts to expose Farnilla and Cannon are almost worthless for a while, thanks to the criminal blunders of the Stalinists.

Workers, be on your guard against those who attack the Communists. Examine their deeds, and see if the attacks are not to cover up their criminal policy of selling out the strike last year, and, then, after being kicked out of office and union, going to the A. F. of L. and getting a charter without the consent of the union membership. Judge these leaders by their actions and deeds and not by their words. To that end, see that the strike, settlement, and shop committees function so that the leaders (whom we do not elect are checked up. Finally, elections of officers on the basis of their work within the strike, should be cared for when the strike is settled.

means provided for in the inflation act would be utilized, no doubt: Federal Reserve credits would be expanded, new currency issued, and finally perhaps, as a last irrevocable step, the dollar might be cut down to half its gold content.

Every one of these steps, insofar as for as long as it has any effect, will result in raising the cost of living, and thus entailing the real wages of the worker—apart from the rest of the capitalist offensive in cutting relief, cutting school budgets, speeding-up labor, etc.

Strike Lessons on Pacific Coast

Los Angeles.—It is sad to have to write to you that the workers on strike against Golden Bros. Millinery shop were defeated.

The bravery of the strikers, their militancy on the picket lines, their courage before the clubs and saps of a degenerate group of police, the great number of arrests bravely endured (17 in number) were not able to overcome the objective fact of the strike being forced on the workers in the off season and the subjective condition of weakness in the Trade Union Unity League officialdom. (To grace them with the name of "leaders" would be sheer violence of the latter term.)

Victory could have been won, even though the strike took place in the slack season, but for the passivity and lethargy in the general activity—a condition due to the actions of the apparatus of the T. U. U. L. and not the strikers themselves.

The chairman of the strike committee, comrade Louis Meyers insisted on a more militant attitude, but to no avail, as a result scabs manned the shops.

After much effort, comrade Meyers succeeded in securing what amounted to a little more than a verbal agreement with his views.

In spite of its weaknesses, the strike has created a tradition in Los Angeles. To all workers, particularly needleworkers, it showed how even the most brutal of police terror can be fought. Smashed picket lines were reformed. Jail did not daunt. In this manner strikes are won; not in the class collaboration of the conservative trade union fakers.

A storm of strikes, in the needle trades above all, is in the offing. The first strikes, the forerunners, are already here. The NTWU is conducting a number of small strikes. The Amalgamated Clothing

Cracks in N.R.A. Structure

The NRA, as a machinery of recovery, is one of those marvels of American technique, like the ninety-day ships built during the war, or the flimsy mass-production houses put up during a boom, which is as astounding for the speed of its construction as for its makeshift, jerry-built character. While the house is still being put up, the cracks are already appearing in its walls. Barely two months after the act was passed which created the NRA, and on the eve of another far-reaching publicity campaign intended to whip up enthusiasm for it, we can say that the Marxian analysis of the futility of such devices is already being borne out by the bourgeoisie who will not stop at the concrete facts. This means that the bourgeoisie will not stop at the present stage of its efforts to climb out of the crisis on the backs of the workers. As one stage after the other proves insufficient, it will put more and more pressure to bear. Correspondingly, the resistance of the workers will need to be ever more aggressive and better organized.

In the present stage of the bourgeois offensive, the basic strategy is to concentrate and coordinate economic and political power through increasing State intervention, to win the support of the broad masses for this program by demagogic bluff, and to avoid sharp challenges and irrevocable decisions. That is why no decisive answer has been given to the question of inflation, why no action has been taken on the imposing public works program involving the expenditure of 3,300 million dollars, why the "spread-work" program and the leveling-down of the higher wage scales have been disguised as maximum hours and minimum wages, and why the struggle against aggressive trade-union organization has been disguised as a concession in favor of "collective bargaining."

The official justification for this course is that purchasing power will thus be increased, and this in turn will increase production and consequently employment.

The beginnings of the breakdown of this policy, and the likelihood that the bourgeoisie will have to resort to more drastic measures, are shown in the following developments:

1. The ambiguous character of the governmental policy is shown by the fact that two important officials have resigned from the NRA for exactly opposite reasons, one from the left and the other from the right; Mary Van Kleeck as a liberal social worker because not enough concessions were being made to labor, Dudley Cates because labor was receiving too many concessions in the so-called right to "collective bargaining."

2. The nation-wide wave of strikes which greeted the NRA and has continued to develop until it now embraces hundreds of thousands of workers shows that the elemental needs of the working-class which are incompatible with the NRA are expressing themselves in spite of the bourgeois ideology represented by the NRA humming which is being pumped into them by all the agencies of the bourgeoisie state. Faced with the realities of the strike movement, the state has no choice but to discard the bluff of impartiality, and break up picket lines, shoot workers, discriminate against Left wing un-

FROM THE MILITANTS

Discussion on the German Defeat

The article appearing below is another contribution to the discussion on the problems of the German situation after the victory of Fascism. The views expressed are those of the writer. Comrades are invited to participate in this discussion but their contribution should be limited to about 700 words.—Ed.

In the New Republic of July 5 there appeared an article by comrade Trotsky entitled "The German Catastrophe" (reprinted in the Militant) which subjected the policy of the Central Committee of the C. P. and the C. I. to a critical analysis. The substance of this document was that the failure of the C. P. and the Social Democracy to form a united front, and the failure of the C. P. G. to propose it, was responsible for the catastrophe. With the substance of this criticism, limited as it must be within the confines of a short article, we have no argument. But this explanation does not go far enough and to the root of things. The reader gets the impression that the leaders of the C. P. G. were free agents acting in accordance with the dictates of their own judgment which proved to be erroneous. The leaders of German Communism acted as they did not merely because their judgment was poor but because they consented to become puppets of the existing foreign policy of Stalinism. They had received orders from Moscow to offer only a dilatory opposition or passive resistance but no serious struggle against Hitler. What proof is there for these assertions? And what were the motives for justifying this policy?

The organs of the L. O. noticed the strange silence of the C. I. for months preceding the events of March 5, they called attention to its failure to furnish political assistance and to the failure of the C. P. G. to make adequate defense preparations. The C. P. U. S. A. also ignored appeals from the L. O. for action on the German crisis. These were the outward symptoms of the crisis in the C. I.

Were these features and events mere accidents and oversights on the part of the Stalinists? We know that in politics there are no accidents or oversights—not where major policies are concerned. We believe the answer is to be found in the changed foreign policy of the C. P. U. S. A. From a party committed to the promotion of world revolution it has degenerated into a party of national Socialism. In order to establish this hypothesis we invite the consideration of the following facts.

It is common knowledge that an isolated workers' revolutionary government operating under the discussion of a party committed to a policy of world revolution must of necessity have difficult and strained relations with capitalist powers, who, when they are not conspiring actively to destroy it, are protesting against the "outrages", that a foreign party, i. e. the C. P. U. S. A. should be conducting propaganda on their territory through an affiliated organization, the C. I. Hence, since the termination of the active interventionist program the capitalist world powers have demanded the cessation by the S. U. of Communist propaganda on their soil. In the language of diplomacy this means the suppression of the C. I. Depending upon various situation in the international field they have threatened to break off relations, have refused to sign trade agreements, treaties, extend loans, guarantee credits as long as the C. I. was an active threat to their existence. The Soviet diplomacy countered with the argument that it was not responsible for the actions of the C. I. and that no Soviet government agency was engaged in any hostile action on foreign soil. Mr. Henderson, British foreign minister to mention only one case, refused to accept this contention insisting that the S. U. was responsible for the actions of the C. I., which he considered a propaganda arm of the Soviets. He informed the Soviet Union that if the C. I. engaged in propaganda on British soil relations between the two countries would again be broken. As long as Lenin and Trotsky were leading the C. P. S. U. this demand for suppression of the C. I. was energetically resisted. But with the death of Lenin, the expulsion of the L. O., the slowing down of world revolution and the rise of the policies of national socialism, the Stalinist leadership of the C. P. S. U. has gradually yielded to the pressure of world imperialist powers. The benefit of an active international center coordinating the activities of the parties was considered as insignificant compared to the benefits of recognition trade and credits. The belief gradually grew up among the Stalinist bureaucracy that one or the other would have to be sacrificed. The C. I. was, of course, sacrificed and with it the international conception that the fate of the Soviet Union was bound up with the fate of the world proletariat. The theory which the Stalinist school of national socialism advanced, officially and unofficially, may be expressed as follows:

The mere existence of the S. U. is a beacon light to the world proletariat. If the S. U. can obtain a breathing space for a number of years during which unruffled, peaceful relations, loans, trade, etc., can be established with the capitalist world powers then fulfilled socialism can be developed within the Soviet Union. The resultant socialist construction will be a great inspiration to the oppressed proletariat, who will then, seeing a finished socialist structure as an objective reality, be only too willing to overthrow their bourgeoisie. What shall the proletariat do in the meantime? In the meantime the C. P. S. U. abandons its original program of world revolution. In fact, the proletariat of other countries must mark time not even attempt to seize power because this would disturb the Soviet capitalist peaceful cohabitation. In fact for the time being, the world proletariat must be prepared to sacrifice its historic mission—the overthrow of capitalism for the sake of the "upbuilding of socialism in the Soviet Union".

These arguments have not an iota in common with Leninism. The war scare which the Stalinists use to justify their policy is strangely similar to that used by the German social democracy in 1918. When after the German Revolution they were called upon by the workers to establish a workers government and come to the assistance of the Russian revolution, they replied in these words: "If we come to the assistance of the German proletariat and establish a workers government the allies will march into Germany and occupy Berlin. Thus all the achievements of the German revolution will be destroyed. It is therefore much safer and more certain to follow the slow but peaceful path to socialism of the Weimar Constitution." Now we can understand the silence of the C. I. before and after the coup d'état. Now we can understand the passivity of the C. P. G. The German working class and with it the hopes of the world proletariat were sacrificed for years to come, so that the Stalin bureaucracy might nurse its illu-sionary hope of peace and quiet living together with world capitalism.

The Future of the C. I.

From the Stalinist course of a half-liquidated international there arises a three fold danger:

1. If the Soviet Union should be really threatened with war, intervention or both, the danger is that the workers of the various important countries will not respond with the same enthusiasm to the slogan of defending the Workers Republic as they have heretofore. These workers will argue that the C. I. and the C. P. S. U. remained silent while Fascism rolled over our organizations and broke the backbone of our movement for liberation. Why should we break our heads for the Stalinists when the Soviet Union, manned by Stalinism, finds itself encircled by world imperialism?

Naturally from the standpoint of the I. L. O. such a viewpoint would be calamitous and the L. O. would actively resist it. But the danger nevertheless exists that such currents are likely to make themselves felt widely. The I. L. O. must take measures to forestall the possibility of such phenomena.

2. There is another danger—that of passivity. Many Communist-minded workers will lose faith, because of the inactivity of the C. I. in all revolutionary movements and withdrawal from the struggle altogether.

3. Lastly, the greatest danger is that of liquidation. When, in 1923, the C. I. failed to respond to the revolutionary situation, the result was a steady streaming back of workers to re-enroll under the banner of the social democracy. Such a danger is magnified today because the breakdown of the C. P. in Germany and Austria, in Germany and Italy Fascism has been able to carry on only because it has made deep inroads into the ranks of the workers. The danger therefore exists of large masses streaming into the folds of Fascism because of the breakdown of both Internationals, the 2nd as well as the 3rd.

Conclusion

The Stalinist policy, can now, be summarized as follows:

1. Abandonment of the Leninist program of world revolution.
2. Nominal existence for the C. I. Muzzling of the C. I. as important world crises arise.
3. Civil peace with world capitalism; no international class struggle.
4. Suppression of democratic centralism in the C. P. S. U.; conversion of the party into a semi-military administration and ruled from the top by a dictatorial oligarchy.

Where does this policy lead to? It is obvious that we are not dealing any more with a centrist current in Communism with which we have tactical differences but with right wing opportunism.

Upon the shoulders of the I. L. O. rests the responsibility of preventing the above-mentioned dangers from becoming acute and from engulfing for decades the entire workers' liberationist movement. Under these changed circumstances the I. L. O. must make plans for its transition from the role of an Opposition within the C. I. to a new role—that of the leading nucleus for the organization of a new International.

U. S., Cuba and Latin America

Does intervention exist in Cuba? The capitalist press says no. We say it does. It began with the establishment of the revolutionary junta of five. The whole Atlantic fleet was sent to Cuban waters. The air fleet and marines were mobilized. Cuba was bottled up. A new form of intervention took place. "Armed" intervention had not been established? Cuba's independence has not been violated? As soon as the new government was established pressure from American imperialism increased from day to day, until the half-bourgeois element in the lead had slowly yielded and helped check the pressure of the bank and file and the workers from below. Nevertheless, the new regime which is compromising with American imperialism is sitting on a dynamite keg and the proper spark can blow up this regime causing repercussions which will be felt by the most backward strata of the American workers.

Why is America so careful in her dealing with her colony, Cuba? Cuba is at present the determining factor which will decide to a great degree the outcome of the impending Pan-American Conference to be held at Montevideo. This conference will be the culmination of a bitter struggle now raging among the imperialists to decide who will obtain a more favorable position in the trade relations with the South American countries. England, Germany and Japan are still making inroads in America's private backyard. The Americans hope to overcome this between now and the date of the conference.

One false move in Cuba, which will increase Latin America's hatred for the iron heel of the North will play into the hands of the other imperialists. America hopes to avoid this, which accounts for the new form of intervention the Roosevelt government is conducting in Cuba. As soon as the London Conference was over, as soon as America had tied a few more ropes around Europe in order to put her on rattions, America turned her attention to the South American struggle and the coming conference. Reports from investigators Roosevelt sent south at the very beginning of his administration indicated that Cuba was a most critical spot. This spot had to be removed as part of the preparations for the Pan-American Conference.

The objective conditions for a political explosion in Cuba were mature. All that was needed was a "hands off" policy from the iron heel of the North. America did more than that. It helped remove Machado and place in power a more suitable puppet but events and conditions got out of control. Within a month history passed beyond this American set-up. The Cuban situation is characteristic of the quicksand upon which American imperialism has built its world structure. Attempts to solve one contradiction pave the way for a new and bigger contradiction.

The proletarian revolution cast its shadow across Cuba, an outpost of American imperialism. America's backyard has a revolutionary situation. Workers seize sugar plantations. American imperialism is denounced, complete independence is demanded. The Red scare becomes the headline overnight in the rabid American press. But the economic and political implications run deeper than the diplomatic and yellow press maneuvers. It runs deeper than America's attempt to patch up things for the Pan-American Conference.

America went to the London conference to smash the attempted united front of Europe. America's positive role at Europe's conference was to deliver a few destructive blows. America's role at the Pan-American conference is different. This is America's set-up. It is England's time to deliver a few destructive blows.

Below the surface of this imperialist struggle for markets and the preparation for war runs the more fundamental struggle of the imperialists and the proletariat. The American working class has an urgent and tremendous task to aid the Latin American workers and peasants. The overthrow of American imperialism is our task and the workers and peasants of Latin America are our closest allies. Their fight against American imperialism in Cuba is our fight.

Relativity and Pacifism

The New York Times of September 10 quotes Albert Einstein, world famous pacifist, as follows: "If I were a Belgian I would not refuse military service under the present circumstances, but I would, on the contrary, accept it with a clear conscience with the sentiment of a contribution toward securing European civilization."

The "present circumstances" are Einstein's fear of a threat of war emanating from Hitler. Einstein thinks that the tide of war will roll westward and that Belgium will fall beneath the Nazi chariot wheels. Hence the gratuitous admission to Belgian workers to train for the defense of "their" country.

The French Socialists and the British labor states want to defend European democracy against Fascist and "Soviet dictatorship". Hitler, too, wants to defend European civilization against "the East". How many saviors of European civilization there are!

It is difficult to reconcile this latest position of Einstein's with his endorsement of aid and services for the Stalinist Amsterdam World Anti-War Congress. This the Stalinists will have to explain away. We warned in time against entrusting the leadership of the fight against imperialism war to well meaning intellectuals and pacifists. For our good advice the Stalinists gave us curses and blows.

This latest advice of Einstein's stands in contradiction to his former, well known advice to the entire world to refuse to bear arms. He is the formulator of the pacifist idea that if only two percent of a population refuse to bear arms that number will suffice to defeat the war plans of the imperialists.

But if you think you see a contradiction here Einstein does not. He explains this point: "There does not mean I renounce my previous opinions. I desire nothing more than to see the moment come when the refusal of military service will be the means for an efficacious struggle for the progress of humanity." You see, he merely postpones his idea of refusing military service for a while. And in the meantime he advocates the exact opposite.

Is there a contradiction here? Yes and no. It all depends on how you look at it. Workers should remember that Einstein is the author of the theory of relativity which, despite its positive contributions to science, implies that there is no objective world independent of consciousness and that the world is only the result of the position of the measurer. In other words if you stick your head between your legs and look at the world from that position the Empire State Building grows down from the sky and calling on Belgian workers to enter on military service of the capitalist class is not in contradiction to pacifist ideas.

That is generally the conclusion to which the petty bourgeois, confusionist theory of pacifism lead. We hope that Einstein will forgive us if we see in his playing with serious questions the bankruptcy of pacifism and its objective support of imperialism.

Southern Negroes Under the N.R.A.

The murderous meaning of Roosevelt's "New Deal" to southern Negro workers has been brought to our attention by many conflicts which have arisen around the issue of wage differentials between white and Negro workers. A firm in Atlanta which prominently displayed the blue eagle insignia pays its Negro employees from 6 to 13 cents an hour. The most violent forms of Jim Crowism transferred into the wage differential question is given testimony in an article in the New York Times of August 27, from which we quote in part:

"Mississippi already has given the nation an example of barbarity based on an economic condition. . . . Negro firemen were lured from their engines with flares and then shot down. Others were slain or seriously wounded in the engine cabs. . . . It can be assumed that how- ever true the statement that the living costs of the Negro justifies a differential in wages, the thought is not a pleasant one to blacks who are forced to live in miserable surroundings in order to live at the lowest scale. This situation created by the NRA regulations benefited as they are in intent (?) is one that must have the serious and honest consideration of reasonable men of both races."

It would be much more correct to state that this situation and the whole Negro question requires the consideration of working men of both races: for serious bourgeois of both races created exactly this situation. I quote further from the same article to prove this statement:

"Many men suggested that a differential in wages should be established. This was successfully done among laundry workers, where Negro workers have long represented the majority of the workers. But a drastic differential in other lines is another matter and contains a danger pointed out by Dr. R. R. Moton, head of Tuskegee In-

Even Slander Needs Meaning

A Discussion with those Stalinists Who Reflect

On every occasion the Stalinists repeat that the Bolshevik-Leninists whom they call "Trotskyists" are working in favor of military intervention in the U. S. S. R. A shameless absurdity of this kind is calculated to mislead ill-informed people. The courageous man, the honest one, must inevitably say to himself: "It is impossible that such a thing is simply an invention, there must be some truth in it." And unfortunately there are not a few of such courageous men in the world.

How then must one understand the aid that the "Trotskyists" will lend aid to intervention? Does that mean that the Bolshevik-Leninists are on the side of imperialism in the struggle against the U. S. S. R., that is, that they will be materially or politically interested in overthrowing the workers' state with the aid of the military forces of the imperialist bourgeoisie? There are people who even go as far as such assertions. In the majority of cases, these are sincerely careerists who are little concerned over intervention, revolution, Marxism and ideas in general they simply serve the master of today and will unhesitatingly betray this master in time of danger.

At bottom, these "Udarniks" (shock brigades) of slander continue the tradition of the reactionaries, who, from 1914 onward and particularly from 1917, repeated indefinitely that Lenin and Trotsky were agents of the German General Staff. After 15 or 20 years in the course of which such events as the October Revolution, the Civil war, the creation of the 3rd International and the intransigent struggle of the Bolshevik-Leninists for the banner of Marx and Lenin against the degenerating bureaucracy have taken place—the Stalinists have withdrawn from the mind of the accusation formerly fabricated by the military espionage, by Milukov, Bourke and Kerensky.

Others of the more prudent bureaucrats do not trust themselves to pose the question in the spirit of the British and Carlist counter-espionage. They add a wise word, the "Trotskyists," say, objectively aid the counter-revolution and the intervention. Such a formula, which itself pretends to objectivity is in reality deprived of all content. Any mistake of the revolutionary party aids the enemy directly or indirectly but the whole question consists precisely in this: on whose side is the mistake? The Bolshevik-Leninists have demonstrated (and events have justified our arguments) that the policy of the Stalinist bureaucracy has aided the bourgeoisie and foreign imperialism against the workers in China; that it aided the British reformists against Communism; that in the U. S. S. R. it has aided and it aids the thermidor-ians and the Bonapartists against the October Revolution; finally that it aided Hitler against the proletariat in Germany. Is this true or not? This is the decisive question.

Of course our criticism does not contribute to raising the authority of the Stalinist faction; but can one put the prestige of the bureaucracy and the vital interests of the world proletariat on the same plans? The Stalinist bureaucracy, which disposes in abundance of the services of publications, papers, "theoricians", journalists, has not even approached a refutation of our criticism. Is it not truly astounding that the C. I. has no book which draws the lessons of the German events of 1923, the Bulgarian intervention and a series of other events of lesser extent. Thus, after the miserable report of Hecker they have put a cross on the forehead of the "Trotskyists". The criticism of the Left Opposition can only strengthen the diplomatic positions of Stalinism. A serious American bourgeois, Campbell, has shown the necessity of recognizing the Soviet Union by referring to the words of Stalin, saying that the course towards international revolution was liquidated with the expulsion of Trotsky. It is true that Stalin has disavowed these words. Let us admit that they were said to Campbell not by Stalin himself, but by one of his associates, let us even admit that Campbell, let us even admit that this argument into Stalin's mouth. At bottom that does not change the matter one iota. Campbell puts as a positive feature of Stalin that which he Left Opposition considers as a negative feature and the American bourgeois is right from his point of view.

In any case, to accuse the Stalinist bureaucracy of being nationally limited does not hinder, but facilitates "normal" and even "friendly" relations for it with the bourgeois states. What happens then to the lecture on intervention? It can however be said that that we do not exactly explain the basis of the Stalinist argumentation. Let us take their official press. We have at hand the last number of Humanite (August 2nd). Let us surmount the natural repugnance for slander and let us probe the arguments of the functionaries of Humanite. Here as an example of the counter-revolution, they cite the words of Simon Weil: "The dynamism of the Russian State should inspire us with defiance in case of war as in case of peace, just as the dynamism of the capitalist states, if not to the same degree." Further on they cite the words of a so-called "Trotskyist" leader: "The power which dominates the U. S. S. R. has nothing in common—in spite of its lies—with the October Revolution." In alleging these two quotations, of which we cannot guarantee the authenticity of the text, the editors write:

"These are words for word the same fifth that appears in the press of the other white Russian or French counter-revolutionaries, of the Renaissance of General Miller, in the Dernieres Nouvelles of Milukov and in Populaire of Blum-Rosenfeld."

So the White-Russians accuse Soviet diplomacy of having sunk to the level of bourgeois diplomacy or having betrayed the heritage of the October Revolution. Can anything more stupid or more ridiculous be imagined? And in order to show what he really is the unfortunate functionary accomplishes more than he can: "The quotations of the two camps coincide word for word."

In reality, the white guard press exerts all its strength to prove to the bourgeois governments that the Stalinist bureaucracy continues the original work of the October Revolution, that it does not limit itself to national aims and aspires as before to the world revolution, and that is why the conclusion of the Franco-Soviet non-aggression pact or the recognition of the Soviets by Spain are fatal mistakes. In other words, the reactionary Russian and world press tries to demonstrate that Soviet diplomacy is not "Europeanized" that is, that it is not bourgeoisified and it sees in its refusal to bourgeoisify itself a basis some logic in that. But the Stalinist intervention; there is at least lists have nothing, except absurdities. The Whites hate the Soviets precisely because of that they look for arguments that have political meaning. It is an entirely different thing when an unpoliticized functionary defends a cause which is quite foreign to him; he throws into the same sack all the absurdities which come into his poor head.

The functionary receives his task for the day; connect Trotsky with the white empires in order by that to justify the repressions against Rakovsky and thousands of irrevocable Bolsheviks. Then how does the indifferent functionary act in the cause? He assuredly does not throw himself into a polemic with Trotsky or his comrades; such a polemic promises nothing good. He has neither facts nor arguments; where should he find such facts and arguments? The functionary finds two isolated quotations which have no relation with Trotsky and he sets his wits to work to identify these quotations with the point of view of the white guards which is directly contrary both in spirit and letter. In order to give proof of his zeal the functionary adds: "word for word" in slandering even an appearance of sense. No wonder if the advanced workers more and more turn their backs on the dishonest, ignorant and traitorous functionary.

Cuban Revolution Rising

Revolutionary unrest continues unabated in Cuba and the new regime which claims to be "anti-imperialist" but willing to fulfill all of its legitimate obligations is finding increasing difficulty in maintaining itself between the pressure from Wall Street and Washington on the one hand and the masses from the left on the other. While a hundred of the old army officers continue harried in the National Hotel, Colonel-Sergeant Batista, army chief of staff, is busy promoting enlisted men to replace his former officers. Fraternization between the soldiers and workers continues. This is what the capitalist press means when it complains of the breakdown of discipline.

The native bourgeoisie is already consistently sabotaging the Gran San Martin Government by withholding taxes due to the government, hoping in this way to force the government to default on the payment of interest on loans to Wall Street increase the pressure on it from that direction and turn the army against it consequent on its failure to pay the enlisted rank and file.

The workers and students, realizing the danger of counter-revolution and in order to be able to exert mass pressure on the bourgeoisie, are taking steps to fortify their present positions in an attempt to prevent the triumph of a counter-revolution, led by the Menocal conservatives or Mendiatas nationalists.

The strike wave continues unabated; the militancy of the workers and unwillingness of the soldiers to act against them being everywhere in evidence. On the banana plantations at Antilla, Oriente Province, the workers have striking. . . . Dr. Moton—realized that with both races receiving the same wages for identical work the whites would gradually usurp the places held by Negroes."

The bourgeois Negroes' whole slant on economic and political questions (Dr. Moton is just one of these bourgeois Negroes) arises from and does not look beyond the segregation, discrimination, and subordination to which the caste system in these United States relegates the Negro workers.

—G. J. SAUL.

Once more the dock workers of Santiago are threatening to strike unless their latest demands are accepted within 72 hours. The strikes at the Mabay refinery in Santiago and on the coffee plantations of the same province continue.

In many points throughout the island the workers, especially those on the sugar plantations, are arming themselves. The first attempt of the present government or of the counter-revolution to oust them from the sugar mills and plantations, some of which they have already seized will undoubtedly be met by violent resistance.

At the same time camps for military instruction are being organized by the student organizations and authorized spokesmen for the students stated to the Associated Press representative:

"We are attempting to prevent a recurrence of those things which happened to these boys during the Machado regime. We want them to have a knowledge of military training so that they may be prepared to defend themselves whenever it may be necessary to do so."

The same Associated Press report goes on to note that the organizers of these military training camps take pains to explain that their movement is not of a fascist character.

Representatives of American capitalist interests, especially Ambassador Welles, are bargaining with the Gran San Martin Government as well as with the leaders of the other bourgeoisie political groups. By intelligently playing them against each other any one of them can be made to come to an agreement favorable to Wall Street. The pressure of the masses, however, as expressed concretely within the ranks of the army, by the seizures of the sugar mills and by the developments at the manganese mines in Cristó, Oriente Province, must be reckoned with before Yankee imperialism can hope to again establish the good old days of uninterrupted exploitation of Cuba.

portant points of view, failed to pose the orientation of the new international. Where it speaks in the general abstract manner of re-creating the international unity of the working class, that will have as many and as distinct different interpretations as there were tendencies represented. Some of the delegates undoubtedly supported the resolution because it postponed the new regrouping of revolutionary force outside the two international, others because they did not yet consider it necessary to create a new international and finally there were those who interpreted the failure of the two international as proof of the necessity of unification of all workers organizations on the basis of concrete demands and without regard to divergent principles.

Summed up this conference nevertheless presents us a picture of the travail and the birth pangs of a movement. We recall the time of the rise of the Bolshevik revolution and the collapse of Social Democracy how important sections and groups within it were struggling to find their way to Communism and in most cases not without difficulties. Again this process is repeated, but as it appears, at an accelerated tempo. The lessons of Germany are sinking in deeply among several of these present groups and parties developing Leftward toward international Communism. This general development is the fact of monumental importance standing out above all difficulties and all the confusion still apparent.

The decadence and betrayal of Social Democracy became the compelling force driving many of these parties in a Leftward direction. Such new groups will still emerge. But the Stalinist control of the Comintern instead of facilitating has hindered this process, and that in a large measure accounts for the confusion still existing amongst them. In their further developments these parties will therefore find themselves ever more faced with the task of smashing the Stalinist barriers.

Before this conference the Left Opposition affirmed its break with Stalinist Centralism and its greater irreconcilability than before towards reformism. That position will in the coming period stand out the more impressively and win its way within the parties groping for an international revolutionary orientation. The firm kernel which has already emerged augurs well for the future.

It appears that the coal operators actually did get busy and are trying to reach a conclusion on their code discussion. When signed it will, we assume also carry the name of "fair competition", even with the company union clause retained. But what made them get busy was the fact that the workers got into action and struck the jobs.

of "dual unionism" blurt us out of it. But just as truly we must refuse to accept the paper unions of the Stalinists as substitutes for genuine mass organizations. Independent unions have a very slim chance in the present situation. It is not because there is any law to this effect—as the Lovestone opportunists imply—but because a force capable of organizing them is lacking and because the trend of the masses toward the conservative unions cannot and should not be counteracted. (For Marxists independent unions are not a dogma or fetish any more than A. F. of L. unions are).

But not the least, and very probably the greatest, factor in the situation which excludes any widespread development of independent unions at the present time is the fact that the Stalinists, who have made a dogma of independent "class struggle" unions, have succeeded in discrediting the idea and alienating the workers who might have cooperated in building them in these industries where their existence had a certain justification and necessity. By their "bitchous" new trade union center, their stupid tactics, their arrogant bureaucracy, their hoodlump abuse and expulsions of critics and political opponents, their subordination of the unions to the narrow clique interests of the Stalin faction and the conversion of the dedicated organizations into mere appendages of the Stalin party—by their whole policy and regime, they have covered the idea of an independent union movement with their own disgrace.

The verdict of doom has already been pronounced on the so-called unions under their domination. As for the unorganized workers, they are passing them by and the non-Stalinist unions who have not been expelled are leaving them. Make no mistake about it. Unions that cannot grow now when new strata of workers are surging forward and seeking organization are dead beyond the possibility of resurrection. The Left wing militants who want to play a part in the new situation in the labor movement must turn their backs on the Stalinist paper unions and put a cross over the whole experiment.

To see the present strike wave as only the first stage of a resurgent class activity of the American workers and prepare to influence its further development; to call the workers to enter the trade unions and to go with them on this path; to struggle increasingly within the unions against the policy and leadership of the reactionaries; to break resolutely and completely with the Stalinist sectarian paper unions—these in our opinion, are the main points of the new trade union theses, which the Left wing requires.

But the new program, by itself, is not enough. The Left wing also requires a new leadership. Up till now the Stalinists have dominated the movement, disorganizing and disrupting everything they could not control and silencing all critical voices with threats and expulsions. They had a monopoly on the leadership. Consequently, the responsibility for the results is also their monopoly. In the light of what happened in the past three months, on top of all that went before, it is possible now—it is absolutely necessary!—to draw the final balance of their trade union policy. The beginning of the strike wave was the great opportunity and test of the Left wing and its leadership. Given a correct policy and a competent leadership the Left wing in the labor movement could not fail to bound forward, to expand its influence and organization at the expense of the reactionaries. It happened differently, as everybody knows. In the trade union movement in America, as in every vital problem of the working class throughout the world, Stalinism remained true to its mission as the great organizer of defeats. The conclusion which the revolutionary workers throughout the world are drawing must also be drawn here. In the trade union question the necessity for a complete break with the Stalinist leadership is especially obvious and imperative. And their disastrous leadership in this field is only a particularly illuminating illustration of their leadership in general. The question brooks no delay. The liberation of the Left wing of the labor movement from the stranglehold grip of Stalinism is the key to the problem of planning and organizing the struggles of the American workers, of raising the elemental movement to new heights. This is today the crux of the trade union question.

GET A SUB!

Our own Dr. Luttinger (name unknown) says that the best thing for a young and growing paper is a sub. All subs are good. They are of two kinds; new ones and renewals like the one that came with the letter reprinted below. Please read the letter carefully and draw the proper conclusions in the form of new subs and renewals. This is a favorite theme to which we will return in the near future.

Dear comrades,
It seems as if I will never get a dollar together again in my life. So I am sending you fifty cents herewith and beg you to extend my Militant sub for as far as that amount pays for. My Militant expires with No. 190. Very close now. In a money way times have been even harder than last year with no prospects of improvement for me. But I suppose it isn't much better anywhere else or with anybody else.

revolution's aims with any form of American domination.

The Cuban workers and peasants, however, can rely only on their own strength, on their own popular organs of struggle, that is, the Soviets. In this respect, we have nothing in common with the Stalinist conception that Soviets are to be organized only at the moment of proletarian insurrection. That would only lead, as was so tragically demonstrated by the Stalinists in China, to the failure to organize Soviets in time as the revolutionary center and instrument of the workers and peasants, or else to the organization of caricature Soviets after the revolutionary wave had receded. Soviets are needed now, not merely as the future organs of the proletarian insurrection. They are needed in order effectively to mobilize the whole people of Cuba, in an elementary mass organ, for a successful struggle to kick out the American bandits and assure the integrity of Cuba. The time for the organization of Soviets in Cuba is now when the struggle for the demands of the masses against the vaultering "government" and against the domination and oppression of American imperialism, is unfolding and gaining in intensity.

The Cuban masses have already seized arms in their endeavor to defend and to advance the gains already made. To further that process is one of the main tasks of the Soviets. The masses of the people must be armed to the teeth in the elementary interests of the defense of Cuba against American imperialism.

The revolutionary problems of the Cuban masses are now posed in imposing magnitude. But these problems cannot be solved by the Cuban masses alone. They can count surely on the solidarity of the Latin American masses who also suffer under the domination and oppression of the same northern colossus. But above all they need the energetic and immediate support of the working class of the United States. The freedom of the Cuban people from the imperialist yoke is intimately linked up with the struggles of the American workers against the same exploiters.

The economy and politics of the U. S. are the dominant force in Cuba. The fate of the proletariat of Cuba and the United States is inseparably connected. The active support of the American working class in closest solidarity with the fighting Cuban masses, can defeat the American intervention in Cuba and secure the complete and unconditional independence of the Cuban people!

A heavy responsibility rests upon the American working class. There should be no delay in their sympathetic action. It is the duty of the Communist movement in the ers are concerned, but a section of them came out in response to the call of the National Textile Workers Union of TUUL.

Within a few days this mass movement may even be dwarfed by the new miners strike now looming on the horizon. Already 30,000 are in central and Western Pennsylvania. These miners are losing patience with the quagmire promises made to them before that President Roosevelt and the NRA code would soon remove all their depression misery. They are returning to reliance upon their own mass force as the prospects of a code bringing favors to the miners recedes into the background. The efforts of the UMW officials to hold them tied to their job until the advent of the code seems to be of little avail.

An effective strike of 1,000 miners in the state of Utah has been in progress now for some time with all the means at the disposal of the capitalist state institution massed against them. Clubbings and jailings are on the order of the day with military control in the field amounting to a state of martial law. This strike is under the leadership of the National Miners Union. In both the Eastern and Western Kentucky fields members of the UMW have begun strikes. Even the anthracite miners are striking. In Lackawanna county several shafts have been shut down and the "liberal" governor Pinchot has taken this occasion to instruct his sheriffs to prevent all mass picketing.

Outside of these two most important fields, mining and textile, innumerable strikes, some of considerable size are either in progress, or have just been settled or have so far reached the stage of a definite threat unless the workers' demands are met. Notable, however, is the fact that in practically every instance where settlements have already been arrived at, or the threats averted, some positive gains have been scored by the workers involved.

In New York City 10,000 cleaners and dyers have struck for shorter working hours and higher wages. The delivery truck drivers threaten to follow. 25,000 underwear workers have declared a strike. 4,000 button workers are already on strike. Several thousand embroidery workers scored important gains in their strike settlement just made. 25,000 millinery workers threaten to go on strike. 4,000 moving picture operators won against an attempted company union by the threat of a strike and picketing of many theaters.

An injunction against picketing has been issued against the New York bakery workers strike which is now running into several months duration. About 3,000 are still out. Similarly the Brooklyn Shoe workers strike, involving several thousand, is organizing this active support of the American toilers for the Cuban liberation struggle!

sand men is still in full force despite all the attempts to make it illegal under the charge of being a Communist strike.

From St. Louis comes the report that the city is in the grip of many strikes. In the main it is about the clothing shops which are hit, about 1,000 being out at the time of this writing. A total of 300 pickets have been arrested. In Cleveland a street car strike of 3,000 workers was narrowly averted by the company agreeing to recognize the union and to have the demands for wage increases settled by arbitration. In the Fresno, Calif. region a strike of 15,000 fruit pickers gained for them a 33 per cent wage increase. Fruit pickers in Jackman, Vt., are on strike for better wages and working conditions.

These are just a few examples, culled at random, of strikes going on at this moment. A glance will convince the most skeptical observer that there is today a strike wave constantly moving upward. This is not accidental. Moreover, it is indicative for the future. The extremely low standard of living to which the American workers have been reduced demands improvements and the workers are showing determination to get it. As the now rapidly upward moving cost of living really begins to make its effect felt, the workers will surge forward that much stronger.

The strikes in progress also prove beyond a shadow of doubt that the American workers do not rely merely upon the N. R. A., despite all its blarney, to accomplish this improvement. Generally speaking the masses still believe that it will be helpful, but they also believe in reinforcement by their own strike power to actually obtain its benefits. Apparently we will be justified in saying: in the main the workers are striking today with the NRA with some signs of taking action regardless of it. Tomorrow, when their illusions disappear, they will be striking against the chains imposed by the N. R. A. —A. S.

Walk Out in the Harverstraw Shop

After over three weeks of intensive organization work, the workers of the Spiewak plant in Harverstraw, N. Y., for years the open shop "grip" of the mens' garment market, unanimously voted to go out on strike against prevailing sweat shop conditions and for the recognition of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union, Local 178. Mr. Spiewak is caught short with a mass of orders that he cannot fill. Not a garment can be produced. In turn the Linbrook plant whose cutters are on strike will now be tied up, since the cutting was all done at Harverstraw. News of the Spiewak strike has tremendously heartened Local 178 in New York, and has spurred it on towards a 100 percent organization of the industry.

All the preliminary organization work preparatory to the calling of the strike was handled by Sara Arvin in close collaboration with the New York office of the union.

Bosses and NRA Defeat Workers

The shipping department of the Geo. B. Hand Co., a paper house, went on strike, September 11, 1933 after being refused a minimum wage of $20 per week which the shipping clerks demanded.

The tactics of the strikers were to spread the strike so as to include the machine girls and the other workers and so as to get the support of whatever union included shipping clerks.

The boss, knowing the raw conditions throughout the factory and the chances we had for spreading the strike, defeated our first tactic by immediately after our walk-out raising the wages of the employees on both the paperette and machine floors.

Our second tactic failed because there is no shipping clerks' union and because the shipping clerks' section of the Amalgamated Workers Union stated that because their "hands were full at present" they would not take up our strike.

The strike then decided to file complaint against the firm for gross violations of the NRA: working machine girls 14 hours a day, refusing to let the shipping clerks deal with him collectively, paying below the lowest level of the NRA.

The NRA investigated the firm and gave the boss a complete whitewash, thus showing which class it serves.

The strikers have experienced their first disillusionment. They have made their first move in the direction of organization. Conditions will force them to make moves which they will make more resolutely and with better planning.

:BOOK REVIEW:

THE UNTIED CASE—By Herbert B. Ehrmann
Vanguard Press, $2.00

It is six years since the two martyrs, Sacco and Vanzetti, were framed and murdered by the State powers of Massachusetts for a crime that a professional gang had committed. This gang was known as the Morrelli gang of Providence, R. I. According to the confession made by Castellino Madeciros, one of the gang who took part in the South Braintree hold-up on April 15th, 1920, where a paymaster and a guard were killed for which Sacco and Vanzetti, innocent victims, were executed.

On August 22, 1933, six years after the legal lynching of Sacco and Vanzetti, Ehrmann, one of the defending counsels that were assigned to investigate the Madeciros confession, for the first time tells the real inside story of the South Braintree crime to the public. On reading this book that is full of so many facts, names, dates, names of gangsters, etc., pertaining to this gangster murder, one wonders why it is that the legal defenders of Sacco and Vanzetti, withheld the story from the international working class and intellectuals who demanded freedom for Sacco and Vanzetti. The answer is, in Ehrmann's own words found on the last page of the preface, "Until Governor Fuller's decision was released on August 3, 1927, Mr. Thompson and I refrained from any public comment. We believed that it was contrary to the ethics of our profession to try our case in the newspapers. The legal aspect of the case, however, has been closed by death, and our duty now is to the record of history." This shows that Thompson and Ehrmann, although liberal lawyers, did not understand that the Sacco and Vanzetti case was a "class" case. Their clients understood it very well. The lawyers did not want any public demonstrations or protests. This, they imagined would hurt their clients' case.

This book, published last month, gives an interesting story of how the South Braintree murder was actually committed. From Madeciros' confession we see that the crime was committed by six professional gangsters. Their names are all given.

Mr. Ehrmann shows how Madeciros made his confession. It was in Dedham jail at the time together with Nicholas Sacco and he smuggled a note to Sacco on Nov. 15th, 1925 saying: "I hereby confess to being in the South Braintree Shoe Company crime and that Sacco and Vanzetti were not in the said crime." The same note was sent by Madeciros to the Boston American. The note reached deputy Sheriff Curtis but got no further. This note started a long and tortuous journey travelled by the defense attorneys, that led to the exposure of the Morrelli gang.

As soon as Ehrmann had established the facts of the murder, he telephoned to the assistant district attorney prosecuting the Sacco-Vanzetti case. Ehrmann continues "He had been a classmate of mine at college and I felt I could talk frankly to him. To my surprise he showed no interest in the news from New Bedford and Providence."

The author describes how Judge Webster Thayer "listened impassively to the arguments which lasted for five days. He was uniformly courteous and engaged in an occasional pleasant" it was the same judge who denied every motion for a new trial.

What does all this signify? That the whole State apparatus, Gov. Fuller and his Commission containing a Liberal Professor like Powell murdered two workers, not for a crime they committed but for their radical ideas. The only crime Sacco and Vanzetti were guilty of was that of being unreasonably loyal to their class. They were agitators. They did not believe in patriotism and war. They organized strikes. Sacco evaded the draft. They were also on defense committees for helping victims of the "red" raids and deportations. After our Liberal President Woodrow Wilson saved the world for Democracy.

Throughout the whole book there is no hint of a connection between this case and a thousand other frame-ups that have occurred in the day to day struggles against capitalism. It is evident that Ehrmann did not understand this frame-up of capitalism as Sacco and Vanzetti understood it.

The book, however, reads like a detective novel and is a useful document for future historians to refer to. It shows very simply how capitalist courts will reject every proof of innocence no matter how convincing. The book is full of facts and evidence that conclusively proves even to the intelligence of a child that Sacco and Vanzetti were murdered through innocent.

These are stirring times. The masses are getting into motion. Are the militants on the job? If not, then make the start the sooner the better. A very good beginning is to take hold of our literature and bring it to other workers. In this the Militant should be included.

This movement at the time of formation of the County Workers Protective Union. There was nothing incorrect about this characterization, but our Los Angeles comrades point out that despite this policy the Protective Union has since grown and acquired a broad basis. All militants are co-operating in activities within it.

Discussion on the N. R. A. and the Slogan "Nationalization of Industry"

This article introduces a subject which has not formerly been discussed in the Militant. It is therefore accepted explicitly as a discussion article. The views expressed are those of the writer. Other contributions in discussion on this subject are invited, but they should not exceed 100 words.—Ed.

The bourgeoisie is presenting the National Industrial Recovery Act as the answer to the Soviet's five year plan, as the "better road" of capitalist planned economy. The "plan" which is to solve the present crisis and bring capitalism out on the wide-open into the economic land, envisages the formation of trusts along the lines of European cartels on a semi-voluntary basis for the purpose of regulating competition, allocating production, setting standards of minimum wages and maximum hours of work. It includes the aim of raising prices and increasing the purchasing power of the masses.

Exposure of NRA Our Task

It is the obvious task of the Communist to expose this bourgeois method of solving the problems of the crisis solely for its own benefit with the most shameless and criminal disregard of the mode of existence of the working class. This exposure takes on a wide scope. What is here presented is part of a larger discussion on the new problems posed by NRA.

1. We must show that NRA is nothing but a scheme for reestablishing of profits for the capitalists and so ordering industry as to give the ruling class an all-the-more powerful grip on the means of production, the basis of exploitation.

2. It is an attempt to organize American capitalism on a stronger base for the purposes of imperialist expansion. Naturally this includes the possibility of quickly transferring economy to a war footing when the occasion arises. And in fact the present campaign to put over the NRA is but the prelude, the rehearsal for a war campaign. America is in desperate need of imperialist bases on the Asiatic mainland.

3. It permits more efficient and concentrated action against the working class in the event of workers' resistance. At the same time by the demagoguery of fake wage increases and the recanting of the idea that the government stands above the classes ready to mediate in the interests of all, it tries to lead the workers into passive acceptance.

4. NRA is an organized method for untangling the crisis on the backs of the workers. It is the organized method under government auspices of setting the most wretched living standards for the proletariat. It is the nation-wide stagger plan which reduces hours of work at the same time throwing the sop to the workers of a nominal increase of hourly pay, the net result being that the workers lose about one week's pay a month. The wages thus saved, it is hoped, will be used by the bosses to hire extra hands.

5. NRA is the attempt to drag the workers either in company unions or under the leadership of the treacherous class collaborationists. It is a weapon drawn against resist the wiles of class collaboration, that the open shop will be put over on the entire American working class.

N. R. A. vs. Planned Economy

6. We must emphasize also that this "plan" is peculiarly unlike what we know as planned economy. For planned economy is the organizing of industry for ever greater production, for the increase of commodities, not for their restriction. This so-called plan is rather the organizing of waste, of sabotage of production, of restrictions of output—in short it is the organizing of hunger with the greatest ingenuity, simply and solely for profits. The allocation of production within the cartel means rendering idle and useless a large percentage of the machinery of production. It has even been proposed to tax such idle machinery out of existence. (Note Eastman's plan for scrapping old railroad equipment.) The plan supposedly involves the figuring of costs of production, but to engage in any real analyses of the capitalist mode of production would mean the exposure of its anarchy before the entire working class, would show up the serious disproportions of capitalism in the various sections of the country, would expose to full view the waste and inefficiency of production under the present system, particularly as concerns the quantity of machinery left in complete idleness in the various large plants. Rather than attempt to set a uniform system of accounting which would virtually involve the determination of the socially-necessary labor entering into the production of a commodity, the administration has been forced to abandon this ambitious undertaking and to adopt a "blanket" code. The other codes being adopted imitate the generalities of this blanket code.

No, this is no planned economy; such an economy can only be set in motion by the proletariat who alone can see to it that not the workers exist for production but production for the workers, who alone can produce for use and not for profit.

7. The relation of NRA to inflation is worthy of closer attention than is here possible. Government inflation has become a necessity for the bourgeoisie as a class. NRA is one of the ways of preparing for the later stages of inflation and is itself, thru the price-fixing provision, an attempt to "control" the course of the "inevitable" inflation.

Aims of the Communists

Not alone does the Communist expose the real nature of this bourgeois attack on the working class, but he participates in all the immediate struggles of the workers—whether for higher wages, better conditions, the right to strike, the rights of unionism for the rights of the worker to democratic justice, etc.—for the purpose of guiding the immediate aims of the struggle so that they coincide with the interests of the class as a whole, and also for the purpose of gaining the confidence of the proletarians through correctness of policy, and through struggle as to make the worker politically conscious in his resistance to the ruling class.

Lenin states that "the workers can acquire political consciousness only from without, only outside of the economic struggle, outside of the sphere of relations between workers and employers." Hence our task "is not merely to serve the labor movement at each of its separate stages, but to represent the movement as a whole, to point out to this movement its ultimate aims and its political basis, and to protect its political and ideological independence. Isolated from Social Democracy (read Communism) the labor movement becomes petty and inevitably becomes bourgeois: in conducting only the economic struggle the working class loses its political independence; it becomes the tool of other parties and runs counter to the great slogan: "The emancipation of the workers must be the task of the workers themselves."

"To facilitate the political development and the political organization of the working class is our principal and fundamental task. Those who push this task into the background, who refuse to subordinate to it all the special tasks and methods of the struggle, are straying on to the wrong path and cause serious harm to the movement."

Function of Intermediate Slogans

At each stage of development it becomes the task of the Communist to search for that particular and precise intermediate slogan which will perform best the service first of being of actual benefit to the workers; secondly, which will aid in rallying the workers for resistance to the ruling-class solution and in favor of its own solution to a serious social problem; in this case the problem of the crisis; thirdly, that will lead the workers along the path of class struggle towards our final goal of the seizure of power. Is there such a slogan that presents itself at this time in any given industries? I believe there is but a few words are necessary before stating it in its general terms first.

The Communist must be quite clear as to what constitutes progressive development of economic forces. For example, no Communist can be opposed to the process of trustification. On the contrary we look upon this process as inevitable. What we do oppose is bourgeois control of the vast power embodied in highly concentrated industry, and we propose to substitute our own class content in place of the capitalist class content of trusts. In similar fashion we are not opposed to unions, but we are opposed to company unions; that is, to unions permeated by capitalist influence. No institution or social instrument is sacrosanct to the working class on this very account. Thus in the struggle for power

Soviets arise. If these Soviets are captured by the bourgeoisie so that they become ruling-class instruments we stand opposed to them. Thus too we are against capitalist trusts, with the emphasis on capitalist. We assume no responsibility for the bourgeois mode of concentrating industry, but we intervene at all stages of the process to advance the working class movement along the path of revolutionary struggle.

The Slogan of Nationalization, For "Ripped" Industries

Speaking still in the narrow but perfectly clear sense of the terms, it is rare that an economic struggle presents itself at the same time as clearly a political struggle involving the government and the state. It takes enormous labor on the part of the Communist to transform the ordinary economic struggle of the workers into a political struggle. In the case of the NRA the government has been forced to take the initiative and has thereby presented us with a problem which is at the same time economic and political, involving state power. How can we take advantage of this fact? On the whole the workers incline to accept the pretences of the ruling-class, the demagoguery of Roosevelt that he actually desires to so organize the industries as to put the workers back on the job, and to increase their ability to buy goods. These illusions can be destroyed only by engaging the workers in a struggle which will put decisive tests and give decisive answers, which will lead the bluff of Roosevelt. Why not have the coal miners demand the nationalization of the mines, and the railroad workers that of the railroads? In the eyes of the workers could not the government then put the workers back to work at once? And why should not the workers participate in the control of production and in the administration of the industry? The problem of nationalization cannot of course be "imposed" on any industry at all from without. It must link up with the concrete fighting slogans and arise as a working class demand along with and from these narrower slogans. With this in view we will attempt to show the applicability of the slogan of nationalization to mining and the railroads in later articles.

A Firm Nucleus for A New International Emerges

The conference is over. As yet we have neither the minutes nor the final text of the resolution. Nevertheless the principal conclusions can be drawn. These conclusions are entirely favorable to the Left Opposition. This can be seen best of all by the comparison of what we expected to obtain and what we obtained. In preliminary discussions and correspondence we all agreed that if we should succeed in getting four or even three signatures under a clear and precise document in favor of the new International, we would make an enormous step forward. We obtained the four signatures that we counted on (the Revolutionary Socialist Party of Holland, the Socialist Labor Party of Germany and the Independent Socialist Party of Holland together with the International Left Opposition) under a document which is the only tangible result of the conference and which may and should become of historic importance.

We achieved this momentous result not by some chance combination or skillful maneuvers (on the contrary, in this field we made some errors) but due to the fact that the historic step made by us has fully matured. In spite of ten years of world wide baiting and slander of the Left Opposition; in spite of the fact that this slander left its trace even in the consciousness of the elements of Stalinism, among them in the ranks of the social-democratic workers; in spite of all this, three organizations which lead a few tens of thousands of workers found no other path but to unite with us on a common document which presupposes a long and stubborn struggle. A wide breach was made in the wall surrounding the Left Opposition. We can expect with certainty that new and more organizations and fractions which are pushed to the revolutionary path by the whole situation will with every passing month convince themselves that the only banner under which the proletarian vanguard can rally is the banner of Bolshevism-Leninism.

Only Serious Result

The Declaration of four is called above the only serious result of the Paris conference. As far as the vague decisions of the majority are concerned, they have no future. This will not be hard to understand if we should analyze the composition of the conference. If the delegates of the four organizations which signed the declaration made up its Left wing, then the Right wing was made up of the representatives of the Norwegian Workers party which aims at the creation of a Scandinavian "International" through an alliance with the Swedish and Dutch social-democracy and is afraid, therefore, to compromise itself by proximity to Communists. One must be a hopelessly naive person, or what is worse, an unprincipled schemer to hope for a union or collaboration with this, through and through, opportunistic party or with the small groups which gravitate to it like the French Pupils, the Italian Maximalists, the Catalan Federation of Maurin, the Polish group of Doctor Cruck, or the altogether humorous party of Steinberg (former "People's Communist").

Urbahns represented at the conference that little which remained of the Leninism. If, with all his best revolutionary intentions, Urbahns proved anything in the last years, it is his total incapacity for collective work, on one side, and for systematic thinking, on the other. Along his laughable theory of "state capitalism" which puts on the same level the U. S. R. the U. S. A., the Germany of Hitler and the Italy of Mussolini excludes the possibility of joint work with him in the creation of a new International.

The Swedish Ind. Communists

The Swedish Independent Communist party (Kilbom) and the British Independent Labor Party stand in a class by themselves. Both these organizations are at the crossroads. The Swedish party represents too solid a workers' organization to follow the policy of Brandler-Thälheimer, based entirely on the servile hope that, perhaps, Manulsky will pardon them and call them to power. On the other hand, the party of Kilbom is, apparently, as yet strongly infected with rightist tendencies and especially with distrust towards the Left Opposition. It cannot retain its present intermediary position. It must make a choice. We must help it make the right choice.

If the party of Kilbom vacillates between the Right and the Left Communist oppositions, the Independent Labor party vacillates between the Comintern and the new International. Maybe not at once, but inevitably the bureaucrats of the Comintern will push the Independent Labor Party on the road of the new International. Sooner or later this party, at least its revolutionary nucleus, and we shall meet. It is absolutely clear, that the decisions adopted by such a heterogeneous majority can have only a platonic, decorative character. Not a few are all too willing to "condemn" the Second International, to shout about its bankruptcy, so as to carry on in practice a policy of opportunism. Not a few are willing to shout about the bankruptcy of the Third International so as to carry on in reality a policy of back-stage combinations which are in spirit very much akin to bureaucratic centrism. Not only are denunciations of the Second and Third Internationals insufficient to advanced workers but the bare admission of the necessity of a new International does not suffice either. It is necessary to say clearly what International we have in mind: the restoration of the miserable Two and a half International, or the nomination of the international proletarian vanguard on the basis of a revolutionary program really corresponding to the problems of our epoch. To elaborate such a program in the company of Tranmæ, Louis Selier, Maurin and others, or even to support the fiction of an international organization in common with them would mean to sow chaos and ideological demoralization instead of the necessary saving clarity.

The "Yesterday" and "Tomorrow" of the Movement

"One of the reasons, and not the least, was the defeat of Trotsky's line and the triumph and strengthening of Stalin's line, the building of socialism in one country."

The Polish government like the world bourgeoisie knows who is the real revolutionist. And not alone the bourgeoisie. Millions of workers will note the reasoning of the Polish Government and draw the correct conclusions. Let the Stalinists rave—

Reichstag Fire Frame-Up Unmasked

The international commission of lawyers at London, which has just concluded its hearings of evidence connected with the German Reichstag fire, has exonerated the Communists framed-up by the Nazis. It accepted the alibis of these accused and found it physically impossible for them to have taken any active part in the fire. It has turned the accusation of the incendiary right back where it belongs—upon the Nazi themselves.

The commission says in its findings, that, "no connection whatever could be traced between the Communist party and the burning of the Reichstag." On the other hand it declares that, "grave grounds exist for suspecting that the Reichstag was set afire by or on behalf of leading personalities of the National Socialist Party."

There need not be the slightest doubt that the findings of this commission are entirely correct. Workers familiar with the Nazi terror and frame-up methods will entertain no such doubts. But what will happen at the trial of the frame-up victims at the Fascist controlled supreme court at Leipzig, Germany, which is now on, that is again a different matter. The accused are in reality denied all defense. The working class of Germany has no means of expression, it is entirely at the mercy of the blood thirsty brown-shirted executioners. Right along these bandits are staging new raids upon Communists and anti-Fascists to keep the demand for more blood alive. They are sharpening the axe.

Workers everywhere protect this outrageous frame-up!

Save these militant workers from the Nazi Axe!

THE FUTURE OF INTERNATIONAL COMMUNISM

Joint Declaration for New International

In full realization of the great historic responsibility which devolved upon them, the undersigned organizations have unanimously decided to combine their forces for joint work for the regeneration of the revolutionary proletarian movement on an international scale. As the basis for their activity they lay down the following principles:

1. The mortal crisis of imperialism which has taken the form of a new (Fourth) International. The undersigned organizations have unanimously decided to combine their forces for joint work for the regeneration of the revolutionary proletarian movement on an international scale. As the basis for their activity they lay down the following principles:

2. The problem of the proletarian revolution bears, by its very nature, an international character. The proletariat can build a complete socialist society only on the basis of the world division of labor and world cooperation. The undersigned organizations, therefore, reject the theory of "socialism in one country" which undermines the very foundation of proletarian internationalism.

3. No less energetically must be rejected the theory of the Austro-Marxists, centrists and left reformists who, under the pretext of the international character of the socialist revolution, advocate an expectant passivity with regard to their own country, delivering thereby the proletariat in reality into the hands of Fascism. A proletarian party which evades the seizure of power under the present historic conditions, commits the worst of betrayals. The victorious proletariat of one country must strengthen its national dictatorship by socialist construction, which remains of necessity incomplete and contradictory until the working class seizes political power in at least a few advanced capitalist countries. Simultaneously, the victorious working class of one country must direct all its efforts to the extension of the socialist revolution to other countries. The contradiction between the national character of the seizure of power and the international character of socialist society can be resolved only by courageous revolutionary action.

4. The Third International which grew out of the October revolution laid down the principles of proletarian policy in the epoch of imperialism and gave the world proletariat the first lessons in the revolutionary struggle for power, fell victim of a chain of historical contradictions. The treacherous role of the social-democracy, the immaturity and inexperience of the Communist parties led to the breakdown of the post war revolutionary movements in the East and in the West. The isolated position of the proletarian dictatorship in a backward country gave an extraordinary power to the ever more conservative and nationally limited Soviet bureaucracy. The slavish dependence of the sections of the Comintern on the Soviet tops led, in its turn, to a new series of grave defeats, to bureaucratic degeneration of the theory and practice of the Communist parties, to their organizational weakening and more than that the Comintern proved not only incapable of fulfilling its historic role but became more and more of an obstacle in the way of the revolutionary movement.

5. The advance of Fascism in Germany put the organizations of the working class to a decisive test. The social-democracy once more confirmed the designation given it by Rosa Luxemburg and revealed itself for the second time as "the sinking corpse." The overcoming of the organizations, ideas and methods of reformism is the necessary prerequisite for the victory of the working class over capitalism.

6. The German events revealed with no less force the collapse of the Third International. Despite its fourteen year existence, despite the experience gained in gigantic battles, despite the moral support of the Soviet state and the plentiful means for propaganda, the Communist party of Germany revealed under conditions of a grave economic, social and political crisis, conditions exceptionally favorable for a revolutionary party, an absolute revolutionary incapacity and had thereby shown conclusively that despite the heroism of many of its members it had become totally incapable of fulfilling its historic role.

7. The position of world capitalism; the frightful crisis which plunged the working masses into unheard of misery; the revolutionary movement of the oppressed colonial masses; the world danger of Fascism; the perspective of a new cycle of wars which threaten to destroy the whole human culture—these are the conditions which imperatively demand the welding together of the proletarian vanguard into a new (Fourth) International. The undersigned organizations have unanimously decided to combine their forces for joint work for the regeneration of the revolutionary proletarian movement on an international scale. As the basis for their activity they lay down the following principles:

8. While ready to co-operate with all the organizations, groups and factions which are actually developing from reformism or bureaucratic centrism (Stalinism) towards revolutionary Marxism, the undersigned at the same time declare that the new International cannot tolerate any conciliation towards reformism or centrism. The necessary unity of the working class movement cannot be attained by the blurring of reformist and revolutionary conception, or the adaptation to the Stalinist policy, but only by combatting the policies of both bankrupt Internationals. To remain equal to its task the New International must not permit any deviation from revolutionary principles in the question of the insurrections, the proletarian dictatorship, the Soviet form of the state, etc.

9. By its class basis, by its social foundations, by the incontestably prevailing forms of property, the U. S. S. R. remains also today a workers' state, that is an instrument for the building of a socialist society. The new International will inscribe on its banner as

Civil War Looms in Cuba; Situation Tense

The situation in Cuba is developing into civil war. Soldiers have been sent against the striking sugar workers to recapture from them the plantations they have seized. The workers are armed and are determined to resist. Conflicting reports state that the soldiers fired on workers; that they fraternized with the workers. At any rate the struggles of the workers for increased pay, better working conditions, and against imperialism has brought them to the point where they are beginning to confront the army. Will the soldiers go over to the side of the workers? Or will the soldiers support the government, which it is leaning ever more heavily upon the Cuban bourgeoisie and the American imperialists? The next days will decide.

With the passing of each day the ground is being cut from under the feet of the San Martin government. On the one hand it is being subjected to enormous pressure from the Cuban bourgeoisie and the United States. The Menocal and Mendia factions together with the ABC are insistently demanding the resignation of the government. The financial sabotage continues unabatingly. Welles is busy convincing and plotting to replace the Martin government with an outright bourgeois regime.

The petty bourgeoisie, too, bringing pressure to bear on the government to drive it to the right, against the workers, on the ground that strikes are paralyzing business and ruining them. In Havana they threatened a 24 hour closure of all business houses "in protest against workers' acts of violence." Another report has it that they "threaten to close their doors unless the government compromises with the opposition (bourgeois factions) and agrees to a coalition cabinet that will satisfy all, win U. S. recognition and restore the country's economic life." Out of fear of the workers the petty bourgeoisie are asking the Cuban bourgeoisie and the U. S. imperialists, to suppress the workers.

The rising tide of workers' struggles is leaving the San Martin government suspended over an erupting volcano. The workers are seizing the sugar plantations and are attempting to operate them by workers' committees. They are arming themselves against the threat of the government to retake the plantations by force. The strike wave is spreading continuously. Santiago is threatened with a complete tie-up. The struggles of the workers to improve their economic condition is bringing them into more direct conflict with the bourgeoisie and with the American imperialists upon the fundamental issues of the Cuban revolution, the influence of Communism is growing.

Condemned to futility and extinction from its birth the government of the petty bourgeoisie, both as revolutionary junta and as its offspring, the San Martin government, has pursued a steady course toward the right, toward the bourgeoisie and American imperialism. Although it came into power as an anti-imperialist government it promised the payment of all foreign obligations, that is to say, of the enormous debt to Wall Street which can be paid only by the sweat and blood of the toiling masses. On the 14th of September it guaranteed the investments of the United States in its statutes: "No one shall be deprived of legitimate property except by competent authority and for verified reasons of public welfare after proper indemnification."

A.F. of L. Leaders Accept Company Union Clause

It is a well established fact that the A. F. of L. executives have always been heading the call of their accepted masters in the government administration regardless of what the exigencies of capitalist politics might require. Its stupidities they have fully shared without possessing any of its far sightedness. Where they have differed, they have usually been further to the right of the capitalist government.

Thus today, when the Roosevelt administration casts its eyes toward the Russian market and discusses possibilities of recognition of the Soviets, with closer trade relations and advancing of credits, the A. F. of L. executives have already come forward with their protest, exposing themselves as even more reactionary than the capitalist government. Perhaps this can be explained by their more ingrained hatred for the Soviets and their greater fear of revolutionary ideas. But how explain the very latest aerobatics of Bill Green and John L. Lewis in obedience to their masters' voice.

The final text of the coal code carried an interpretation of the "amons" section 7 (a) of the N. I. R. A. establishing the workers' rights of collective bargaining through representatives of their own choosing. In this interpretation the following sentence occurs: "The law does not prohibit the existence of a local labor organization which may be called a company union and is composed only of the employees of one company". At first these two gentlemen made a lame protest but later signed the code with this interpretation included, but President Roosevelt, roled it out.

I would thus appear that Roosevelt is more progressive than Green and Lewis. But let us not be misled. President Roosevelt was only a little more farsighted and wanted to avoid the serious trouble which he anticipated with the company union clause remaining. Green and Lewis, on the other hand, showed themselves once more as the servile craven tools of the employers ready to render them service whenever required even at the cost of dealing a death blow to the organization they are supposed to represent.

Silk Strikers Hold Firm; Reject N. R. A. Truce

N. T. W. Forms Splitting Strike Committee; All Unions Must Unite in Associated Silk Workers

Despite all the efforts of the bosses the national silk strike still holds solid. Monday morning, September 18, the bosses of Paterson, the stronghold of the strike made a feeble attempt to open the mills after getting plenty of support from the local newspapers. Militant mass picketing by the workers quickly shut them again. Over 50,000 are on strike for $36, a 30 hour week, two looms and the abolition of night work.

On Saturday the bosses had offered the workers a "temporary truce settlement" on the basis of a slight increase to four and a half cents for 100,000 picks (approximately $22 a week) for weavers and slight increases for the auxiliary crafts until the adoption of a permanent code. At the membership meeting of the Associated Silk Workers—U. T. W., the strikers overwhelmingly rejected the bosses' truce and voted to continue the strike.

The National Strike Committee very correctly pointed out in a leaflet that this offer of only a slight increase by only a part of the silk manufacturers offered no guarantee that all the bosses would accept it. The only settlement acceptable to the strikers is a national agreement.

The strike was called by the American Federation of Silk Workers which is now a part of the United Textile Workers but having local autonomy. The reactionary U. T. W. leaders, headed by MacMahon, did not sanction the strike but attempted from the outset to smash it by maneuvers in Washington with the Roosevelt arbitration board. MacMahon entered into and accepted the truce settlement for which he had no authority from the workers. This treacherous attempt received its proper reward in the unanimous repudiation of the truce settlement, but these maneuvers at MacMahon should serve as a serious warning for the striking workers to be on their guard against further attempts to sell them out. They must be on guard against his endeavors to prevent the Federation of Silk Workers from becoming a really representative organization.

The Jaquard bosses tried to split the ranks of the strikers by offering their workers, a skilled section of the trade, a separate settlement embodying a standard scale. This was a maneuver. The offer constituted a small wage increase for the workers in the lower paid shops and a wage cut of 1 and 2 cents per yard for the workers in the better paid shops. The Jaquard workers unanimously rejected this attempt to split the ranks of the strikers.

Along with the fierce struggle against the bosses and the disruptive tactics of MacMahon, the workers face the danger of disunity presented by the Stalinist controlled National Textile Workers Union. Last Sunday the NTWU arranged a conference of striking textile groups in Allentown, called by the Independent Allentown Silk Workers Union which is under Stalinist influence. Representatives from several independent groups met there and formed "one National Strike Committee". To the 40,000 militant workers following the real National Strike Committee of the American Federation of Silk Workers this dual strike committee can mean only disruption of the strike. Our fellow workers of the Independent Allentown Silk Workers Union have been confused and do not understand that their action leads to a division of the strike ranks.

Already the effects of the dual National Strike Committee are apparent. The Daily Worker of Sept. 14 carried a report of a telegram sent to Senator Wagner declaring that the NTWU does not represent the national silk strike nor the Allentown strikers and that only the "national strike committee" is authorized to represent the strikers.

These things bode no good for the silk workers. The false policy of the NTWU and its efforts to capture the leadership of the strike is not serving the best interests of the workers. The Allentown workers must be made fully aware of the danger that threatens from this direction. The American Federation of Silk Workers must make determined efforts to draw these workers into the main stream of the movement of the silk workers. The sentiment among the Allentown workers is completely favorable to the AFSW. The Allentown Independent workers want a place on the National Strike Committee of the AFSW. This the AFSW must grant to the Allentown workers. In this way can there be unity between the American Federation of Silk Workers—UTW in Allentown and the Allentown Independent Silk Workers.

Perhaps the clearest example of the maneuvering of the Stalinists is to be seen in their work among the warpers in the United Warpers League. This organization although started by the N. T. W. U. as a means to corral the unwilling workers into their paper union has long since got out of the hands of the local Stalinists. They have not abandoned hope of recapturing it. Saturday last a proposal was made that the United Warpers League of Paterson send two delegates to the Allentown Conference. Militant workers in the League got up and denounced the idea as an attempt on the part of the NTWU to lead the independent silk crafts away from the main stream of the silk workers. The proposal was voted down by the warpers by an overwhelming majority. After this conference, the warpers, who were not willing to follow this direct path of division, agreed to send two delegates to the committee formed at Allentown as observers only.

At a Joint Strike Committee meeting of the United Warpers League, the Independent Loomfixers League and the United Twisters Club, N. T. W. U. men on the committee brought forward a resolution correctly demanding that the Joint Strike Committee of these independent craft organizations be represented on the strike committee of the Associated. But it also demanded that other textile organizations

William Green "Friend" of Cuba

"In 1927 Chester Wright, editor of the Federation of Labor, and English Secretary of the Pan-American Federation of Labor, brought to Washington the account of 147 assassinations committed by the Machado regime. This evidence was given much publicity. The New York port workers voted to sabotage Cuban sugar arriving in the port. Then something happened."

"Machado hastened to Washington and met Green in the Belgian legation. Green thereupon issued a public statement that from this date on the condition of Cuban workers 'would be improved'. After all a great labor leader must feel honored when a president calls upon him regardless of the fate of mere workers.

"Wright presently was out of his two jobs, and despite the fact that the conditions of Cuban workers has grown steadily worse, that as men then jailed are today in jail without trial, Green never once has lifted his voice in their behalf."

the party, freedom of criticism and a real inner unity between the leadership and the party majority. Having suppressed and crushed the will of the revolutionary workers, the reformist bureaucracy turned the social-democracy and the trade unions into impotent bodies despite their membership numbering millions. Having stifled inner democracy, the Stalinist bureaucracy stifled also the Comintern. The new international, as well as the parties adhering thereto, must build their entire inner life on the basis of democratic centralism.

11. The undersigned created a permanent commission of delegated representatives and assigned the following to it:

- The elaboration of a programmatic manifesto, as the charter of the new international;
- the preparation of a critical analysis of the organizations and tendencies of the present-day workers movement (theoretical commentary to the Manifesto);
- the elaboration of theses on all the fundamental questions of the revolutionary strategy of the proletariat;
- the representation of the undersigned organizations before the outside world.

A. F. W. Extends Organization

New York.—In the September 2 issue of the Militant the united front mass meeting of the Amalgamated Food Workers and the Food Workers Industrial Union, controlled by the Stalinists, was briefly reported. As we predicted the united front was broken, principally on account of the half-heartedness of the Stalinists' participation. Our comrades and the Gitlowites proposed that a fusion of the two unions take place, because it was evident that an organization drive could not be sustained forever with two unions competing for membership within the industry, and that unavoidably confusion would be created in the ranks of the workers.

The result was that—last Thursday, September 14, the Industrial Union called a mass meeting of the hotel and restaurant workers. The attendance was so poor that the Stalinists were forced to postpone the meeting.

Following this action the Hotel Workers Section of the A. F. W. called a mass meeting for Tuesday, September 19, in the same hall at which about twelve hundred workers appeared. At this meeting several workers described the conditions in the industry, the miserably low wages and long hours prevailing. The meeting was addressed by Dr. Pick of the Mute organization, by Ben Gitlow, by comrades B. J. Field and by comrade Cannon of the Left Opposition.

Secretary Bourget, before adjourning the meeting, made it clear that the Hotel Workers Branch of the A. F. W. is a genuine industrial union, and accepts as members with full rights all workers employed in hotels, not only cooks and waiters, but also dishwashers, porters, elevator men, etc.

The hotel code has been delayed because so far the bosses have not been eager to sign it, since no pressure on them was exercised by organized labor. The first sign of the splendid organization by the A. F. W. of such big hotels as the Waldorf-Astoria, Astor, Pennsylvania and others have made the bosses uneasy and anxious to sign the shameful code with its provisions for a fifty hour week, a twenty cents an hour minimum wage and a whole network of treacherous ambiguities, which by no means will ameliorate the present miserable conditions, but on the contrary will worsen them.

Hundreds of workers are pouring into the offices of the union every day, join its ranks and engage actively in organizing their fellow workers. Daily the numbers increase and before long the entire hotel and restaurant industry of New York City and environs will be covered by this organization drive. This will obviously raise the question of a more decisive and wide scale action which will force the powerful hotel trust to recognize the union and accept its demands for decent standards.

LEAGUE ACTIVITIES

Successful Meetings in Montreal

Montreal.—With the beginning of this fall the Left Opposition in Montreal has proceeded to turn to advantage the inevitable discontent which Stalinist bureaucracy and political stupidity arouse in the neophyte elements. Up to now our group has been very small, all young comrades. But the logic of the German events has more than doubled our sympathizers. Particularly the best youth elements, including YCLers are being won over to our side. We also have some contacts in the Party and the Jewish field is particularly ripe for our activity. We intend to proceed to the creation of a Spartacus Youth Club and an Unser Kampf Club.

On September 3, Comrade Krehm lectured before an audience of 100, including many YCLers and Party members, on the subject of a "New Communist Party in Germany." Sketching the history of the C. P. G., comrade Krehm explained its natural weakness (due to youth) in the November 1918 revolution; its fatal hesitation (thanks to Stalin-Brandler) in 1923, when it had the majority of the working class on its side; and its inability in the last few years to keep back the tide of Fascism due to the "theory" of "social fascism," "united front from below" and its market competition with the Nazis (its slogan of "national and social liberation, etc.).

In the discussion period the Stalinist spokesmen justified their stupidities by the treachery of the social democracy, accused us of concocting before the workers the revolutionary mass actions in Germany which they themselves trump up and repeated Heckert's falsified quotations from Trotsky in defense of parliamentary democracy. We challenged them to a debate which due to the pressure of the crowd, they accepted, intentionally choosing what these "practical" people consider the most academic topic, "Can Socialism Be Built in Russia Alone?"

On September 6th before an audience of 300 the Stalinist representative, Baker, repeated all the scholastic Bukharinist argument, viz., Trotsky has no faith in the inner power of the Russian proletariat in the revolution in Russia has already taken place, not so in other countries! If not socialism shall we build capitalism in Russia? etc., etc., ad nauseum.

In reply comrade Krehm pointed out that it was none other than the Left Opposition which for five years (1923-1928) demanded in vain a speedy tempo of collectivization and industrialization that the workers' republic can be merely the base (for a breathing space though prolonged) for the extension of the international proletarian revolution and not for the independent construction of an isolated socialist society.

Baker declared the very origin of "socialism" in one country to have been mistaken and subsequently to have changed his view! Baker deviated once again from the "general line" by denying that Stalin propounds the Messianic completion of the Russian revolution in one country in the whole world where a self-sufficient classless society can be constructed. The Stalinist spokesman took advantage of his being the last speaker by hurling abuse and making personal attacks.

On September 8th, comrade Krehm lectured before an audience of 100 on "The Foreign Policy of the U. S. S. R." This time M. Bhay, an old party leader, attempted to divert attention from the logic of the arguments made by the speaker adopting an all-wise attitude towards comrade Krehm: what right have you to laugh at Manilsky? The Soviet diplomats know what they're about with their "maneuvering," the very Friends of the Soviet Union and the Anti-Imperialist League show that the Comintern has the international revolution at heart (as if it were a question of good intentions rather than of false orientation), why bring in the question of socialism in one country? Bhay, further, instead of conceiving, as we do, of the Soviet

FROM THE RHINELAND.
Things are terrible in X. Many comrades have been arrested. The students belonging to our group have been expelled from the university. The leading comrade was brutally mistreated and lies in a serious condition in the hospital. At the present moment there is no opportunity for any broader political activity. A printed proletarian newspaper seems like a fairy tale.

In Y, on the other hand, the work is still going on fairly well. The comrades meet regularly, issue mimeographed material and have created new points of support in the big shops.

In general, however, the situation has become terribly sharper in the last three weeks. Difficulties in carrying out work are increasing on every side. In a few weeks the situation should be clearer, but the perspective is one of a long period of hard work. The comrades are almost exhausted.

The C. P. is no longer to be seen in this district. It is "supposed" to be still working in the Ruhr district, but nobody really believes that...

Red Army, as an auxiliary arm of the international revolution, virtually intimidated that only in case of an armed occupation by foreign imperialists of a country close to the Soviet Union with the view of an attack on the Soviet Union, is it permissible to send the Red Army into that country. He also wrongly stated that Trotsky had been for a revolutionary war during the Brest-Litovsk negotiations and that Trotsky himself had favored the slogan of a Labor Party for America. Workers who look to Bhay with respect expressed surprise at his method of argument.

A Criticism of the Militant

To the Editor of the Militant:
Allow me to protest the printing of the article, "The Daily Worker Goes to the Masses"—in the Militant of September 16th.

There is absolutely no law in nature which says that a Communist paper should not take up the question of sports or even breakfast menus; on the contrary, it is obligatory for Communists to approach and penetrate into the sports clubs, social clubs, etc., and present the class point of view there, of course, and explain to the workers the class struggle from the angle with which they are most acquainted with and interested in.

Writing about workers sports or even submitting medical advice is very important and even necessary—in a workers' sports club magazine or the Bulletin of a Workers' Mutual Benefit Society.

For the central organ of the Communist party however, to emulate capitalist papers in their drive for circulation, devote columns of advice to the sick and the love-lorn and the well-dressed, and to waste pages in all sorts of nonsense and tomfoolery of that sort... that is absolutely impermissible. "A Bolshevik paper should be a Bolshevik paper." Its circulation and influence can only be increased by penetrating into the organizations of the workers, by becoming a leader of their struggles and by awakening to political life strata of indifferent and apathetic workers. It can only gain prestige and confidence by posing and answering the burning problems of the working class, providing leadership in workers' struggles and by working out correct slogans, to which the workers will inevitably be attracted. It can only be done in this way.

All this should have been explained simply; clearly; the purpose of a Bolshevik paper, its functions, etc., etc., but it is, either through inability or because he just didn't want to, splurged through a lot of stupidities accompanied by all sorts of "smart" asides worthy of college humor, with "brilliant" fanfaros and frills.

Such stuff does not belong in a Bolshevik paper.

Editorial Note.—It should be needless to say that we agree entirely with what comrade A. G. says about the duty of the central organ of the Communist party. But we cannot entirely accept his criticism of the last we made in our article in question. Moreover, sometimes we even feel a temptation to jest at the humor contained in the Daily Worker political articles and refrain only because it is too tragic. But when confronted with the silly bourgeois apings of these special Daily Worker departments, what else could we do. Sometimes ridicule becomes an effective means of correcting foolishness.

not affiliated to the Associated given representation on the strike committee. This was defeated on the ground that representation on the strike committee "be restricted to those having no political affiliations."

Undoubtedly the rejection of this proposal by the NTW for representation on the strike committee was caused entirely by the suspicion which the disruptive maneuvering of its leadership has created in the minds of the workers. Nevertheless it is impossible to agree with the motivation. The fact that the NTW is under politically conscious direction should in no way disqualify it as a direct participant in a united strike leadership. The correct way to put the question would be, to demand from the NTW that it reenter the mass movement, that it make common cause with the majority organization in the strike and become an integral part of its ranks by joining the Associated Silk Workers.

The independent craft unions of Paterson are in a critical state today. On the one hand they have not yet been made a direct part of the Associated strike committee leading the largest section of the 22,000 striking textile workers in Paterson. On the other hand they are being sorely pressed by the

Painters Strike—Stalinist Union Delays

NEW YORK.—The general strike, called suddenly Monday, Sept. 18th by the New York Painters District Council, to take place the next day, has brought about 8,000 painters down from the jobs.

This strike was not entirely unexpected. Several weeks ago the Brotherhood called a strike for a day to check up on its membership, started an organizational campaign and taxed all working members fifty cents a day. These obvious preparations, the fact that the painting season is at its height, the terrible conditions in the trade, the wave of strikes throughout the country and the NRA gave the Left wing in the Brotherhood (such as it is), and the Alteration Painters Union TUUL, "revolutionary union" plenty of time to get ready for the strike. But as usual they were caught entirely unprepared.

At the meeting of the Bronx local of the A. P. U. the same Monday night the organizer reporting on the strike presented the proposals of the TUUL that we watch for developments in the coming week and to go out on strike next Monday.

This proposal brought protests from the rank and file, some of whom correctly stated that to remain at work would be scabbing and that we should go on strike right away. In the face of this protest chairman Weitz retreated and stated that the TUUL proposal was to go out on strike as soon as possible.

Follow worker Kitt took the floor and demanded that we strike the same time as the Brotherhood. He pointed out that the elementary duty of class conscious workers is to support their fellow workers in a strike situation. He said that remaining on the job, even if only for a day after the strike was declared would play into the hands of the bosses and the A. F. of L. fakers and that the rank and file of the Brotherhood would brand us as scabs and strikebreakers. This, he declared, would result in the complete discredit of the A. P. U.

In outlining the policy that the A. P. U. should follow he stated that the main task of the Left wing workers was to be with the masses and to influence them with the correct class struggle policies. Kitt explained that under the influence of the NRA and the pressure of conditions the workers at this stage are standing into the Right wing unions. This makes it necessary for the A. P. U. to enter as a block into the A. F. of L.

The leadership viciously attacked this point of view with the same line of tripe so characteristic of the Stalinist bureaucrats: "When the workers see through the treachery and fakery of the A. F. of L. they will come to us," said one of them. Others took the floor attempting to justify delaying strike action on the ground that time for preparation was needed, made similar arguments entirely evading the issue.

Attempting to crawl out of a bad hole Weitz amended Kitt's motion for an immediate strike to the effect that a strike committee be elected to decide on the date for the walkout. He succeeded in obtaining the support of the membership for this compromise.

At the meeting of the strike committee, the following evening, the TUUL leaders again succeeded in throwing confusion into the issue of an immediate strike in solidarity with the A. F. of L. painters. Weitz told the workers that if they "felt uneasy" they could stop work. This provoked an uproar, but the confusion remained despite the fact that most of the workers who spoke were for immediate action. Finally a motion prevailed, against the wishes of the leaders to leave the jobs immediately pending the official strike call for Monday the following week. It is therefore no wonder that the workers left this meeting discouraged and dissatisfied.

The Stalinist trade union policy has left the New York alteration painters in a blind alley. These leaders failed to steer a course toward unity with, and affiliation to the A. F. of L. They asked these men to remain on the job while the Brotherhood is on strike. Could there be any better proof that they have failed and failed miserably.

—BILL KIT.

NTW which is making feverish efforts to capture control of the strike and is attempting to use these groups for that purpose. The Associated in Paterson must prevent these craft unions from being drawn into the dual National Strike Committee. That would serve only to divide the workers instead of uniting them. It is absolutely essential for the victory of the strike that the Associated recognize the request of these groups for representation on the strike committee. This step can lead to the further strengthening of the American Federation of Silk Workers as a body embracing all silk workers.

Brownsville Jobless Councils Collapse

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Nowhere has the ineptitude and bankruptcy of the Communist party manifested itself as graphically as in the Party controlled Unemployed Councils. Despite the fact that almost four years have passed since their formation; countless inner party meetings held, and thousands of proclamations issued by the party leadership, the membership and influence of the councils today constitute—zero. Since the inception of the councils, thousands of rank and file Communists have untiringly and courageously devoted entire weeks and months in the struggle to build up a mass unemployed movement. Their heroism and devotion were displayed in scores of battles with the police at evictions, demonstrations and Home Relief Bureaus. Yet all this has gone for naught. The failure that has marked every other project of the bureaucratic apparatus in the past, repeated itself tragically in the attempt to organize the millions of the unemployed.

For example: the Brownsville section of New York City supposedly had one of the best unemployed councils in the district. A few weeks ago the lessons of Brownsville were being discussed throughout the city and Brownsville was the base for the pep talks with which Winters and Sullivan sought to bolster up the flagging morale of the various other councils. The Bryan eviction—the embargo with the police at the Home Relief Bureau—the resulting shocking headlines in the yellow press were pointed out as real achievements of the unemployed. Winters, Sullivan and the other heads of the City Councils knew that while they are making these blatant speeches the Brownsville actions were not the result of any influence that the councils exerted over the unemployed—but rather to the bravery of a handful of Party and YCL members. Yet this was permitted to act as a gauge for carrying out future work. Nothing could serve better to give a true picture of the situation than that. Indeed the very moment that these speeches were being made, the Brownsville Unemployed Council had again relapsed into the oblivion that the sporadic and individual actions of a few comrades had lifted it out of.

Naturally enough, this artificial method of building up a movement has its resultant consequences. What really is the case in Brownsville today? Weeks if not months have passed without a single meeting of the executive, let alone the membership. The unvarnished truth is that neither the former or the latter exists. Entire days pass without a worker crossing the threshold of the council. Secunde and Sidie Berg, secretary and organizer, sit in the headquarters drawing up innumerable leaflets; while they wait for something to happen—and when it does they are helpless. Nothing does however.

Three years of ruinous leadership; three years of disappointments for the workers who come to the councils; three years of opportunistic and reformist policies, have served either to repel or demoralize the unemployed of the neighborhood. And the prestige of the council built up by flamboyant headlines and shrieking sensationalism has disappeared. The very Party and YCL members who are unemployed show that they know the futility of the councils accomplishing anything, by avoiding it as they would a plague.

It is no wonder then, that the Tammany administered Home Relief Bureau has taken advantage of the collapse of the Unemployed Council. The furniture littering the streets of Brownsville bears mute testimony to the havoc that the impotence of the councils has brought in its wake. Even the miserable amount of food that the bureaucrats are in danger of being cut down. Rumors have it and they are not without foundation considered that what is happening, that the Home Relief Bureau will shut down in the near future, this of course would condemn thousands of families in the neighborhood to starvation. Despite this, there is no resistance anywhere. To this dark and gloomy state of affairs have the dilettantists of Stalinism brought the unemployed. Apply this picture to every section of New York City and a true image of what really is happening in the unemployed movement can be gotten.

Why this inability to organize the unemployed, when years of the greatest destitution have presented an unparalleled opportunity to do so? Why after years of experience in working with the unemployed workers and having a virtual monopoly in the field are the unemployed councils shattered and annihilated? It is due, of course, to the incorrect and opportunist approach of the party, which flows out of the general incorrectness of the party line. From soup kitchens for the unemployed it ended with the mere granting and in most cases just asking for a food ticket (amounting to 18c per person per day). There was no prolongation of the fight for higher relief; no continuous struggle for the revolutionary demand of social insurance. Rarely if ever was it explained to the unemployed that to do away with the curse of unemployment—the capitalist state must be done away with. Can there then be any wonder that the unemployed councils have collapsed like a house of cards?

But the unemployed councils can be revived. A wave of regeneration can sweep through the working class drawing the millions of unemployed behind it. The disappointment which the NRA is sure to bring to the unemployed, makes the moment more propitious than ever. It is only necessary to cast behind the proven worthless policies of the City Council and the nihilistic directives of the party leadership. Instead of sectarian, isolated councils with paper membership, a federation of unemployed embracing the various unemployed movements must be formed. The struggle for immediate relief must not be isolated from the fight for social insurance and the ultimate abolition of capitalism. Let the Communist prove from within the ranks of the unemployed that they are correct and they will achieve their objective.

Youngstown Steel Workers Meet

Youngstown, O.—About six hundred enthusiastic steel workers attended a mass meeting of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers held in Youngstown on September 17. Gene Blair, local A. A. organizer, presided. Mike Lyden, one of the Youngstown, A. F. of L. leaders, was the first to speak; he made a good plea for organization but revealed himself to be little more than a typical enthusiastic trade unionist. Then Judge Beckenbaugh, so-called "friend of labor," was given the floor. After dealing in a lot of petty-political, vote-seeking flattery of the A. A. and its "great leaders" such as Gompers and Tighe, this good judge advised the workers to "organize and collaborate fairly with your employers."

Mike Tighe, president of the A. A. was the main speaker of the afternoon. What he said there revealed completely (to those who are able to understand the A. B. C. of politics) the principles and policies of the A. A. and its parent organization the A. F. of L. He said in words almost as plain as the "let be believed in the unity of capital and labor," that the workers who are associates in business with their employers should not try to deprive their bosses of their profit but only ask that the profit be shared between capital and labor.

He spoke frequently of the necessity of cooperation between employers and workers, and said that the workers should always deal fairly with their employers, that they should "organize" and then "discuss" their problems with the bosses, but that they should not "be led into strange pastures"—meaning strikes and other militant action. He echoed William Green in saying that the Amalgamated Association would "help Roosevelt to put over the Recovery Program." Unfortunately, however, the majority of the workers do not yet understand the real significance of Tighe's statements; they do not yet understand that he is only willing to "head" them as long as they do not threaten the interests of capital, that whenever they are forced to take really militant and determined action against the bosses and the government in order to defend their right to live that Green and Tighe and all their sort will be found on the side of the capitalists fighting tooth and nail to keep the workers down.

These workers, as a whole, still have faith and confidence in Tighe, the A. A., the A. F. of L., and they will follow Green and him until hard experience has convinced them that they must take more radical steps in order to better their conditions and solve their problems. They naturally and inevitably look for the easiest, the most conservative way out of their predicament, and they never take a step to the left, towards a more radical program, until they are convinced that this step is necessary and that anything less than this is futile. Many battles will have to transpire, before the workers finally lose confidence in these labor fakers.

Two possibilities then exist: (1) in the absence of workers who have proved their worth and who have a militant program to offer them, they will try one labor faker after another until they quit fighting in despair, helplessly enslaved to capitalism; (2) in the presence of co-workers who have been tried and tested in many skirmishes and trials and who have a practical, fighting program to offer, they will become dissatisfied with their old leadership, revolt, and placing revolutionaries at the helm forge ahead to victory. Consequently, it is our duty to help strengthen the unions that the workers accept, to fight side by side with them, in order that later we can help them to free themselves mentally and physically from the A. F. of L. misleaders and use their organizational strength to defend their interests against the bosses.

We must not make the mistake that the Steel and Metal Workers Industrial Union made at this mass meeting. Although many of the facts and criticisms of the A. A. it offers against this union are true and correct, its policy of competing with it is incorrect at this time under the present conditions. The fact that a few of the workers are ready to join a union with a more radical organizational and economic program does not prove that the majority of them are prepared to do so. And until the majority of the unorganized workers are ready to take these steps it is

Terzani United Front Meet

New York.—The Terzani United Front Conference was called for the alleged purpose of gaining mass pressure and financial support for the defense of Terzani, a young Italian student worker who is under a trumped up indictment of second degree murder for the murder of Pierro, a friend of his, who was killed by the Fascist Khaki shifts at their meeting in Astoria, L. I. The actual reason for calling the conference seems to be that the Socialist wanted to try to hand at stage managing a united front conference. The Socialists, by means of their blue with the I. W. W. and the anarchists and by means of packing the hall during the vote succeeded. That is about all that can be really said of this completely negative conference.

The conference was called by the Terzani General Defense Committee, upon which the Socialist Party, the I. W. W., the Civil Liberties Union, the International Labor Defense, and various Anarchist groups are represented. The Communist Party was not given representation on the ground that it was represented by the I. L. D.

But even less was accomplished than at the Stalinist affairs. This was a "genuine united front" that was based upon the principle of avoiding all points of dispute including particularly all common action. The Stalinist conference amount to the Party and its periphery meeting together and pretending that they represented the workers united. At least at such conference the Party can transact its own business, subject only to a little interruption from the Trotskyites who are naïve enough to believe that united fronts are made for the purpose of uniting all real working class organizations in common action.

At any rate, the Socialist majority passed a resolution putting the conference on record as demanding that Governor Lehman order the indictment against Terzani dropped and the Khaki Shift, who committed the murder, indicted. This was the sum total of the activity of the conference, the Socialist's answer to Norman Thomas's statement that mass pressure alone will save Terzani.

As for the Stalinist minority, they brought in a resolution which was a miniature Stalinist program, which stated the N. I. A. receives its main support from the Fascist bands, the need for united struggle of negro and white, Scottsboro, Tom Mooney, and Sacco and Vanzetti.

Only a Stalinist could support this document, as a whole. Even the Left Opposition could not sign its name to it, because of its monumental confusion on the relation between Fascism and the N. I. A. This minority resolution, did however, contain proposals of action, that are generally correct. These Stalinist proposals for enlarging the General Defense Committee, (of course to include the C. P.) formation of local Defense Committees local and city-wide demonstrations, were referred to the present General Defense Committee, where doubtless they will die a lingering death. We think that it is high time that these maneuvers and bickering when the fate of class war prisoners are at stake be made an end of. It is the duty of every class conscious worker to bring pressure to bear that the Terzani defense be taken seriously on the basis of a united struggle by all organizations willing to fight in his defense.

SUB NOTE

Not since comrade Caplan of Kansas City made sub history in the last drive has there been anything like the work comrade Newby of Youngstown has been doing of late. Within the last two weeks he has sent in sixteen subs. That, of course, is an evidence of the increasing interest of the workers in the ideas of the Left Opposition. But it is also and emphatically the result of comrade Newby's efforts to spread our paper.

That is the bright spot in otherwise unexciting routine of renewals of expiring subs and the steady trickle of new subs. A record like this is very encouraging.

There's a new sub drive coming. The details will appear in next week's issue. This is a sort of warning so that all our sub-getters can shake the dust of their sub getting abilities and warm them up for the contest. All the signs point to a good campaign with more comrades participating in it than in our previous drives.

necessary for the radical unionists to stay inside the conservative trade unions and there prepare the ground for someday competing for the leadership of the union or else a mass reorganization of it. The policy of the S. M. W. I. U. as put forth in its leaflet distributed at this meeting must be condemned for it plays into the hands of the conservative trade union leaders (by allowing them to have uncontested control inside the unions) and thereby indirectly into the hands of the bosses who like to see the radical workers isolated from the conservative ones.

Whither the I.L.P. of Great Britain

The latest political decisions of the National Council of the British Independent Labor party show clearly that after its break with the reformists this party continues to move leftward. Similar processes are to be observed in other countries: a Left wing forms within the social democratic parties which splits off at the following stage from the party and tries with its own forces to pave for itself a revolutionary path. These processes reflect on one side the deep crisis of capitalism and of reformism which is inseparably bound up therewith, and on the other—the inability of the Comintern to group around itself revolutionary currents within the proletariat.

In England, however, the situation is further complicated by an unheard of combination. Whereas, in other countries, the Comintern continues to treat the Left socialist organizations as "Left social Fascists" and as "the most dangerous counter-revolutionists," a permanent collaboration has been established between the I. L. P. and the Communist party of Great Britain. The leaders of the Comintern combine this collaboration with the theory of "social Fascism" remains a mystery. In the July issue of the theoretical organ of the Comintern, Fenner Brockway, the newly appointed secretary of the I. L. P. is called a "counter-revolutionist" as heretofore. Why the British Communist party made a united front with this time not from below but from above, moreover, with leaders who prove to be "counter-revolutionists," and a united front made not for one single practical action but for collaboration in general—no mortal can solve these contradictions. But if the principles be left aside, the matter can be explained very simply: under the exceptionally favorable conditions of Great Britain the Comintern manages completely to isolate and weaken its British section by the ruinous policy of the Anglo-Russian committee, the "third period," "social-Fascism" and the rest; on the other hand, the deep social crisis of British capitalism pushed the I. L. P. sharply towards the Left; not heeding consistency or logic the totally discouraged Comintern this time grabbed the alliance proposed to it with both hands.

We could have and should have welcomed and heartily supported the collaboration of the I. L. P. with the Communist party had it not been based on evasiveness, suppressions and ambiguities on both sides.

Of the Communist party the National Council says that it is "revolutionary in outlook as ourselves." That is all that we learn with regard to the appraisal of the Communist party and of its policy. Every serious and thinking worker will inevitably ask: why are two parties necessary if they have both an equally revolutionary outlook. The worker will be more astonished upon learning that the leaders of one of the equally revolutionary parties consider the leaders of the other party as "counter-revolutionists" and "Left social-Fascists." Possibly from a critical estimation of its ally so as not to undermine the alliance itself? But an alliance of revolutionary organizations which is based not on open mutual criticism but on diplomacy will be thrown over by the first gust of the political storm, like a house of cards.

The theses of the National Council explain the bloc with the Communist party, first, as a step towards the united front, secondly as a stage in the creation of a mass revolutionary party. Each of these two arguments has its weight; but mechanically placed side by side they contradict each other. The theses repeat that the united front should embrace any and all organizations of the proletariat insofar as they wish to participate in the struggle: the Labor party, the trade-unions, even the Co-operatives. But we know well, and not from literature but from the tragic experience of the German catastrophe, that the Comintern rejects the united front with reformist ("social-Fascist") organizations. How does the I. L. P. intend to build a united front with reformist organizations in alliance with the Communist party: only from below and under the leadership of the Communist bureaucracy guaranteed in advance? To this question there is no answer.

Mentioning in passing that the bloc with the Communist party has pushed certain sections of the "official movement" to the Right, the National Council expresses the hope that these prejudices can be conquered by an active participation in daily struggles. The fact that the reactionary Labor party and the leaders of the General Council of trade-unions do not frighten the leaders of the I. L. P. only does the I. L. P. credit. Unfortunately, however, it is not only a question of prejudices. When the Communist bureaucracy declares that reformism and Fascism are twins, it not only criticizes the reformist leaders incorrectly, but it provokes the rightful indignation of the reformist workers. The theses, it is true, say that the criticism of reformism should correspond to actual facts and push the reformist workers forwards and not back; but the Communist party is not mentioned in this connection by one word. What can be made of the theory of "social Fascism"? And how can the policy of the united front be built on this theory? To pass such questions in silence in the resolution does not mean to remove them from life. An open discussion could possibly force the Comintern to adopt a correct position, diplomatic evasiveness can only pile up contradictions and prepare a new catastrophe for the next

Its Present Position and Perspectives by L. Trotsky

Without defining in principle their attitude to official Communism (Stalinism) the theses of the National Council stop midway in their relation to reformism. The reformists must be criticized as conservative democrats and not as Fascists, but the struggle with them must be no less irreconcilable because of it, since British reformism is the main hindrance now to the liberation not only of the British but also of the European proletariat. The policy of a united front with reformists is obligatory but it is of necessity limited to partial tasks. There can be no thought of making the socialist revolution in a united front with reformist organizations. The principal task of a revolutionary party consists in leading the working class from the influence of reformism. The error of the Comintern bureaucracy consists not in the fact that they see the most important condition for the victory of the proletariat in the leadership of a revolutionary party—that is entirely correct—but in that they are incapable of gaining the confidence of the working masses in daily struggle starting as a minority in modest roles, it demands this confidence in advance, prevents attempts to the working class and disarms attempts at a united front because other organizations are not willing to voluntarily hand it over the marshal's baton. This is not Marxian policy but bureaucratic sabotage. A second

Stalin Prepares Treacherous Blow

Soviet delegates, unable to muster any reasons for the justification of violence against comrades Rakovsky, Victor Serge and many others, declared at the conference of teachers which took place in Reims that a trial will soon be held in the U. S. S. R. which will show that Trotskyists have participated in sabotage and counter-revolutionary activities! This is the reserve argument with which Stalin's office supplied the delegate for his journey. Referring to a Moscow radio announcement, bourgeois newspapers afterwards carried the information that a few dozen "Trotskyists" were actually arrested in the Ukraine and charged with sabotage and state treason: they were tration commissions of students and soldiers to settle the disputes between the sugar workers and the plantation owners has yielded to the demand of the imperialists, and has sent troops against the workers. It has also resolved upon the dissolution of all political parties which means, not the bourgeois opposition parties whose supporters have organized armed revolts but the illegalization of the Communist party.

The final capitulation of the San Martin government to the combined pressure of American imperialism and the Cuban bourgeois is indicated by the reports of the discussion among the government, Welles, and the factions of the bourgeois opposition, and the ABC which are preparing a bourgeois coalition to supplant the present set-up.

But no bourgeois coalition cannot cope with the situation on the basis of bourgeois parliamentary democracy. The bourgeoisie can reestablish their rule only by the armed suppression of the workers. If their own forces are insufficient for this purpose—if the army goes over to the workers—the bourgeois can and will call upon the armed might of U. S. imperialism.

For the Cuban workers there is only one road to travel. They have seized plantations, and have set up workers' committees to control and manage production. They are threatening to take over mines and fruit plantations. They must now begin to establish their Soviets as organs of struggle.

For this is necessary a Communist party in Cuba correctly oriented in the questions of revolutionary strategy and the IMMEDIATE and active assistance of the Latin American and, in the first instance, the American proletariat. If the Cuban workers are not to be bloodily suppressed and driven back into the yoke of slavery as frightful as that of the Chinese coolie the American workers must organize a movement against armed intervention in Cuba.

The solidarity of the American proletariat with the Cuban workers is not an abstract or a sentimental question. The worker in the Buffalo steel mills and the Cuban iron miner at Daiquiri work for the same boss, the Bethlehem Steel Corporation. The exploiters and oppressors of the Cuban workers are the oppressors and exploiters of the American workers. They must unite their forces to overthrow their common enemy.

The Cuban proletariat which has entered upon the revolutionary road before the American proletariat cannot wait. The Cuban workers need help now. The American workers must be aroused to come to their aid. That is the immediate duty of the Communist movement.

pure and firm victory of the proletarian revolution—we repeat it again—is possible only under the condition that a revolutionary, that is a truly Communist party, succeeds in gaining the firm confidence of the majority of the working class before the overthrow. This central question is not touched in the theses. Why? Out of "tact" with regard to the ally? Not only that. There are deeper causes. Insufficient clarity of the theses with regard to the united front flows from the incomplete realization of the methods of the proletarian revolution. The theses speak of the necessity "to wrest the control of the economic system and the State from the capitalist class and to transfer it to the working class." But how solve this gigantic problem? For this pivotal question of our epoch the theses reply with a naked phrase: "this can only be achieved through united action of the working class." The struggle for power and the dictatorship of the proletariat remain abstract notions which can be easily dissolved in the amorphous perspectives of the united front.

In the realm of united-front revolutionary formulae the bureaucracy of the British Communist party is immeasurably better equipped. Precisely in this lies now its advantage over the leadership of the I. L. P. And it must be said openly: this superficial, purely formal advantage may under the present circumstances lead to the liquidation of the I. L. P. without any gain accruing to the Communist party and to the revolution. The objective conditions have more than once pushed tens and even hundreds of thousands of workers towards the British section of the Comintern, but the leadership of the Com-intern was capable only of disillusioning them and of throwing them back. If the I. L. P. as a whole should enter today the ranks of the Communist party, within the next couple of months one third of the new members would return to the Labor Party, another third would be expelled for "conciliatory attitude towards Trotskyism" and for similar crimes, finally, the remaining third, disillusioned in all its expectations would fall into indifference. As a result of this experiment the Communist party would find itself weaker and more isolated than now.

The I. L. P. can save the workers' movement of England from this danger only by freeing itself from all uncertainty and haziness with regard to the ways and methods of the socialist revolution and by becoming a truly revolutionary party of the proletariat. There is no necessity of inventing anything new in this field: all has been said and said well by the first four congresses of the Comintern. Instead of feeding on bureaucratic substitutes of the epigones it is better to set all the members of the I. L. P. to the study of the resolutions of the first four congresses of the Comintern. But this alone does not suffice. It is necessary to open a discussion in the party on the lessons of the last decade which was marked by the struggle between the Stalinist bureaucracy and the Left Opposition. The content of this struggle was made up of the most important stage of the world revolutionary movement; economic and political tasks of the U. S. S. R.; problems of the Chinese revolution; the policy of the Anglo-Russian committee; methods of the united front; problems of party democracy; the causes of the German catastrophe. This enormous cycle of problems cannot be passed by. These are not Russian but international problems.

In our epoch a revolutionary party cannot but be international. What is the position of the I. L. P. on this? Having entered into an alliance with the Communist party the I. L. P. has not determined its international position. It broke with the Second International and made an alliance with the Third, but it also enters into a labor alliance with Left socialist parties. This alliance, in its turn, is not homogeneous. There are elements in it which gravitate towards Bolshevism, but there are also elements which pull towards the Norwegian Workers Party, that is, in reality towards the social democracy. What position does the I. L. P. take on all these questions? Is it willing to share the fate of the already historically doomed Comintern, does it want to try to remain in an intermediary position (which means to return by round about ways to reformism), or is it ready to participate in the building of a new international on the foundations laid by Marx and Lenin?

To the serious reader it is clear that our criticism is least of all inspired by animosity towards the I. L. P. On the contrary, we see too clearly that if this party should ingloriously disappear from the scene socialism would suffer a new blow. And this danger exists and it is not far removed. In our epoch it is impossible to remain long in intermediary positions. Only political clarity can save the I. L. P. for the proletarian revolution. The aim of these lines is to help revolutionary clarity to pave its way.

Demand Freedom for Chen Du Siu

The life long fighter in the cause of the oppressed masses of China, Chen Du Siu, still lies in the dungeons of Chiang Kai-Shek. The International Labor Defense needs the Stalinist slander of Chen being a "counter-revolutionist" and renounces its duty to defend him. Yet they fail entirely to explain why Chen is imprisoned by the agents of world imperialism. Chen's long magnificent record in the Chinese movement is well known to these people. They are perfectly aware of his leading part in founding the party and his years of devoted service to it. Twice before he was imprisoned and the Chinese bourgeoisie paid Chen the tribute of arresting him on each occasion the workers brought about his liberation. And this time he is sentenced to thirteen years imprisonment. Arrested last October, after having been sought for by the police for many months, he made a magnificent stand at the trial and now lies in the death dungeon of Chiang Kai-Shek. Fifty-five years of age, a sentence of this kind, under the conditions existing in Chinese jails, means the slow death of our comrade.

Is this great old fighter to be left to his fate? Is the I. L. D. to be permitted to sacrifice the life of a revolutionist because of preservation of bureaucratic prestige of Stalinism? Was not the International Labor Defense organized for the defense of all class war prisoners? Is it not necessary for the working class to make common cause against the imperialist oppressor and his hangers-on? The I. L. D. falls to defend Chen Du Siu because he, after the disastrous experiences in China, adhered to the Left Opposition. He has remained a revolutionary fighter ever since and a fighter better equipped with the weapon of Marxism. The workers everywhere must demand that efforts be made by the I. L. D. for the liberation of Chen Du Siu.

The I. L. P. can save the workers' movement of England from this danger only by freeing itself from all uncertainty and haziness with regard to the ways and methods of the socialist revolution and by becoming a truly revolutionary party of the proletariat. There is no necessity of inventing anything new in this field: all has been said and said well by the first four congresses of the Comintern. Instead of feeding on bureaucratic substitutes of the epigones it is better to set all the members of the I. L. P. to the study of the resolutions of the first four congresses of the Comintern. But this alone does not suffice. It is necessary to open a discussion in the party on the lessons of the last decade which was marked by the struggle between the Stalinist bureaucracy and the Left Opposition. The content of this struggle was made up of the most important stage of the world revolutionary movement; economic and political tasks of the U. S. S. R.; problems of the Chinese revolution; the policy of the Anglo-Russian committee; methods of the united front; problems of party democracy; the causes of the German catastrophe. This enormous cycle of problems cannot be passed by. These are not Russian but international problems.

In our epoch a revolutionary party cannot but be international. What is the position of the I. L. P. on this? Having entered into an alliance with the Communist party the I. L. P. has not determined its international position. It broke with the Second International and made an alliance with the Third, but it also enters into a labor alliance with Left socialist parties. This alliance, in its turn, is not homogeneous. There are elements in it which gravitate towards Bolshevism, but there are also elements which pull towards the Norwegian Workers Party, that is, in reality towards the social democracy. What position does the I. L. P. take on all these questions? Is it willing to share the fate of the already historically doomed Comintern, does it want to try to remain in an intermediary position (which means to return by round about ways to reformism), or is it ready to participate in the building of a new international on the foundations laid by Marx and Lenin?

To the serious reader it is clear that our criticism is least of all inspired by animosity towards the I. L. P. On the contrary, we see too clearly that if this party should ingloriously disappear from the scene socialism would suffer a new blow. And this danger exists and it is not far removed. In our epoch it is impossible to remain long in intermediary positions. Only political clarity can save the I. L. P. for the proletarian revolution. The aim of these lines is to help revolutionary clarity to pave its way.

only in the bloc of four which signed the Declaration but also in the Committee of the majority (together with two representatives of the I. L. P. and one representative of the Norwegian party). We, the Left Opposition, cannot expect and do not expect anything positive from this Committee. We consider the participation of two of our allies (S. A. P. and O. S. P.) in the Committee (the RSP, the party of Socialists does not enter in the Committee) as a glaring contradiction. We consider also the voting of the S. A. P. for the resolution of the majority as a grave political error which is capable of only sowing illusions and confusion. But it would be entirely wrong if we should on this basis renounce the honest attempt at collaboration with these two allies. Their participation in a bloc with us is the tomorrow. Their participation in the "Committee" is the yesterday.

Revolutionary irreconcilability consists not in demanding that our "leadership" be recognized a priori, not in presenting our allies at every occasion with ultimatums and threatening with a break, with the removal of signatures, etc. We leave such methods, on one hand, to the Stalinist bureaucrats, on the other—to some impatient allies. We realize full well that disagreements between us and our allies will arise more than once. But we hope, more than that, we are convinced, that the march of events will reveal in deeds the impossibility of participating simultaneously in the principled bloc of four and in the unprincipled bloc of the majority. Without resorting to any unbecoming "ultimatums" we retain, however, the full right not only to appear under our own banner, but also to tell our allies openly our opinion with regard to that which we consider their mistakes. We expect the same frankness from our allies. Our alliance will only be strengthened by this.

The elaboration of a programmatic document stands now on the order of the day. The Manifesto of the new International should give a general picture of the modern capitalist world (as well as of the Soviet Union), of its economic and political international relations. All the convulsions of our epoch (wars, crisis, fascist barbarism) should be explained as the result of the tardiness of the proletarian revolution. The responsibility for this tardiness must be placed on the Second and Third International. A special chapter of the Manifesto should be devoted to the picture of the decline of both Internationals. Conclusion: the problems of the proletarian revolution, as well as the problems of saving the U. S. S. R. demand the creation of a new International. The concluding chapters should outline the program of struggle of the new International.

The elaboration of such a document is the task of the coming two months. So responsible a task can be solved well only in a collective manner. Although it is a question of a document of an international character, the most important

Alignment of Forces in Mexico

The threatening clouds of approaching civil war once more discernible on the Mexican political horizon. The revolution, which since 1910 has cost that country more than half a million lives, with a minimum of benefit for the toiling masses, again shows signs of surging forward.

The attempt of the national bourgeoisie and the newly rich of the revolution, grouped together under the leadership of ex-president Plutarco Elias Calles, to firmly consolidate and perpetuate the one-party rule of the National Revolutionary Party (P. N. R.) at last seems to have encountered an obstacle that may upset their plans for strangling the revolution at its present bourgeois stage.

A strong Left wing led by Adalberto Tejeda, ex-Governor of Veracruz and calling itself the Left Socialist Party, representative of the radical petty bourgeoisie and various peasant groupings, has definitely split off from the dominant party, and has elaborated its platform, which in spite of demagoguery and confusion presents certain positive features. This new party has openly proclaimed its intentions to participate in the elections in opposition to the candidate of the official and heretofore almost omnipotent P. N. R. An election in Mexico, especially under such circumstances as those created by the profound economic crisis, can mean nothing but an armed struggle for power between the opposing groups. All the political forces of the nation are now aligning themselves for the impending clash.

The National Revolutionary Party (Calles-Portes Gil-Ortiz Rubio-Rodriguez) has moved constantly towards the Right since 1928, and especially within the last two year period. While the demagoguery of the ruling clique has suffered little change unless it be to appear each time more radical in its phraseology, the government of the revolutionary bourgeoisie of 1910, turned counter-revolutionary, has been unable to satisfy the needs and demands of the masses. It has demonstrated its unwillingness and inability to solve the democratic tasks of the revolution, and the stage is being set for the next act.

During the period included roughly between the years 1924 and 1926, the revolutionary workers' movement, and especially the Communist Party, permeated with a national and peasant ideology, product of the soil of the country itself and strengthened by the opportunist colonial policy of the Comintern International, supported the "revolutionary" bourgeoisie personified in Calles-Obreros. The several counter-revolutionary uprisings of the clergy and feudal landlords, were suppressed by the government, thanks in large part to the collaboration of the peasant masses led by members and sympathizers of the Communist Party. Late in 1928 however, with the stabilization of the bourgeois counter-revolution and the adventurist turn in the Comintern International (third period) the relations between the party and the bourgeois politicians were rapidly altered.

tant national problems must find reflection in it. The receipt of various political documents and in general of written or printed material that might help in the elaboration of this or that part of the Manifesto is most desirable.

ON THE DISCUSSION WITH COMRADES OF THE C. P.

(Correspondence from Berlin)

While in our discussions with S. P. and S. A. P. workers we are penetrating relatively easily with our arguments in the questions of the past and of the tasks of the future, we are even today encountering stubborn resistance in part among the comrades of the C. P. G. The superficial dogmatic education, so far as any education at all was received, the setting-up of ready-made "absolute truths" continue to exercise an evil influence, still paralyze the critical powers, and so it is understandable that the bureaucracy has succeeded, with the help of its illegal apparatus, which is again half-way functioning, in spreading new illusions among a part of its members and in temporarily strengthening its thoroughly shaken authority. The inevitable new disappointments, however, will hasten the process of disintegration; further large sections of the working class will fall into passivity, while precisely the best part will necessarily have to be driven to us.

The following conversation is typical:

"So you are of the opinion that precisely now, after the defeat, we must close ranks all the tighter around the only revolutionary party, in order to utilize the patently built-up organization. But how will you act when you receive instructions to distribute leaflets with slogans that are mere phrases, to distribute the 'Red Famine', whose stupid contents you recognize, and much more like this?"

"Naturally I and my comrades refuse such senseless work, which only puts us in danger without any purpose. We only carry out what seems right to us."

"But in this way you are breaking discipline, and if you have not yet been expelled from the party, you can simply thank the bad functioning of the apparatus. Like many of your comrades, you are of the opinion that our demand for the creation of a new party involves your immediate resignation from the party nucleus. But we believe that during this transition time you should carry on revolutionary work in your nucleus, by bringing before the eyes of your comrades, on the basis of the criticism of the past, the necessity of truly Marxist-Leninist policy, new from the ground up. You must recognize that the breach of discipline which is unconditionally necessary with regard to the bureaucracy already represents in fact the first step, which in its consequences contains our demand for the creation of a new party, in which the maintenance of the strictest discipline in action is no longer in contradiction with your political convictions."

For several months the party worked with the perspective of an independent armed insurrection to take place simultaneously with the revolt of Generals Manzo, Aguirre and Escobar. When this rebellion finally materialized however, in March of 1929, the ultra-Leftist slogans of the "third period" were found not to have completely overcome the prejudices of the majority of the party's opportunistic central committee. What actually happened is that the "party" peasants again cooperated efficiently with the ruling bourgeois faction in putting down the reactionary militarist uprising.

Attempts to Crush the C. P. Before the last echos of the civil war in the north had died out, the government drove the Communist party and all of its auxiliaries underground. Several local Communist leaders, most prominent among them, Jose Guadalupe Rodriguez, agrarian leader of the state of Durango and member of the Central Committee of the party, were executed on charges of plotting revolt. Other Communist, trade union and agrarian leaders were murdered, almost all of the foreign comrades were deported and dozens of the best militants of the revolutionary organizations were imprisoned.

A definite period of reaction set in now that the ruling bourgeoisie felt sufficiently strong to no longer require the cooperation of the C. P. and its supporters.

The National Revolutionary Party was then formed in order to better regulate and coordinate the interests of the ruling class and to inaugurate "institutional" rule. Within this party, Calles, while remaining in the background, was enabled nevertheless to dominate the policies, and soon showed himself very adept at playing the different factions within his party against each other, thus assuring his own hegemony over the whole.

Through the enactment of the Federal Labor Code, against which the C. P. struggled valiantly, the labor organizations were placed in a decidedly subservient role in relation to the government.

The "Institutional" Regime and the Crisis

In every other field, the national bourgeoisie of the P. N. R. vaunting its "institutional" program, has attempted to consolidate its position in an attempt to interrupt the permanency of the Mexican revolution, and perpetuate their class rule.

Many enormous difficulties of an economic nature presented themselves. The world crisis has not spared Mexico. The collapse of the petroleum industry and the fall of the price of silver, would certainly have plunged the country into turmoil before now were it not for the agrarian base of the country. Large sections of the proletariat are scarcely a generation removed from the family corn and bean patch have managed somehow to weather the crisis. It is estimated that there are close to a million unemployed in the republic. Mass deportations of unemployed Mexicans from the United States has not helped matters.

Recovery Ballyhoo of the P. N. R.

Elaborate plans for public works, highways and irrigation projects, and schemes for colonization of the unemployed on farms, have been announced and in some cases commenced. The Mexican bourgeoisie has learned much from the ballyhoo methods of its North American counterpart. Dozens of plans, programs and campaigns have been launched, an enormous amount of money appropriated, most of which promptly disappears into the void.

As in other countries, attempts were made to solve the crisis by a national program of economic self-sufficiency, an idea which is of course inevitably doomed to failure because of the oneness of world economy.

The reactionary character of the government's program is becoming apparent to the whole nation. Mass discontent and radicalization grows apace, although the Communist party has been unable excepting in isolated cases to break through its shell of illegality, and take a decisive part in the growing struggles of the masses. The sectarian policies of the party with its splitting tactics on the trade union field, and its ultimattistic attitude towards all non-Communist workers, have hindered the party's growth.

The general sympathy towards the ideas of Communism is growing rapidly. This is expressed in a distorted form through the activities and program of Tejeda's "Left Socialist Party".

In the forthcoming issues of The Militant, an attempt will be made to analyze the Mexican agrarian problem and the character of the "Left Socialist Party" as well as the role that the Communists must play in the next stage, if they are to assume their proper place as the proletarian vanguard.

DECLARATION OF THE DELEGATION OF BOLSHIEV-LENINISTS AT THE CONFERENCE OF LEFT-SOCIALIST AND COMMUNIST ORGANIZATIONS. THE COLLAPSE OF BOTH INTERNATIONALS

Despite the evident disintegration of world capitalism as an economic and social system, the workers' movement of the world is now passing through a deeper crisis than after the smashing of the Paris Commune, or during the imperialist war. Two working class parties of the most industrial country of Europe, the social-democratic and the Communist parties which led behind them 13 million voters, capitulated without a fight before the Fascist regime. Two internationals were subjected to a test and proved bankrupt.

The social-democratic bankruptcy of which became apparent in the imperialist war of 1914-1918, failed to reconstitute its ranks on the morrow of the world catastrophe thereby hindering the workers from going over to Communism and the defeat of the German social-democracy, which has brought the Second International to disaster can and could lead the workers only to new catastrophes. The social-democracy which held on to the end to the soil of rotting capitalism was itself drawn into the process of decay. However the Third International whose task it was to organize the forces of the proletariat for a revolutionary rise against the bourgeoisie of all the countries and for the victory of socialism has also failed in its task. It fell victim to bureaucratic centrism which is based on the theory and practice of Socialism in one country; in a word, it was wrecked by a system of errors which entered into history under the name of Stalinism. At the time when capitalism, torn by world contradictions, placed the international revolution on the order of the day the Comintern became only a submissive and impotent chorus to the conservative and nationally limited bureaucracy of the Soviet Union.

Thousands of Communists are now trying in Hitler's Germany to save the official party by continuing the old policy under the new conditions. With all our revolutionary sympathy for the self-sacrificing fighters we must tell them that wrongly directed efforts and sacrifices will be fruitless. Under the conditions of Fascist terror the Stalinist policy is doomed to a complete smash-up within a short time. An illegal revolutionary party in Germany must be built on new foundations.

After the living march of events had shown that Fascism and the social-democracy, the two polar tools of the bourgeois regime, exclude each other not only politically but physically, it was necessary to put the simple conclusion of this experience as the basis for all our international agitation pushing the social-democracy to the path of a united front with Communist parties. Despite all evidence, the bureaucracy of the Comintern proclaimed the firmness of the theory of social-fascism and having completely blocked itself thereby the approach to the proletarian mass organizations, it substituted a macabre block with impotent circles of pacifists and adventurists for the proletarian policy of the united front. If the lesson of the German catastrophe did not help the Stalinist bureaucracy, building will help it. New national parties and new internationals are necessary.

THE POSITION OF THE BOLSHIEV-LENINISTS

The participants to the present conference are of different political origin. Some split off in recent years from the parties of the Second International; there are finally some of a mixed or intermediary origin. Some acted as independent parties, others considered themselves and worked as fractions. If these organizations came together today for the first time at a common conference to try and find bases for joint work, all of them have by this very fact openly admitted the necessity for the welding together of the proletarian vanguard on new foundations.

With regard to Germany our international organization (Bolshevik-Leninists) has after serious and heated debates almost unanimously adopted this position. With regard to the Comintern as a whole, the question was formally placed by us for discussion only within the last couple of weeks. We are speaking here in the name of the International Plenum of the Bolshevik-Leninists which has approved this declaration. Our national sections have not as yet had time to fully express themselves. But the question has been prepared to such an extent by the foregoing development of events as well as by the development of the Left Opposition itself; that we have no doubt as to the verdict of our organizations. At any rate the final word belongs to our sections.

Some participants of the present conference are probably of the opinion that we came to the break with the Stalinist bureaucracy with unnecessary belatedness. It is not the place here to return to the old disputes. The fact, however, is such that our policy having taken into consideration objective conditions and not subjective moods, has given us the possibility to form stable organizations of Bolshevik-Leninists in more than twenty countries. Although in their majority they are cadres and not mass organizations, their invaluable advantage lies in the fact that they are based on an international scale by a unity of programmatic and strategic conception which has evolved gradually from the experiences of great events and from the struggles of the proletariat.

THE STRUGGLE WITH REFORMISM

From what has been said already, it is clear, that the break with the Stalinist bureaucracy by no means makes our attitude to reformism less sharp. On the contrary, it is more irreconcilable now than ever before. We see the chief historic crime of the Stalinist bureaucracy precisely in that, that by its whole policy it renders an invaluable aid to social-democracy and hinders the proletariat from going over to the path of revolution.

For us, Bolshevik-Leninists, and we trust, also for all of you there can even be no thought of constant work in common with organizations which have not broken with the principle foundations of reformism, which continue to hope for the regeneration of the social democracy as a party or which consider the unification of the Second and Third Internationals as their mission. Groupings permeated by such tendencies can only pull the workers backwards. And we, basing ourselves on all the lessons of the past, we want to go forward.

The "21 conditions" for the acceptance to the Communist International elaborated in its time by Lenin for the purpose of a decisive separation from all types of

BOOK REVIEW:

U. S. S. R. and World Revolution, by M. T. Florinsky, MacMillan Co. $2.50.

Somebody, sooner or later, was bound to write this book. To readers of the Militant, however, there will be little in it that he or she is not already acquainted with.

Written from a professorial objective (above the classes) point of view, the book does manage to give a fairly accurate picture of the attitude of the Soviet government, the party and the Communist International leadership to the question of World Revolution from the earliest days of the Dictatorship to the present. Mr. Florinsky has, in fact, confined his book to examining that one particular question...

As would be apparent, any effort at approaching the question of World Revolution would of necessity bring in the struggle between Stalin and Trotsky—or to express it in a less personal manner—between Socialism in One Country and the Permanent Revolution. The author used as his main sources of reference the theses and statutes of all the six congresses of the Comintern and comrade Trotsky's Permanent Revolution and the French edition of "The Communist International After Lenin." (The Criticism of the Draft Program, Strategy of the World Revolution).

After explaining and quoting with an air degree of accuracy from these documents, Mr. Florinsky comes to some conclusions: The first years of the Russian revolution he characterizes as the "heroic" period. It was a period when of a sudden a group of revolutionists—world revolutionists—had suddenly seized the reins of power in a country the size of one-sixth the earth's surface. Inspired by their sudden success and still mindful of the teachings of that "bearded German professor with a black frock coat" they saw the revolution as only one link in the chain forged for the inevitable world revolution.

The author looks back upon those early revolutionary utterances of Lenin, Trotsky, Zinoviev, Radek with a relieved, if somewhat, superior and tolerant feeling. It was, at least, not without a certain "grandeur" and it was "heroic." True the Marxists of it was a little closer to the latter than the present day Stalinist brand. True enough the Communist International of those days was much more of a threat to the world bourgeoisie than the present edition of it. But, forgives Mr. Florinsky, those were "romantic" days in a "heroic" period. Let us not quibble with the author if he fails to see the whys and the wherefores of the events of 1923 in Germany. Or the raison d'être for the fascies in Hungary, Finland, etc. Others who make greater claim to being Communists have not been able to analyze the distinction between the objective and the subjective factors in the revolution as related to the party and the class.

What is important, however, is that the author is able to distinguish between a revolutionary utterance and a nationalist utopian one. Though he wouldn't call it utopian—but sober. With the decline of the "romantic" era, continues our author, an era of sober and responsible stock-taking took place. Stalin came forward with the theory (bless the mark!) of Socialism in One Country. Trotsky reaffirmed the vitality and moving force of the theory of Permanent Revolution. Mr. Florinsky recognizes that the latter theory has much more Marxian logic than the former, but—the former (Socialism in One Country) is more sound state policy. So far as the author is concerned, a shift from the policy of World Revolution (the U. S. S. R. as the first fortress of the world revolution) was bound to take place—and needless to say, he welcomes it. As Mr. Florinsky would have it, it was the necessity of keeping Russia in step with the progress and development akin to all nations, that is, finding a mar-reformism and anarchism, acquire at this stage again an urgent character. It is of course not a question of the text of this document which should be radically changed in accordance with the conditions of the modern period but of its general spirit of revolutionary Marxist irreconcilability.

Only under the condition of irreconcilable separation from reformism is it possible and necessary to enter into friendly cooperation with all those proletarian organizations which are actually developing from reformism towards Communism. We condemn and reject categorically the mode of actions of the Stalinist bureaucracy which treats as "left social-Fascists" all revolutionary organizations which—by the fault of the Comintern—and themselves outside the Comintern, and on the morrow of a catastrophe next in turn touchingly invites them into the Comintern as "sympathizing" parties. The Comintern is capable only of decomposing and destroying proletarian organizations but not of strengthening and educating them. The cooperation which we have in mind presupposes an honest attitude to facts, ideas, mutual comradely criticism and respect for each other.

THE FIRST FOUR CONGRESSES OF THE COMINTERN.

Revolutionary policy is unthinkable without revolutionary theory. Here we need least of all to start from the beginning. We stand on the basis of Marx and Engels. The first congresses of the Communist International left us an invaluable programmatic heritage; the character of the modern epoch as an epoch of imperialism, that is, of capitalist decline; the nature of modern reformism and the methods of struggle with it; the relation between democracy and proletarian dictatorship; the role of the party in the proletarian revolution; the relation between the proletariat and the petty bourgeoisie (especially the peasantry (agrarian question); the problem of nationalities and the liberation struggle of colonial peoples; work in the trade unions; the policy of parliamentarism, etc.—all these questions have been subjected to a principled analysis by the first four congresses which has remained unsurpassed until now.

One of the first, most urgent tasks of those organizations which have inscribed on their banners the regeneration of the revolutionary movement consists in separating from the general mass the principle decisions of the first four congresses, in bringing them in order and in subjecting them to a serious discussion in the light of the future tasks of the proletariat; the present conference must, in our opinion, indicate the ways and the first steps of this necessary work.

STRATEGIC LESSONS OF THE LAST DECADE. The political life of the proletariat vanguard did not stop at the first congresses of the Communist International. Under the influence of historic circumstances, that is, of the march of the class struggle, the apparatus of the Comintern has completely gone over from Marxism to Centrism, from internationalism to nationalism, limitedness. If the building of the Third International was impossible without cleansing the teachings of Marx from the layers of reformism, so now the creation of revolutionary parties of the proletariat is unthinkable without cleansing the principles and methods of Communism from the layers and falsifications of bureaucratic centrism.

The struggle of the Left Opposition against the oscillations of the Stalinist apparatus connected with numerous and heavy sacrifices is imprinted in a series of documents of a programmatic and strategic character. In accordance with the most important political stages of the last decade the following problems have been illuminated in these documents: the economic construction of the U. S. S. R.; the party regime; the policy of the united front (Anglo-Russian Committee, on one side, the German experience, on the other); the path of the Spanish revolution ("democratic dictatorship"); the fight against "Fascism"; the fight against "Fascism"; etc. The basic conclusions of a ten year struggle are given in a form of a synopsis in the "11 points" of the International Pre-Conference of the Left Opposition. We are submitting this programmatic document here to your attention.

It is superfluous to say that on our part, we will consider with the greatest attention all the theses, resolutions and programmatic declarations in which other organizations represented here have expressed or may express their estimation of the tasks and perspectives. We do not want anything so much as the mutual exchange of experience and ideas. We wish to state with great satisfaction that the "Declaration of Principles" of the Revolutionary Socialist Party of Holland concurs on all the basic questions with the platform of the International Left Opposition.

The present pre-conference cannot of course discuss with the necessary profundity the programmatic and strategic lessons of the world revolutionary struggle. But it is time to make a start. We permit ourselves to express the wish that each of the organizations represented here review our "11 points" in their press with the necessary commentaries, and that afterwards the possibility be given us to defend our theses in the same press in discussion order. On our part we obligate ourselves to publish for the information and discussion of our sections every programmatic document which may be introduced by other organizations and shall willingly give to the defenders of the document corresponding space in our press.

THE U. S. S. R.

The question of the U. S. S. R. is of exceptional importance to the workers' movement of the world and therefore also to the correct orientation of the present conference. We, Bolshevik-Leninists, consider the U. S. S. R. even in its present form as a workers' State. This estimation needs no illusions or embellishment.

One cannot feel anything but contempt for those "friends" of the U. S. S. R. who declare every work of criticism against the Soviet bureaucracy as a counter-revolutionary act. If revolutionists had been guided by such rules of conduct, the October revolution would have never taken place.

We reject as a mockery of Marxism thought, the Brandlerian position according to which the policy of the Stalinist bureaucracy represents a chain of errors in all other countries, but remains infallible in the U. S. S. R. Such a "theory" is based on the negation of the general principles of proletarian ism and brings the international down to a mere sum total of national parties the leaders of which are always ready to close their eyes to mutual sins. A Marxian can have nothing in common with this social-democratic conception.

The policy of the Stalinist bureaucracy in the U. S. S. R. is of the same principle nature as the policy of the Comintern. The difference lies not in methods but in objective conditions: in the U. S. S. R. the bureaucracy bases itself on the foundations laid by the proletarian revolution, and if in a decade it succeeded in squandering the capital of the Comintern, in the U. S. S. R. it has undermined but not liquidated the foundations of the socialist state. The Soviet proletariat, practically deprived of the party, trade unions and Soviets which were seized by the bureaucracy, defends by its revolutionary traditions the workers' state from a bourgeois overturn.

To identify the social order of the U. S. S. R. with "state capitalism" or German type, is to ignore the main question of the social order, namely the property character and to open the doors wide to false and dangerous conclusions. On this question there can be for us no ambiguities and no compromises. The defense of the workers' state from imperialism and counter-revolution remains as heretofore the duty of every revolutionary worker. But to serve this defense does not at all mean to become a tool of Soviet diplomacy.

The acts and declarations of Soviet diplomacy have provoked not only from the party but also from the trade unions radically or critically inclined workers. If they are not to be misled by bureaucratic positions; on the other hand, it frees its ministers, parliamentarians, journalists and propagandists from submitting to discipline with regard to the party. The combined methods of repression, betrayal and bribery permit the social-democracy to retain the semblance of discussions, elections, control etc., while remaining at the same time the apparatus of the imperialist bourgeoisie within the working class.

By means of the state apparatus, the Stalinist bureaucracy liquidated the party, Soviet and trade-union democracy not only in essence but also in form. The regime of personal dictatorship has been fully transmitted from the C. P. U. to all the parties of the capitalist countries. The party bureaucrats' sole aim is to interpret the supreme will. The party masses have only one right: to keep silence and to obey. Repressions, bribery are the usual methods for keeping "order" in the party. Such is the path of decay and ruin of the proletarian parties.

A revolutionist is brought up only in the atmosphere of criticism of all that exists, including also his own organization. A firm discipline can be attained only by conscious trust in the leadership. The trust can be gained not only by correct policy but also by an honest attitude to one's mistakes. The question of the inner regime acquires for us thus an extraordinary importance. The advanced workers must be given the possibility of a conscious and independent participation in the building of the party and in the direction of its whole policy. Young workers must be given the possibility to think, criticize, make mistakes and correct themselves.

It is clear, on the other hand, that the regime of party democracy can lead to the creation of a hardened and malicious army of proletarian fighters only in case our organizations basing themselves on the firm principles of Marxism, are ready to fight irreconcilably but with democratic methods, all opportunistic, centrism and adventurist influences.

The orientation towards a new international is dictated by the whole course of development. This does not mean, however, that we propose to proclaim a new international immediately. We would have introduced such a proposal without hesitation had the organizations represented here already been in actual, that is tested by experience, agreement with regard to the basic principles and methods of revolutionary struggle. But we have not got it. We can arrive at a principle unanimity and therefore on an international only through joint revolutionary work and serious mutual criticism.

A new international cannot be prepared without practical participation in the unfolding events. To compromise a programmatic declaration would of course be false. It is necessary to combine the two. We welcome the fact that the conference placed on the agenda urgent questions in connection with the fight against Fascism and against war, and in each of these fields we are ready, hand in hand with other organizations to make a real step forward.

Comrades! Without leadership, without international direction the world proletariat will be unable to free itself from the present oppression. The creation of a new international depends not only on the objective course of events but also on our own efforts. It is very likely that already now we are much stronger than it may seem to many of us. Not in vain does history show us how an organization possessing authority but having lost directly many for a long time keep on piling up errors seemingly unpunished; but finally the course of events brings the inevitable collapse. On the contrary, an organization which is armed with a reliable compass but has for a long period remained in an insignificant minority, can without the advance of a historic turn suddenly rise to a higher level. Under the condition of correct policy on our part, such a possibility opens up before us. With joint forces let us try not to miss this opportunity. Our revolutionary responsibility is immeasurably great. Let our creative work rise to the height of this responsibility.

THE U. S. S. R.

The question of the U. S. S. R. is of exceptional importance to the workers' movement of the world and therefore also to the correct orientation of the present conference. We, Bolshevik-Leninists, consider the U. S. S. R. even in its present form as a workers' State. This estimation needs no illusions or embellishment.

One cannot feel anything but contempt for those "friends" of the U. S. S. R. who declare every work of criticism against the Soviet bureaucracy as a counter-revolutionary act. If revolutionists had been guided by such rules of conduct, the October revolution would have never taken place.

We reject as a mockery of Marxism thought, the Brandlerian position according to which the policy of the Stalinist bureaucracy represents a chain of errors in all other countries, but remains infallible in the U. S. S. R. Such a "theory" is based on the negation of the general principles of proletarian ism and brings the international down to a mere sum total of national parties the leaders of which are always ready to close their eyes to mutual sins. A Marxian can have nothing in common with this social-democratic conception.

The policy of the Stalinist bureaucracy in the U. S. S. R. is of the same principle nature as the policy of the Comintern. The difference lies not in methods but in objective conditions: in the U. S. S. R. the bureaucracy bases itself on the foundations laid by the proletarian revolution, and if in a decade it succeeded in squandering the capital of the Comintern, in the U. S. S. R. it has undermined but not liquidated the foundations of the socialist state. The Soviet proletariat, practically deprived of the party, trade unions and Soviets which were seized by the bureaucracy, defends by its revolutionary traditions the workers' state from a bourgeois overturn.

To identify the social order of the U. S. S. R. with "state capitalism" or German type, is to ignore the main question of the social order, namely the property character and to open the doors wide to false and dangerous conclusions. On this question there can be for us no ambiguities and no compromises. The defense of the workers' state from imperialism and counter-revolution remains as heretofore the duty of every revolutionary worker. But to serve this defense does not at all mean to become a tool of Soviet diplomacy.

The acts and declarations of Soviet diplomacy have provoked not only from the party but also from the trade unions radically or critically inclined workers. If they are not to be misled by bureaucratic positions; on the other hand, it frees its ministers, parliamentarians, journalists and propagandists from submitting to discipline with regard to the party. The combined methods of repression, betrayal and bribery permit the social-democracy to retain the semblance of discussions, elections, control etc., while remaining at the same time the apparatus of the imperialist bourgeoisie within the working class.

By means of the state apparatus, the Stalinist bureaucracy liquidated the party, Soviet and trade-union democracy not only in essence but also in form. The regime of personal dictatorship has been fully transmitted from the C. P. U. to all the parties of the capitalist countries. The party bureaucrats' sole aim is to interpret the supreme will. The party masses have only one right: to keep silence and to obey. Repressions, bribery are the usual methods for keeping "order" in the party. Such is the path of decay and ruin of the proletarian parties.

A revolutionist is brought up only in the atmosphere of criticism of all that exists, including also his own organization. A firm discipline can be attained only by conscious trust in the leadership. The trust can be gained not only by correct policy but also by an honest attitude to one's mistakes. The question of the inner regime acquires for us thus an extraordinary importance. The advanced workers must be given the possibility of a conscious and independent participation in the building of the party and in the direction of its whole policy. Young workers must be given the possibility to think, criticize, make mistakes and correct themselves.

It is clear, on the other hand, that the regime of party democracy can lead to the creation of a hardened and malicious army of proletarian fighters only in case our organizations basing themselves on the firm principles of Marxism, are ready to fight irreconcilably but with democratic methods, all opportunistic, centrism and adventurist influences.

The orientation towards a new international is dictated by the whole course of development. This does not mean, however, that we propose to proclaim a new international immediately. We would have introduced such a proposal without hesitation had the organizations represented here already been in actual, that is tested by experience, agreement with regard to the basic principles and methods of revolutionary struggle. But we have not got it. We can arrive at a principle unanimity and therefore on an international only through joint revolutionary work and serious mutual criticism.

A new international cannot be prepared without practical participation in the unfolding events. To compromise a programmatic declaration would of course be false. It is necessary to combine the two. We welcome the fact that the conference placed on the agenda urgent questions in connection with the fight against Fascism and against war, and in each of these fields we are ready, hand in hand with other organizations to make a real step forward.

Comrades! Without leadership, without international direction the world proletariat will be unable to free itself from the present oppression. The creation of a new international depends not only on the objective course of events but also on our own efforts. It is very likely that already now we are much stronger than it may seem to many of us. Not in vain does history show us how an organization possessing authority but having lost directly many for a long time keep on piling up errors seemingly unpunished; but finally the course of events brings the inevitable collapse. On the contrary, an organization which is armed with a reliable compass but has for a long period remained in an insignificant minority, can without the advance of a historic turn suddenly rise to a higher level. Under the condition of correct policy on our part, such a possibility opens up before us. With joint forces let us try not to miss this opportunity. Our revolutionary responsibility is immeasurably great. Let our creative work rise to the height of this responsibility.

For a New Party and a New International!

After the ignominious collapse of both the Social Democracy and the Communist International in Germany, and the subsequent inability of both these organizations to draw any lessons from this historical catastrophe, it is impossible any longer to conceal the fact that a revolutionary organization of the proletariat capable of leading it to victory does not exist. It must be created anew.

The National Committee of the Communist League of America (Opposition) is in complete agreement with the declaration issued to the Paris conference by the delegation of the International Left Opposition and approves its actions there. The N. C. likewise endorses the steps taken by the four organizations at the Paris conference toward the formation of a new Communist International and will devote its efforts henceforth, in cooperation with all other revolutionary groups and organizations willing to participate, to the task of directly assembling the forces for the creation of a new party, as the American section of the new (Fourth) International.

The entire membership of the League has unanimously endorsed this course after a thorough internal discussion of the question and has empowered the National Committee to proclaim its complete break with the Stalinist Comintern and its American section and to renounce the struggle to reform them. From this time onward the Communist League ceases to regard itself as a faction of the official Stalinist Party, which has become a direct brake on the development of the workers' movement, and invites the cooperation of all revolutionary workers, regardless of their present affiliation or non-affiliation, in common efforts leading to the construction of a genuine Communist Party in America.

Taking the necessity to create a new party as the point of departure, the Communist League proposes a frank and comradely discussion with other individuals, groups and organizations aiming toward the same goal and submits, for their consideration, the following points:

American Perspectives

Under the terrific pressure of the crisis years the conditions have been rapidly maturing for the class awakening of the American workers and for an enormous acceleration of the class struggle. In the next period the social contradictions will explode in a series of gigantic class battles in the course of which the workers can assimilate the revolutionary lessons in an abridged form and rapidly leap forward on the path toward revolutionary action. To assist and guide this process a new party, wresting the banner of Communism from the sabotaging bureaucratic clique of Stalinism, must be created. And, under the given conditions, this new party will have before it the possibility and prospect of expansion into a powerful mass organization within a comparatively short time.

Fundamental Principles

The new Communist Party, the necessity for which arises from the complete bankruptcy of reformism on the one side and of bureaucratic centrism (Stalinism) on the other, cannot consist of an indiscriminate combination of reformist and centrist elements. On the contrary, the new party can come into existence, take shape and grow up to the requirements of its colossal historic task only if it stands on a firm programmatic foundation and tolerates no conciliation toward reformist and centrist currents. For this program no new revelation is needed. The revolutionary teachings of Marx and Engels, cleansed once again of the reformist and centrist distortions and falsifications, are the fundamental principle guide for the new party.

The first four Congresses of the Comintern, conducted under the leadership of Lenin and Trotsky, have concretized these teachings and applied them, in a series of unsurpassed theses and resolutions, to the basic problems of our epoch. The ten-years' struggle of the International Left Opposition (Bolshevik-Leninists), during which the guiding ideas of the first four Congresses of the Comintern were carried forward and counterposed on each and every important question of the living movement to the degenerating course of Stalinism, have been summarized in the "11 Points" adopted by the International Pre-Conference of the Left Opposition. All these documents referred to above retain their fundamental validity and constitute, in our opinion, the programmatic basis for the new party.

For Revolutionary Internationalism - Against the Theory of Socialism in One Country

The theoretical source of the degeneration and final downfall of the Communist International and its national sections, including the American, was the rejection of the Marxist principle of revolutionary internationalism and its substitution by the theory of "socialism in one country". The Communist movement which has been destroyed by this reactionary-nationalist theory cannot arise again without a clear and categorical rejection of it.

Defense of the Soviet Union

The ten-year regime of Stalinism has strangled the party and the workers organizations in the Soviet Union and has facilitated enormously the danger of a counter-revolutionary capitalist overthrow. The Stalinist regime has undermined the foundations of the Soviet state and is leading it toward destruction. The social content of the October revolution, however, is still alive and, by its property character, which is the decisive criterion, the Soviet Union remains, even with the monstrous bureaucratic distortions, a workers' state.

The defense of the Soviet Union, encircled by a world of class enemies and systematically weakened from within by the Stalinist regime, is the unconditional duty of the international proletariat. The formation of new parties and a new international does not contradict this task but is necessitated by it. The reform of the Soviet workers' state in the U. S. S. R., and its defense against capitalist intervention and counter-revolution, now depend upon the formation of strong revolutionary organizations in the capitalist countries which will be capable of putting up a revolutionary resistance at home to capitalistic military ventures and of exerting a pressure on the internal regime in the U. S. S. R. and influencing the Soviet proletariat. Under the theory of "socialism in one country" the role of the Communist parties has been debased to the task of the pacifist "defense of the Soviet Union", and for this all kinds of dubious "Friends of the Soviet Union" have been recruited and hired while the tested revolutionary militants have been persecuted, slandered and expelled.

But it is precisely in the task of defending the Soviet Union at the moment of danger that the present Stalinist parties are most completely impotent. The strongest party of the Comintern, the German C. P., capitulated without a sign of resistance to the Fascist bands before the latter were armed with state power. The possibility that the weakest of such parties can offer any resistance whatever to the military designs of the capitalist states must be dismissed altogether as the most dangerous phantasy. The internal reform and regeneration of the Soviet state and its defense against world imperialism is the joint task of the new parties in the capitalist countries and in the Soviet Union.

The United Front

From its inception, and also in the process of its formation which may be more or less prolonged, the new party will naturally take part in the living movement of the working class and employ therein the tactic of the united front. This tactic, which presupposes temporary agreements with reformist organizations for specific separate actions, requires the categorical rejection of the theory of "social Fascism" and the united front from below only. On the one hand, the new party should conduct negotiations and make temporary agreements with the official representatives of reformist organizations when they take a step forward under the pressure of the masses—a tactic which the Stalinists have rejected "in principle"—and on the other hand, it will reject any proposals for a "non-aggression pact" excluding criticism—which the Stalinists have accepted.

Trade Union Policy

The new party will find its road to the masses and gain influence over their movement only on the condition that it follows a Marxist policy on the trade union question, that is, the most important question of the American movement. Such a policy requires a penetration of the workers' mass organizations as they exist in reality, regardless of their form, and at the same time an irreconcilable struggle against the capitalist agents within them. The Stalinist dogma of "red" paper unions and the opportunist policy of "adaptation" to the reactionary leadership in the trade union movement are equally pernicious.

Against the Right Wing Apologists of Stalinism

The new party cannot represent a mechanical combination of "opposition" groups, but will be obliged to take a precise attitude toward each of them with respect to its platform and, especially, with respect to the general direction of its development. The Brandlerist clique (Lovestone, Wolfe & Co.) which effected a formal separation from the Stalinists with the dissolution of the Right-Center bloc in 1929, devotes itself to servile attempts to reestablish this bloc. It remains in fundamental unity with Stalinism on all the principle questions and shamefully justifies and apologizes for its systematic errors and crimes. The irreconcilable struggle of the new party against Stalinism presupposes and requires an equally unrelenting hostility to the Right wing camp followers of Stalinism.

Party Democracy

The new party must establish within its ranks a regime of democratic centralism which permits freedom of discussion and criticism on the one hand and unity of action on the other. The free election of officials from top to bottom, the control of the officials by the rank and file and the right of every member to express his opinions in an atmosphere free from baiting and threats of expulsion, must be combined with a clearly defined principle foundation for party membership and a disciplined unity of the entire organization in action before the outside world.

Forces for the New Party

The Communist League, as it is at present constituted, does not consider itself a party and has no intention of anticipating the real establishment of the new party by proclaiming itself as such. The task now is to recognize firmly that our role as a faction striving to reform the party of official Stalinism is exhausted, to strike out on a completely independent path, and to prepare, in cooperation with all other groups and organizations moving in the same direction, for the formation of a new party.

In the course of its struggle to reform the official party, as a faction of it, the Left Opposition worked out a program, consolidated a cadre of principled militants and formed the skeleton of a national organization. These accomplishments can be regarded now as part of the capital of the new movement; not all that is necessary for the formation of the party, but contributions to it.

What is needed now is the coming-together of the various groups of revolutionary workers who have broken, or who are in the process of breaking, with reformism and centrism as well as those dispersed individual revolutionists who have been repelled by the Stalinist bureaucracy and remain without affiliation. It is self-evident that the working out of a common program and the eventual concentration of these forces into a single party must be preceded by an exchange of opinion and discussion and, very probably, will involve a transition period of cooperation before the final fusion.

Whatever form the next development may take, the Left Opposition is ready now, to enter into open and comradely negotiations and discussions with other groups which seriously set for themselves the same goal. After its long and unrelenting struggle against the arrogant bureaucracy and ultimatic methods of Stalinism, the Left Opposition least of all can seek to impose anything on others or to demand the acceptance in advance of its proposals, its program or its "leadership". Submitting the foregoing points for discussion, we on our part are ready to give attentive and comradely consideration to any different proposals and to bring them to the attention of our members and supporters by publication in the Militant, together with our comments on them.

With this object in view the columns of the Militant will be open for a discussion of the question of a new Party and a new International.

The Eleven Points - The Fundamental Principles of the International Left Opposition

We are republishing herewith the Eleven Points of the International Left Opposition Pre-Conference Thesis, as amended at the last International Plenum. The amendment is contained in Point 10. Formerly this point corresponded to our position as a faction working for the reform of the Comintern, for the victory within the Comintern of Marxism over the Right and Centrist currents. The present text contained in this point corresponds with our orientation for regroupings into a new International. This text is proposed for the ratification of the various International Left Opposition sections.—ED.

The International Left Opposition stands on the ground of the first four congresses of the Comintern. This does not mean that it bows before every letter of its decisions, of which many had a purely temporary character and in individual practical consequences have been refuted by subsequent practice. But all the essential principles (relation to imperialism and to the bourgeois state; the dictatorship of the proletariat; the relation to the peasantry and to the oppressed nations; soviet; work in the trade unions; parliamentarism; the policy of the united front) remain even today the highest expression of proletarian strategy in the epoch of the general crisis of capitalism.

The Left Opposition rejects the revisionist decisions of the 5th and 6th World Congresses and considers necessary a radical restatement of the program of the Comintern, in which the gold of Marxism has been rendered completely worthless by the Centrist alloy.

In accordance with the spirit and the sense of the decisions of the first 4 world congresses, and in continuation of these decisions, the Left Opposition sets up the following principles, develops them theoretically and carries them through practically:

1. The Independence of the proletarian party, always and under

- all conditions; condemnation of the Kuo Min Tang policy of 1924-1928; condemnation of the policy of the Anglo-Russian Committee; condemnation of Stalin's theory of two-class (worker and peasant) parties and of the whole practice based on this theory; condemnation of the policy of the Amsterdam Congress in which the Communist party was dissolved in the pacifist swamp.
2. Recognition of the International character of the proletarian revolution; rejection of the theory of socialism in one country as well as of the policy of national bolshevism which complements it in Germany (platform of "National Liberation").
3. Recognition of the Soviet state as a workers' state in spite of the growing degeneration of the bureaucratic regime. Unconditional command that every worker defend the soviet state against imperialism and against internal counter-revolution.

4. Condemnation of the economic policy of the Stalinist faction both in its stage of economic opportunism in 1923 to 1928 (struggle against "overindustrialization" and staking all on the kulaks), as well as its stage of economic adventurism in 1928 to 1932 (over-stretched tempo of industrialization, thoroughgoing collectivization, administrative liquidation of the kulaks as a class). Condemnation of the criminal bureaucratic legend that "the soviet state has already entered into Socialism". Recognition of the necessity of a return to the realistic economic policies of Leninism.
5. Recognition of the necessity of systematic Communist work in the proletarian mass organizations, particularly in the reformist trade unions, condemnation of the theory and practice of the Red Trade Union organization in Germany and similar constructions in the other countries.

6. Rejection of the formula of the "democratic dictatorship of the proletariat and the peasantry" as a separate regime distinguished from the dictatorship of the proletariat which carries along the peasant and the oppressed masses in general behind it, rejection of the anti-Marxist theory of the peaceful "growing over" of the democratic dictatorship into the socialist one.
7. Recognition of the necessity of mobilizing the masses under transitional slogans corresponding to the concrete situation in each country, and particularly under democratic slogans insofar as it is a question of struggle against feudal relations, national oppression or different varieties of open imperialistic dictatorship (Fascism, bonapartism, etc.).
8. Recognition of the necessity of a developed united front policy with respect to the mass organiza-

- tions of the working class, both of trade union and political character, including the social democracy as a party. Condemnation of the ultimatic slogan "only from below" which in practice means a refusal of the united front and consequently the refusal to create soviets. Condemnation of the opportunist application of the united front policy as in the Anglo-Russian Committee (bloc with the leaders without the masses and against the masses); double condemnation of the policy of the present German Central Committee, which combines the ultimatic slogan "only from below" with opportunist practice on the occasion of parliamentary pacts with the leaders of the Social Democracy.
9. Rejection of the theory of social-Fascism and of the whole practice bound up with it, as serving Fascism on the one hand and the Social Democracy on the other.

10. The struggle for the regrouping of the revolutionary forces of the world's working class under the banner of International Communism. Recognition of the necessity of the creation of a genuine Communist International capable of applying the principles enumerated above.
11. Recognition of Party democracy not only in words but also in fact; ruthless condemnation of the Stalinist plebiscitary regime (gagging the will and the thought of the party, the rule of the usurpers, deliberate suppression of information from the party, etc.).

The fundamental principles enumerated above, which are of basic importance for the strategy of the proletariat in the present period, place the Left Opposition in a position of irreconcilable hostility to the Stalinist faction which currently dominates the U. S. S. R. and the C. I. The recognition of these principles on the basis of the decisions of the first 4 congresses of the Comintern, is an indispensable condition for the acceptance of single organizations, groups and persons into the composition of the International Left Opposition.

60th Birthday of Rakovsky His Activities During War

The sixtieth birthday of Christian Georgievich Rakovsky (born September 1, 1873) brings to mind again some of the episodes in his life during that crucial period of the world war when the proletarian internationalism was breaking through the sea of depression, treachery and slander like new life surging out of the primeval slime.

Christian Rakovsky was the inspiring leader of the modern socialist movement in Rumania. The labor movement as such took shape there only in 1905, under the direct influence of the Russian revolution, and it bore an almost exclusive, slavish economic character. "Later on," writes one of the founders of the Rumanian Communist Party, Arbori-Tallu, "after the year 1907, when the government proceeded to mass deportations of Jewish, Hungarian and Transylvanian workers and banished the labor leader Rakovsky from the land, the movement took on a political coloring. In the spring of 1909, the arrest of Rakovsky on the border of Rumania, coinciding with the protest meeting on the occasion of Ferra's execution, produced the first significant collision between the working masses and the police."

The representative of the Rumanian social democracy in the Bureau of the Second International up to the outbreak of the war, was comrade Rakovsky. His Bulgarian origin, the rabid bourgeois press always referred to him contemptuously as the "Rumanian" Rakovsky, far from militating against his activity in Rumania, contributed to making him known as the most prominent internationalist in the Balkans, one of the leading proponents of the Balkan Federative Republic, the socialist who was equally at home in Bucharest, Sofia, Belgrade, Athens or Constantinople. Of all the members of the doomed Bureau, Rakovsky was perhaps the only one who remained a genuine internationalist. The others flocked either to the standard of the Allies or of the Entente.

Delegate to Zimmerwald

The Rumanian party instantly took a position against the war and until the country was drawn into the European shambles, the party developed a systematic agitation against it. In February 1915 it was represented at the all-Balkan protest meeting against war organized in Sofia by the Bulgarian Left wing socialists (the "Narrows") inspired by Blagoev, Kolarov and others. At a conference which took place there at the same time, the Rumanians joined with the Left wing Bulgarians and the Serbs under Lapchevitch to break conclusively with the Right wing Bulgarians (the "Broad-minded"). In July of the same year, finally, with representatives attending from Bulgaria, Greece and Rumania (the Serbs were prevented from sending a delegate because of the war conditions), the social patriots of Europe were decisively condemned and with them, the policy of the Second International. At the same period, the Rumanian socialists associated themselves openly with the Zimmerwald Commission and delegated comrade Rakovsky to attend the first conference at Zimmerwald.

At Zimmerwald, Rakovsky found himself side by side with his life long friend and comrade, Trotsky. At that time, as is known, both Rakovsky and Trotsky were still engaged in that sharp dispute with Lenin which marked many of the pre-October years of the evolution of Bolshevism. The internationalists to the core though they were they did not eye to eye with Lenin on all the burning problems of the day. Trotsky, in particular, exerted his efforts towards arriving at a solution which would not only produce a unanimous manifesto out of the Zimmerwald Conference but would leave the true Left wing the opportunity of maintaining close contact with the millions of confused anti-war socialist workers who had not yet found the revolutionary path. Rakovsky, like Lenin, Kolarov, Varsky, Lazzari and a score of others appended their names to the compromise manifesto of Zimmerwald drafted by Trotsky.

In France, the internationalists, who had to be sought with lanterns, enlisted the aid not only of Trotsky, but also of Rakovsky. His polemic with the chauvinist Charles Dumas, was published as a brochure both in Bucharest and Paris, and circulated clandestinely throughout France by the first internationalist group of Rosmer and Monatte. The French chauvinist press denounced him as the grand chief of Austrian espionage in the Balkans, just as Trotsky was denounced as "the principal agent of Rakovsky" before the war!

"Rakovsky," wrote the Paris Matin at the end of 1917, "in order to establish a center of surveillance and propaganda, granted funds to Trotsky and the latter opened a little bookstore in Vienna where papers and pamphlets in the Slav language were put on sale. All those of Russian birth living in Vienna would come together in this bookstore which rapidly became their habitual meeting place. They were not alone to come there; they encountered Serbians, Bulgarians, Macedonians... A revolutionary circle, a laboratory of espionage, Trotsky's bookshop was still another thing: a mouse-trap, coming out of which certain revolutionists could be picked up by the Russian police..." Elsewhere, Rakovsky was attacked by the gutter press of the French bourgeoisie (itself heavily subsidized by the Czar's Foreign Office to support the Pan-Slavic policy in the Balkans) as the man "elected by Swedenborg to assist in the Bolshevik maneuver in Rumania". (Perhaps it now becomes clear from what spiritual springs some zealous Stalinists have quaffed the inspiration for the attacks upon Trotsky and Rakovsky as agents of the Rumanian Siguranza, the Polish Schlyachts, etc., etc.)

Rakovsky Imprisoned

On August 16, 1916 Rumania finally declared war on the Dual Monarchy. The last public anti-war meeting of the Rumanian socialists, scheduled for the same day, was surrounded by troops; the masses were dispersed by cavalry charges. Two weeks later, the daily paper of the party, which Rakovsky helped so generously to maintain, was suppressed by the government. Almost all the party members were called to the front. All the members of the Central Committee, with two exceptions, were instantly arrested. Rakovsky himself met with the same fate and was interned as a dangerous enemy of the state. The two members of the Committee who had remained at liberty, were then also arrested after having sent a written protest to Bratislava, the president of the ministerial council, against the imprisonment of Rakovsky. The party itself was driven into virtual illegality.

Rakovsky, "the valiant leader of the Rumanian social democracy," as he was called by the attorney, Nicolau, remained imprisoned at Jassy for months. In March 1917, the proletariat of Rumania, despite the occupation of most of the country by the German troops, was brought to its feet again by the intoxicating news of the overthrow of the Czarist regime in Russia and the triumph of the insurrectionary masses. For the first time since war was declared, thousands of men and women appeared in half-spontaneous demonstrations on the streets, demanding bread and freedom. The Russian revolution was discussed on every hand and the outlawed socialists began to resume their activities. It seemed as if the release of Rakovsky would soon be effected.

Russian Troops Release Rakovsky
The German forces of occupation became alarmed at the ferment in the masses. Meetings were forbidden. The May Day demonstrations, for which permission had first been obtained, were ordered called off by the German officials. But in one part of Rumania, the May Day of international proletarian solidarity was celebrated nevertheless. The Russian revolutionary soldiers, stationed on the border which divided Rumania from the Ukraine, moved in upon Jassy, red flags at their head, and tore upon the prison doors which confined Rakovsky and his comrades. The internationalists were liberated and put at the head of a triumphal procession that went through the streets of the city.

Immediately thereafter, Rakovsky passed the frontier into turbulent Russia to put his magnificent talents at the disposal of Bolshevism and the proletarian revolution. A new epoch was commencing in his life. —MAX SHACHETMAN.

Doll Workers Strike Strong

The Doll and toy workers, 6,000 strong, are now in the fifth week of their strike. We now have one strong union, thanks to those workers who forced the shops controlled by the Stalinists to liquidate their paper union, join our A. F. of L. union and come down on strike. The Stalinists, matched their step forward with a corresponding step backward: they entered the A. F. of L. individually, not as a body. The workers are not in a position to offer organized resistance as a Left wing to the administration which is showing signs of capitulation.

Cannon and Farulla, the Right wing leaders of our union, are following a policy that will lead to defeat. They refused to let certain shops where scabs were working have a mass picket line. At a meeting of shop chairmen, workers from the Rosenberg Toy shop came in and asked for a mass picket line because scabs were working there. Farulla told them to do without mass picketing because the union had no money to get arrested picketers out of jail.

The Friendly Doll Shop pickets asked for mass picketing because of scabs. Again the leadership tried to talk the workers out of it, but they kept demanding until three days later, Tuesday, September 26, the leadership was forced to give in 400 strikers picketed the shop, and their militancy and solidarity struck fear into the hearts of the scabs. Only about 10 percent of them showed up for work Wednesday morning and even these didn't go up to work. Some of the scabs even picketed. No one was arrested, in spite of what the leaders told us. Workers we must fight for mass picket lines at those shops reporting scabs and we can win the strike.

Some of the scabs said that the reason they went back was because they have to eat. We must demand and fight for strike relief. The workers should be on guard and fight for the above demands. Regular and frequent meetings of all committees (shop, strike, settlement, etc.) must be had so that we can collectively work to win the strike. —A DOLL WORKER.

Brandler International Makes Overtures to Stalin

The Brandler-Lovestone "International", or whatever is left of it, held a plenary meeting, following right upon the heels of the gigantic German experiences, and once more demonstrated its incapacity to distinguish the face of the revolution from its rear. The sum total of its deliberations it crystallized into new efforts to pull the revolutionary movement backward to the Stalinist Right-Centrist bloc. A resolution adopted imposes this orientation as binding upon its affiliated groups. But hardly was the link on the signatures dry before the biggest affiliate, the Swedish (Kilbom) Communist party, which was not represented at the meeting, broke the binding decisions and attended the Paris conference of Left, Socialist and Communist parties. Meanwhile the split-off Giltrow group in the United States has come out openly against the Brandler policy and proclaims the collapse of the Brandler-Lovestone "International".

This is true; the "international" is collapsing. After Jilek and Hals of Czechoslovakia led their trade union following back to the social democracy in the Amsterdam International, the French P. U. P. started to tread the same ideological path. The Neurath group of Czechoslovakia took the opposite course to the Left Opposition, and the Swiss Brandler section is permeated with and learning from the ideas of the Left Opposition. Stagnant ideologically, this "international" is diminishing organizationally. With all its opportunistic practicality it neither embraced masses nor brought correct ideas into the movement. From the German experiences it has learned nothing. Its orientation to pull the movement backward becomes so much more distinctly fallacious in this epoch of deep going differentiations in which groups and parties, formerly social democratic, are groping their way toward Communism.

Right Wing Prepared the Ground For Bureaucratic Adventurism

The Brandler-Lovestone meeting brought forward a document which theoretically verifies what has been said above. This document is characteristic for its lamentations over the ultra-Leftism pervading the Comintern, for its fulminations against "Trotskyism" and for its overtures to the Stalin regime on the basis of life and let live.

But it is precisely these partners of the former Right-Centrist bloc who prepared the ground for the "ultra-Leftism"—it should be called by its correct name, bureaucratic adventurism—which they lament so much. It is their opportunism which prepared the algebras to the "Left" to adventurism by the fact of Centristism, having no consistent Marxian position. In pursuing its capricious outlook and methods it reverts from opportunism to adventurism when pressed by events and the catastrophes resulting from its own policies. These Right wing lamentations have no complaints to make over the disastrously false and opportunist bloc with Chiang Kai-Shek in the Chinese revolution or the bloc with the strike-breaking bureaucrats in the Anglo-Russian Committee, or the many other similar combinations.

Their fulminations against "Trotskyism", that is, against the Left Opposition, are all borrowed from Stalin, and they have made no improvements upon them. It is quite natural that these people should find themselves at one with Stalin in this respect for today after the terrible German catastrophe, it has been demonstrated more clearly than ever that the Left Opposition, with its orientation for new national parties and for a new International, represents the main kernel of the progressive forces within the proletarian movement. Moreover, these people also know that it is only through such fulminations that the requirements can be met for application for re-entry into the Stalin bureaucracy.

The Anti-Trotsky Crusade

In essence this Right wing document, except for its lamentation over "ultra-Leftism", absolves Stalinism from any complicity in the German defeat. It says—we quote from the document published in the Workers Age, of September 15: "Especially is it necessary to expose all attempts to attribute the tactical mistakes of the C. I. and the C. P. G. and the defeat of the German working class to the alleged national interests of the Soviet Union. The assertion that the theory of the construction of socialism in one country has made the Russian Communists sacrifice the interests of the workers of other countries, must be branded as dangerous anti-bolshevism."

This is their type of crusade against so-called Trotskyism. But first of all this itself contains a politically dishonest distortion of the views of the Left Opposition in substituting the "national interests of the Soviet Union" for the bureaucratic interests of the Stalin regime. Between these a definite distinction must be made. Comrade Trotsky, more than anyone else has repeatedly pointed out that "between the interests of the Soviet

Stalinists Split Food Workers

About four weeks ago a leaflet signed by the Amalgamated Food Workers and the Food Workers Industrial Union was circulated among hotel, restaurant and cafeteria workers, calling for a united front mass meeting on August 22 against the intolerable conditions in the industry.

This leaflet said, "For the first time in the history of the Hotel and Restaurant workers, labor and fraternal organizations, representing workers in the industry, have united, set aside all differences, and are pulling together with one common purpose: to eliminate the inhuman, nerve-racking, miserable, working conditions in the industry. This is a great step forward. Only united action of all workers regardless of affiliation will be our mightiest weapon against the employers."

"The only way we can force the employers to live up to the code and even force better conditions out of them, is when we will organize and fight!"

"Now is the time, the NRA gives us the right to organize."

"Let us test this right."

Against One Union
In admitting that the proposed united front was a step forward, the Stalinists must have realized that their past action in splitting the A. F. W. and organizing a separate Industrial Union must have been a step backward.

What was the conclusion which we drew from the speeches of the Stalinist leaders at this mass meeting? The organizer of the cafeteria leaflet, comrade Kramberg, in his speech said nothing about the necessity of one union for the industry, devoting his whole speech to the question of the code which had been already worked out and was present to be approved by the mass meeting. The chairman, comrade Reich, in answer to the speeches of Giltrow and Lyons, representing the A. F. W. in which they emphasized the urgent need of one union in the industry, said that the urgent necessity now is not for one union in the industry, but for a united front against the bosses' code presented under the NRA.

Cut-Throat Competition
What has happened since then? Not a single step was taken toward even a united front, not to speak of unity. The two organizations held separate mass meetings in support of their separate organization drives. More than that—the leadership of the Industrial Union made a conscious attempt to sabotage the most recent mass meeting of the A. F. W. on Tuesday, Sept. 19, at Palm Garden, by posting pickets and distributing leaflets in the neighborhood of the hall, to announce that the Tuesday meeting had been postponed until Wednesday at the same place—where their own meeting was scheduled!

Instead of engaging in such a low type of petty bourgeois cut-throat competition, splitting the forces of the working class, the Stalinist leaders should have emphasized the necessity of united action against the bosses, so as to concretize the slogan of the united front, and as Communists urged their membership to support this mass meeting. Such united action would have served as a first step toward unity.

The reformists and the reactionaries within the trade unions, as comrade Trotsky has pointed out, function to split the ranks of the workers. It is the task of the Communists to unite them. In this case the Stalinist leadership of the F. W. I. U. has assumed the splitting task of the reformists, and this under the title of "a step forward!"

Perspectives Under NRA

Under the NRA new perspectives are opened for the reformist organizations for rapid growth of forces, as has already been seen in the coal mines, needle trades, etc. Unless there is a powerful Left wing in these unions, the movement, though a progressive step compared with the conditions of the unorganized workers for the time being, will inevitably be led by the A. F. L. fakers toward degeneration in the direction of class-collaboration and company unions.

The food industry is by no means excluded from these perspectives. The Left wing must be ready to meet this situation. But the policies of Stalinism in the F. W. I. U. are an obstacle in the road.

We appeal to the rank and file of the party and the FWIU membership, to bring pressure to bear on their leadership and the TUUL leadership for an immediate and sharp change in the course which they have been pursuing up to this very day.

Concretely, the FWIU must take immediate steps toward reuniting with the A. F. W. With the A. F. W. in which a different situation prevails, on the other hand, it should propose a concrete program for united front action as a first step toward one union in the industry.

State and those of the international proletariat there is and there can be no contradiction. But it is false to the roof to transfer this law over to the Stalinist bureaucracy." This is precisely what the authors of this opportunist document have done. By this they brand themselves as fakes of the Stalinist bureaucracy anxious to crawl back into its good graces.

Defenders of the Theory of Socialism in One Country

If it is not the theory of Socialism in one country, with its resulting reactionary national position which is bringing the Stalinist bureaucracy into contradiction with the interests of the Soviet Union as well as the interests of the world revolution, how then explain the Comintern responsibility in the German catastrophe? But with this the authors of the document were not concerned and hence they stated further: "The I. C. O. fights to liquidate the false tactics of the C. I., not, however, to oppose the policy of the C. P. S. U. in the Soviet Union." By this they only further reveal themselves, not as revolutionary theoreticians but as "practical" opportunists of give and take. You let us have our policies for our respective countries; we will let you have yours. For them as for the reformists the international situation is a sum of the national situations. But this is also what led the social reformists to their August 4.

To Reestablish the Right-Centrist Bloc

This "remarkable" document concludes with a proposal from the Brandler-Lovestone "International" to the Comintern for the "setting up of a working bloc, which... can establish joint action for carrying out united front tactics, for a common struggle against reformism, centristism and Trotskyism."

Here we come to the very crux of the issue: the reestablishment of the Right-Centrist bloc for a common struggle against the Left Opposition, against the progressive force within the revolutionary movement. The struggle against reformism and centristism is thrown in only for embellishment.

There need be no denial of the fact that much of the Brandler-Lovestone criticism of the Stalinist bureaucratic adventurism has been stated correctly; but it is animated by entirely different motives and is heading for an entirely different course from ours. From the German experiences they draw the conclusion for the practical abolishing of responsibility and for the further strengthening of the Stalinist bureaucratic regime. We draw the conclusions leading to the creation of new national parties and a new International. There is the course toward the strengthening of reactionary nationalism as against revolutionary internationalism. —A. S.

British Labor Skates Have Own Way at Congress

EDINBURGH—

To outward appearances, capitalist Britain is coming through the prolonged crisis with no signs of depression. The large towns are managing to conceal their troubles under a veneer of seeming well-being. New buildings are being constructed everywhere and the gaudy new designs for shops, houses, and cinemas raise the enthusiasm of the local journalists who have developed the theme of a "brighter Britain". The theatres and cinemas are crowded and the masses roll along in their thousands to roar themselves hoarse at football matches and greyhound meetings.

The speed-up in industry and the spectre of unemployment has created a lust for entertainments and sports; anything to detract the mind from the reality of impending disaster. The financial journals have not let this phenomenon pass without notice and they advise their get-rich-quick readers to invest in cinema and greyhound enterprises. The small investor has already been crushed out here and it is computed that several thousand American dollars have found their way into the British entertainment industry where fortunes are being made upon the exploitation of sweated labor. In this connection the attitude toward the invasion of American capital is a new one of hostility and in line with the present diplomatic policy of the ruling class, a definite anti-American tone pervades the press.

Despite this, however, there is a sneaking admiration for America. Especially is this so among the small business people of the middle-class who greedily devour the sensational stories of the yellow press and the motion pictures, where young men arrive on Wall Street and become millionaires as if by magic. To emulate America is the secret dream of every British "Babbitt". In this category belong the thousands of well-paid trade union officials who have been raised by their former workmates into a new world of ease and comfort. Traveling the country on union business or sitting in conference with the bosses in some palatial hotel, these gentlemen soon develop a new outlook on life. They begin to see certain good points in the capitalist system which they formerly vigorously denounced in their trade union branches.

Strikes are now frowned upon as tending to drain the union funds and the unemployed are also looked upon as being a source of trouble to the union. Is it not much easier to negotiate wage-cuts with a pleasant employer than to reason with angry strikers or discontented unemployed? Thus reasons the trade union bureaucrat and in this frame of mind he arrived at the annual Trade Union Congress. The full-time officials usually manage to gain election as delegates to these congresses and as a consequence the official policy as formulated by the General Council is well guarded from the thrusts of any militant elements who might upset the bureaucracy if elected in sufficient numbers by the branches.

No Opposition to Bureaucrats
This year, at Brighton, the bureaucrats had it all their own way and when the President of the Congress, Mr. Walsden, made the opening speech there were no interruptions or no ill-mannered attempts to find fault with his carefully prepared outline of policy. His address was a model of bankruptcy but it acted like soothing syrup on the bureaucrats. Before the Great War, former presidents of the congress extolled the great industrial system and social legislation of Germany. The fatherland was the pattern to be copied.

Since the war the T. U. C. has found a new model in America. A few years ago it was Henry Ford who was their hero. Not only did his system of mass production stagger the minds of these glibble ones but they actually thought that at last they had found the weapon with which to destroy Marx. Today, Ford is replaced by Roosevelt and "the policy of the American President," declares Walsden, "is one which organized Labor has long advocated as a solution to the present crisis." In America thousands of workers strike against the Roosevelt policy but here in Britain the T. U. C. finds time to praise Roosevelt.

How to American Plutocrats
Not a message of fraternity and encouragement to the scarred fighters in the ranks of the American working class but a mock bow to the plutocrats of Wall Street and Tammany Hall. Not one voice was raised at the Congress against this monstrosity. Likewise upon the question of war. The old formula of the general strike was brought forth and then quietly laid upon the shelf and when a lone delegate rose to protest against this travesty he was promptly steam-rolled by the chairman.

On Fascism, Mr. Citrine delivered a well-documented speech exposing the horrors of Hitlerism. According to his admirers, Mr. Citrine's speech "will become historic", but upon the question of how to fight Fascism the speech is strangely vague if not completely silent. According to Citrine, the real reason for the advent of Hitler was the huge army of unemployed which made the calling of a general strike impossible and if here in Britain the unemployed continue to increase then Mr. Citrine will not be responsible for what will happen, which all sounds very much like saying that Fascism is inevitable and that so long as there is an unemployed army then the trade unions cannot fight.

Unemployed Refused Hearing
A "left" M. P. protested against this speech without obtaining much support. As for a band of unemployed who had marched all the way from London in order to place their demands before the Congress, they were refused a hearing, which does not look as though the bureaucracy is really greatly concerned about the unemployed. Everything in connection with unemployment was shelved and the Government has now a clear field when launching its next attack upon the unemployed.

A much-advertized debate upon workers' control proved a complete muddle as the delegates were not clear upon whether workers' control is possible under capitalism or only after the latter system has been overthrown. The Congress ended on a note of pessimism which even the well-oiled bureaucratic machine could not conceal. From the point of view of the militant trade unionist, the main feature of the Congress was the lack any opposition to the feeble policy of the General Council. The main issues of war, the general strike, Fascism, workers' control, simply cried aloud for a Communist interpretation but, alas, there was not one Leninist there.

C. P. Conspicuous by Absence

Where was the Communist Party? A year ago, the Party announced a drive back to the unions. From time to time, great successes have been claimed for the new trade union line but here we arrive at the Brighton Trade Union Congress and the Party representation has reached rock bottom. The reason is not hard to find. The majority of the 4,000 Party members are unemployed and are not members of trade unions while the trade union members of the Party are not consistent in their trade union work. The leaders of the Party have neglected to train the trade unionists for work in the unions and as a consequence the reformist officials can easily out maneuver the new Communist recruits whose passion for propaganda speeches bores the rank and file and plays into the hands of the bureaucrats.

The I. L. P. is in much the same plight although they at least admit their weakness and are now calling for an attempt to hammer out a trade union policy. If the Brighton Congress brings home to the militants the need for a fresh start in the building up of a strong trade union opposition based upon sound principles and free from sectarianism then it may have been a blessing in disguise. —T. New York Strikes Alarm N.R.A.

New York.—With strikes in New York City spreading and sharpening the NRA here is rapidly stripping itself of all working class coloration and nakedly manifesting itself as the bosses' weapon for strike-breaking.

This is brought to our attention by an article in the New York Times, Sept. 22, 1933, written by the NRA's chairman of the Labor Mediation Committee, Henry W. Wolff, who points an accusing finger of the most wide awake workers as he publishes the following list of strikers:

"Underwear workers—25,000; painters—15,000; toy makers—5,000; tailors—2,500; metal workers—3,000; shoe and slipper workers—8,000; waist and blouse makers—5,000; bakers—2,500; neckwear workers—2,000; belt and leather workers—800; mirror makers—200; knitted goods—3,000."

With deep concern he looks upon the mood and organization of the city's 35,000 transportation workers and its longshoremen who will strike or get a raise in pay and exclaims with anger, "the time has come to call a halt to industrial strife!"

Wolff refers to the President's no-strike treaty concluded with Wm. Green of the A. F. of L. some weeks ago and observes that "their program has not worked.... Industrial warfare is sweeping over the city to such an extent that the machinery set up to handle these emergencies has proved insufficient."

He proposes measures through which the NRA, and more especially its committee which he heads, can hope to break the worker's strikes—getting the public to condemn the strikers—forcing the workers to go to the NRA slaughterers of their efforts to raise their wages or better their conditions. The speech of Mr. Wolff reveals the purpose for which the NRA is designed—deceiving the workers with "concessions" and strike-breaking when they try to gain real concessions. —GEORGE J. SAUL.

SUB NOTE

Subs are coming in a very encouraging way. Here is what a comrade from Guelph says: "I value this paper very highly, both for its news and for its theoretical articles. The articles on the NRA are very enlightening...."

From Montreal comes the following: "We wish to receive twenty-five copies every week instead of ten as heretofore. Sympathy for the I. O. in Montreal is growing as never before." End of the country to the other. If that is how it goes from one all our sub gettters will take the full advantage of the opportunity that presents itself we know that our mailing list can be increased many times over in a comparatively short time.

The Cuban Challenge to U. S. Imperialism

Reports from Cuba, no matter from what political source, indicate that the revolution has passed beyond the stage of a simple political revolution and has entered the first stage of a social revolution. The ruling classes and exploiting class are in confusion. The crisis and economic conditions had reached a breaking point. The American imperialists, facing the coming Pan American conference, pressed upon all sides by the new measures adopted to surmount the mounting world contradictions, was forced to delay open armed intervention. In place America uses a new form of intervention, a method of bottling up the island with the Atlantic fleet and secretly aiding counter-revolution within, and at the same time endeavoring to further worsen the economic and political situation to either force a surrender or hasten the downfall of the present petty-bourgeois revolutionary government, headed by Grau San Martín.

Communist Activity in Cuba

The New York Times of September 20th, reports: "Communist seizure of mills approaching Havana with no government curb." "Workers hold 15 mills." "Communist leaders have been very active since Senator Machado's fall." "Cuba is now at the cross road and must go right or left." "The Cuban labor trouble began with the spontaneous seizure of sugar mills by syndicalist unions and is now taking the form of an organized Communist movement that is sweeping the interior of the island from end to end and is daily approaching closer to Havana." Other papers report Soviets are being set up in Cuba.

The revolution in Cuba is the most important political event of the day. It overshadows the NRA in importance. In spite of the profound effect the Blue Eagle will have on the lives of the American people and the class relations. The NRA in all its magnitude is a stop-gap and capitalist attempt to stem the tide—while the revolution in Cuba is a wave of the social tide breaking through the world structure of American imperialism. This means that the Cuban revolution must be studied in detail, especially by the American revolutionists, because it foreshadows and confronts America with all that the capitalist defenders said was impossible. That is, the first steps toward a social revolution on American soil, in one of America's most important colonies.

At Gates of U. S. Imperialism Most significant is the fact that while American hegemony is spreading to a greater degree over the earth and desperate steps are being taken internally and internationally to hold the dominating position in the downward curve of decay capitalism—America finds that she is confronted with the menace of Soviets at the gates of her 48 states. Her world struggle since 1917 to prevent the spread of the October revolution, can be revealed by the events in Cuba and its implications for America as a futile struggle in spite of Stalinism and its aid to capitalism as a leader of proletarian defeats.

The Cuban revolution comes at a most difficult period in world politics. The Cuban revolution as the first stage of a social revolution takes place on American soil, on the heels of the victory of Fascism in Germany and when the world proletariat has just passed through the most disastrous defeat, and in a period when reaction flows from it. It is logical to face world wide repercussions from the victorious October Revolution. And it is not a surprise, yet seemingly a contradiction, to be confronted with the Cuban situation after the German event.

Trotsky's Prediction

It was almost ten years ago that comrade Trotsky started many when he pointed out that the economic center of the world was shifting from Europe to America. Since then the forces making up the international Left Opposition and its American section have pointed out that with the shifts in world relations goes increased class conflicts and revolutions. In this case Cuba, even at this stage, is a certain raiser, informing the world that America will have its share of the red menace that haunts the capitalist world—the proletarian revolution. The NRA stop-gap and the special struggles America is conducting a gigantic scale with Europe, Latin America and Japan, (on three different fronts), all indicate that conditions and class relations within the United States are going to shift rapidly forward to struggles that will take on a revolutionary scope.

The Cuban revolution, under proper guidance and cooperation from the American Communists, could be the spark to start a more rapid shift of the American workers to the Left. Will that be its direction? This question will be answered within the next few months or sooner. However, at the very least, if we consider the worse variant—that reaction triumphs and American imperialism gains its objectives (as well as the fact that one must take into consideration the position of Stalinism)—nevertheless, the importance of Soviets on American soil, in Cuba, must not be underestimated.

Marxian Communist Party Vital

A significant fact is revealed when one studies the economic and social forces of Cuba. The objective conditions in Cuba are in favor of the task of carrying the revolution beyond the present stage. The spontaneous action of the workers in strike struggle and united front developed to its highest stage—Soviets. A major shortcoming is the fact that we have a Stalinist Communist Party in Cuba and not a Marxian Communist Party. Without a leadership, without a program there can be no successful revolution regardless of the revolutionary struggles of the masses. Worse yet, we do not have a Marxian Communist Party in the United States. It is our task to hurry and build one. The revolutionary struggle in Cuba shows the importance and the speed required.

Must Abrogate Platt Amendment

The Cuban people must abrogate the Platt Amendment. The present petty-bourgeois government cannot carry out this task nor will it be able to stand the pressure of the class struggle between the national capitalists and the American imperialists against the workers and peasants. The workers must fight for a free and democratic constituent assembly. The workers must demand that the election be called while the revolution is still on the upgrade. This can only be accomplished if the organs of Soviets are functioning to protect workers' democracy, to beat down the head of counter-revolution, to further develop the revolution, and to thereby confine the Constituent Assembly to its proper place.

In the United States united front mass meetings must be called throughout the country. The fact that the Stalinists with their huge apparatus have not started this struggle now "seriously" they take the Cuban situation. The A. F. of L. unions must be drawn into this protest. Financial aid must be forwarded to Cuba. Petty bourgeois and anti-imperialist forces must be organized behind Cuba's struggle against American imperialism.

The workers and liberal forces in every Latin America country must bring pressure upon their governments to protest and demand that the United States withdraw the ships and Marines from Cuban waters. Cuba must have the right of self-determination. Such a move in all of the Latin American countries, connected with the struggle of the American workers against American imperialism, will have powerful pressure. It will also make a distinction between warring and deeds of many so-called anti-imperialist forces in Latin America and expose the puppet governments to a greater degree before the eyes of the workers and peasants.

The argument that the Communists of Cuba cannot establish a Soviet Government at this stage and therefore must be satisfied with more modest demands has no place in the plans of the revolutionist and the Left Opposition. No doubt Soviets are very difficult to establish. But once the fires of the social revolution are started in this decay stage of capitalism it can sweep beyond Cuba, providing there is a Communist party, and a leadership with a program. It is up to the American workers to come to the aid of the struggles of the Latin American workers just as it was the duty of the European workers to come to the aid of the Russian workers after the October days. The Cuban revolution must be used as a lever against American imperialism.

—HUGO OEHLEK

Before the Court of the Fascists

Four men are on trial for their lives, at the Leipzig supreme court in Germany, together with the Nazi dupe Van der Lubbe. The charge is high treason and whatever the monstrously farcical court procedure may reveal the accused are in advance condemned to the executioner's axe. That is, if the Nazis are permitted to pursue their prey unhindered.

It is the aftermath of a drama of two world forces at grips—Fascism and Communism. But the fascists, drunk with victory, are tightening their stranglehold upon the throat of their victims. They demand their blood to the very last drop. What an insolent challenge is this trial, not only to the Communist movement, not only to the working class, but to all that bears the name justice within this capitalist world.

Communists Meet Challenge

The Communists, who are before the bar at Leipzig, have met this challenge and stood up manly as only soldiers of the proletarian army can do. They did not disavow their creed or hide their convictions, but proudly asserted their Communist aims. And the official Communist

St. Louis Strike Briefs

St. Louis.—Six thousand workers on strike in St. Louis and the bosses build an organization to kill the organization of the working class. The purpose of the St. Louis League for Industrial Peace, to quote one of the big open shop clothing manufacturers, S. H. Curle, is to "combat the epidemic of strikes which is disturbing and preventing industrial recovery in St. Louis."

With 1500 silk dress workers returning to work there is great danger that the remaining 1000 cotton dress workers will lose their strike. The silk dress workers had been the most militant (over 300 arrested in one week) and their going back to work will leave the arena more open for the expounding of the L. G. W. U. leadership's circus talk about the new Messiah Roosevelt. The local leaders do not believe that honesty is the best policy. They are strict advocates of class collaboration policies. The Left wing of the silk dress workers must continue to fight against the leaders of the ILGWU lest one-half of their union membership is sold out.

The strike of the 2,000 hat and cap workers, settled by Max Zaritsky's arbitration powers under the banner of the NRA, may again be resumed tomorrow. The open shop manufacturers are refusing to recognize the union strikers, as they agreed to when the strike was "settled". The hat and cap workers are still as disgusted with their "union" conditions as they were with their "open shop" conditions. "The only difference," as one striker expressed it, is, "that now the windows are slightly closed." Hell's winds will blow here in St. Louis this winter unless the bosses and their Judas' gold agents give the under-paid and over-worked hat and cap workers some concessions. There can be no cheering of pay day when "union" workers get $10 checks. —MARTIN PAYER.

movement, which has for its leadership the Stalin clique, what has it done in this situation? Vociferous protests have been heard against the Nazi attempt to railroad the accused. But these protests have come almost exclusively from the liberal bourgeoisie and petty bourgeoisie. Even sections of the reactionary capitalist press find the nauseating stench from this "travesty on justice" too revolting. In other words whatever comfort and help has reached these victims of a dastardly frame-up has come from these quarters and not from the official Communist movement.

The party and the Comintern capitulated to Fascism without attempting to strike a blow. That fact has burned itself deeply into our conscience. But have they then abdicated the right of protest against the Nazi hangman's work which is now cloaked in a court procedure? Almost the entire western world is aroused by this hangman's work. Even the A. F. of L. officials give vent to their condemnation. What is the so-called anti-Fascist united front movement doing about it? The truth is that it remains as dead and meaningless as intended by its Stalinist initiators. But what is the Comintern doing about it? What are the official parties doing about it? Around this issue was another opportunity to actually set a powerful protest movement on foot. And the official party in the United States when it proclaimed its demonstration in New York mobilized about a thousand workers; less than the party membership itself.

No Protest in Soviet Union

From the Soviet Union, from the proletarian stronghold, has come no protest. The Pravda has confined itself to the demand for an apology because its reporter was molested by the Nazis, in the city of the trial and it remained satisfied with the explanation that this was a mistake. Such are the depths to which Lenin's Pravda has sunk.

But the working class cannot remain satisfied with such explanations. They cannot remain satisfied with the Comintern abdication of the right of protest. The Fascist executioners are hanging over their heads and they will rightfully demand that this menace be fought every inch of its way. In this there is not a minute to lose.

Before the A.F. of L. Convention

Reactionaries Plan to Harness Labor at Momentous Gathering Opening Oct. 2

President William Green is advancing claims for the coming A. F. of L. convention, to begin October 2, to become the most momentous gathering of this body in sixteen years. This comparison refers to the wartime convention held in Buffalo, in 1917, at which Samuel Gompers, together with his whole staff, made their "heroic" efforts to harness the American Federation of Labor as an auxiliary machinery to serve the interests of the imperialist war mongers. The comparison is ominously sinister in its implication.

No doubts need exist of this gathering becoming a momentous one. It will be so, not by virtue of what the skilled pickard artists in attendance can be expected to do, but by the special period and exceptional conditions under which it takes place. In the first place this convention gathers under the sign of another "heroic" effort to harness the American working masses in the chains of the brand new NRA machinery of regulating class relations and reinforcing the means of keeping them in subjection as a class. But on the other hand, the very developments growing out of this, already indicate that the A. F. of L. is arriving at its crossroads with a speed which is truly American. How it will attempt to, or rather how it will fail to, with this new situation will be of decisive importance for the future.

The Growth of the A. F. of L.

The A. F. of L. executive claim at least 500,000 new members. There is no reason to doubt this figure, the accurate arithmetic of Stachel—the "head" of the TUUL—notwithstanding. In a Daily Worker article, of September 19, by the process of deducting from the A. F. of L. claims and padding the TUUL claims, all on paper, he succeeded in proving, apparently to his own satisfaction that the latter has made gains amounting to almost fifty percent of that of the former. Despite this juggling the truth remains that the overwhelming trend of labor organization flows at this moment, toward the A. F. of L. while the TUUL unions, in making certain gains in isolated cases, are being wiped out elsewhere; and precisely in those cases where the A. F. of L. has growth to record. Once more, and by the process of life itself, this proves the fact that the official party TUUL policy runs in violent contradiction to the curve development of the living movement.

The present record growth of the A. F. of L. almost amounts to a stampede with genuine mass strikes everywhere for recognition of its unions. In such cases where the party unions exist alongside of them the former are, by their radically false policy, forced to trail behind. In many cases they are even more conservative in their demands, and impotent to influence the workers where they are not entirely eliminated. These are salient facts of which the reactionaries do not fail to take notice. Revolutionists, above all, must take notice and act accordingly.

It would be idle to speculate on what the reactionary A. F. of L. capitalist agents will do at this convention. First of all they will endeavor to strengthen their own positions and strengthen their own relations with capitalism, by correspondingly reinforcing the means of holding the working masses in subjection. It is in this sense, and distinctly in this sense, that they have embraced the NRA. The A. F. of L. will demand adequate representation in the machinery created under the codes, says Green. Will this be for the purpose of advancing the ideas of workers' control of production? Will these leaders demand that the books of the industrial enterprises be thrown open for the inspection of labor's representatives and by this method begin to give labor a say in the matter of control of production? Of course not. The A. F. of L. demand will be advanced with the purpose of strengthening the relations with capital for more effective class collaboration under the new conditions.

But there are also other trends indicated for the coming convention. The Metal Trades Department is now about to propose the industrial form of organization for the basic industries. This shows the pressure to which the A. F. of L. will likely feel itself compelled to yield, if not now, then later. This pressure will increase under the new conditions. Most significant, however, is the statement made by Green that the A. F. of L. "is going to be the recognized all-embracing spokesman for American labor." That means there is no room in the United States for any other labor movement.

That no efforts will be spared to make good on this threat is certain. To that the convention will unquestionably be keyed up. That is one of the duties which American capitalism imposes upon its agents within labor's ranks to be carried out with the assistance of the NRA. Its intention is to crush any and all militant or progressive unions outside of the A. F. of L. and, in this manner, help to head off and forestall the development of working class militancy finding organizational expression. For the moment this may be comparatively easy; but it will begin to really bring to the fore the contradictions of the A. F. of L. position because it implies a more open suppression of the militancy bound to develop within its own ranks. In this lies the prospects for revolts from within.

The A. F. of L. officialdom is entering upon its thorny road. The reconstitution of a Left wing is now more essential than ever. —A. S.

NEW SPLIT IN CHILEAN COMMUNIST PARTY

Each day the disintegration of the official C. P. of Chile (Lafertist group) becomes more accentuated to the point where the few Bolsheviks still in its ranks find themselves obliged to openly unmask the adventurist bureaucracy in the leadership. In the last national conference of the party, which took place recently, with the participation of only those closest to the leadership, and absolutely without the knowledge of three of the members of the Central Committee these latter were accused of being opportunists and were summarily expelled. Until recently all three of these comrades were considered loyal Bolsheviks and now for having protested against, and criticized the party policies, they have been expelled and branded as traitors. Their "treason" consisted in demanding a discussion of the past errors of the party.

The Political Bulletin of the Chilean Communist Left reports that the units to which the three expelled Central Committee members belonged are also to be expelled en masse.

A Letter from Shanghai

Shanghai.—About Huang Ping, whose capitulation the New York Stalinists deny as an Opposition "slander," I am in a position to give you direct information supplied by Madame Sun Yat-sen. Notwithstanding her close connections with the League Against Imperialism and the Paris Anti-War Committee she is a genuine protagonist of the workers' cause. In China, she has played a prominent part in a hedge-podge organization of liberal intellectuals known as the China League for Civil Rights, which has been agitating for better treatment of the Kuo Min Tang's political prisoners. The organization is now practically defunct—it bumped up against too many matters involving class issues, which, because of its composition it was incapable of handling. It tried to be "non-political" and inevitably failed. When its secretary, Yang Chen, was assassinated recently by "Blue Shirt" (Fascist) agents employed by Chiang Kai-shek, most of its more prominent adherents decided it would be healthier if they became even more respectable than they had been.

Interview with Huang Ping But to get on with the story, Madame Sun had occasion to visit Nanjing shortly after Huang Ping's arrest, in connection with her work in the China League for Civil Rights. At the time Huang Ping's fate was unknown, beyond the fact that he had been tortured and that a recantation had appeared under his name in the People's Tribune, Wang Chin-Wei's organ. Madame Sun determined to find out what had happened to Huang Ping. Due to her personal influence, she managed to persuade the Kuo Min Tang authorities to allow her to interview Huang. She challenged them to produce him and prove that he had not been murdered, as had been rumored.

Huang was brought to her at the Yangtze Hotel, accompanied by a guard who remained throughout the interview—such as it was. In Madame Sun's words, Huang had

Torture of Huang

Questioning was obviously useless, and Madame Sun's last question to Huang Ping was: "Did you write or give your name to the article in the People's Tribune containing a recantation of your past?" Huang hung his head and gave no reply. His father answered, "Yes, of course Mr. Huang wrote it—didn't you Mr. Huang?"

That was all. Huang failed to repudiate the article when given the opportunity of doing so. All that could be done to a man but take away the spark of life had obviously been done to him. On the verge of the grave he refused the opportunity of vindicating himself before his comrades.

Rumor has it that Huang Ping has since been done to death, his jailers finding him an unnecessary burden on their hands, but it is not possible to obtain confirmation. From the time of his arrest the only one interested in his fate who managed to see him was Madame Sun, and she seems satisfied that the recantation attributed to Huang by the Kuo Min Tang was dragged from him in the anguish of physical torture, when his wracked body could endure no more and live.

"Blue Shirts" in North China

Chiang Kai-shek's "Blue Shirts," who commenced their activities in Shanghai in a big way, working through the local police organizations, and succeeding in arresting many Communists and Communist "suspects", have now invaded North China. Scores of Communists have been arrested in Peiping (now known as Peking) in the past few months. Each Communist arrested, we learn, is offered his liberty if he will renounce his principles and sign a declaration to that effect. "Torture is employed, of course, to 'induce' prisoners to make these declarations, which are immediately used as propaganda against Communism. Many of these recantations have lately been published in the press of the north. In one instance, only last week, a group of Communist renegades were brought by the Kuo Min Tang officials to a public park in Peiping where they addressed large crowds, attacking the principles they had renounced.

The Communist party organ in North China, I learned this week, circulates about 100 copies. Completely disoriented, it fails to voice the urgent needs of the masses and is entirely unpopular. One party member expressed to a friend of mine who has just returned from the North his disappointment with party activity. Outright lying and exaggeration are the chief characteristics of the party newspaper. As this man remarked: "We read in the party organ things we know are not true." Voicing what was, probably, an unwittingly devastating criticism of this organ, he said: "My idea of good propaganda is presentation of the facts, however unpleasant, and their correct interpretation. A good cause has no need to resort to lying and exaggeration. On the contrary, it harms the cause."

We must not expect that the slogans will appear in America under the same set of conditions as elsewhere. We work with conditions as we find them and not as we would like to have them. It is not at all necessary that a labor party or a reformist movement exist to advance such slogans, nor that a labor party arise as the direct result of their advancement. If in advanced countries the period of preparation for the seizure of power and the dictatorship of the proletariat will be more prolonged than the actual seizure of power will be much forestalled, then these intermediate slogans will live their brief existence for the purpose of crystallizing the struggle, only to be quickly transformed in the course of the struggle.

Roosevelt is acting as the spearhead of the bourgeois attack on the working class, on its former standards of livelihood. The workers think at the moment that he is actually encouraging unionization and many are flocking into the A. F. of L. It is our plain duty to go with them and to form a Left wing in the unions. We must help set up workers' codes of action leading towards workers' control and nationalization. We must help set up permanent shop (grievance) committees at first ostensibly for the purpose of disclosing violations of the NRA, later gradually reaching out for the closed shop and for ever greater workers' control of production. Through the shop committees we must propagandize the workers' codes of action. Unless we prepare now we cannot hope to win the masses in time when, through its inner contradictions, the capitalist program falls through and the question of power becomes the order of the day.

Discussion on the NRA - The Slogan of Nationalization

The following article is a contribution to the discussion on the NRA. It represents the views of the author.

Other articles are invited but should not exceed 700 words.

The slogan of nationalization of industries is at the present stage not one of immediate agitation but rather a propaganda slogan laying the basis and setting directives for the movement in the period of upheaval which lies ahead. Even with American economic development taking the most favorable course for the capitalist class—even, that is, with a coinciding of the NRA and a real expansion of production resulting in the temporary liquidation of the crisis,—the class struggle will necessarily take on new forms owing to the trend of development towards state capitalism. The "new" capitalism will be militantly imperialistic. The violent struggle for control of markets will base itself at home on the ever more oppressive exploitation of the working class. For the moment the stream of mass pressure follows the Roosevelt, but as events (the progress of inflation for example) clarify the situation the stream will over the confining walls.

We cannot wait expectantly for well and become a flood breaking the period of open struggle to "educate" the workers. We must set forth our views and a corresponding plan of action now, correcting in the light of events those errors that will naturally adhere to our rough draft as we go along. Meantime we patiently answer the queries and objections raised by the serious workers looking for a solution to their problems.

Compensation or No Compensation?

In the mind of the worker the question of compensation naturally arises when nationalization is under consideration. Losovsky, in approving of the slogan at the 15th C. P. U. Congress in 1927, thought that the fight for "no compensation" serves to distinguish the Communist from the socialist. But to Trotsky, viewing the slogan as opposed to the formation of a labor mass of engaging the workers in a gigantic struggle with the bourgeoisie, the question of compensation is entirely secondary, if not irrelevant. It is entirely a matter of objective conditions and not a matter of principle, as is indicated in the work "Whither England?"

Besides the financial side of the question is of secondary importance. The principal task is to create the political conditions for nationalization, whether by purchase or without purchase, that is of no importance. In the last instance it is a matter of life and death for the bourgeoisie. Revolution is inevitable for the reason that the bourgeoisie will never permit itself to be strangled by Fabian banking operations. Even a partial nationalization can be undertaken by bourgeois society in its present form, only by surrounding it with such conditions as would render the success of these measures extremely doubtful, thus compromising the principle of nationalization and with it the Labor Party. The bourgeoisie would oppose as a class every straightforward attempt at even a partial nationalization. The other branches of industry would resort to lockouts, to sabotage, to a boycott of the national industry; i. e., bring about a life and death struggle. However guarded the first steps might be, the task will nevertheless lead to the necessity of breaking the opposition of the exploiters." Here we have clearly given the dialectic nature of the struggle for nationalization.

Nationalization and the Labor Party

The U. M. W. of a Committee on Nationalization stated in their report in 1924 that the struggle for nationalization would build up a labor party. We Communists are party. Why then propose nationalization? It might be conceded, for exam-

General Silk Strike Sweeps the Industry!

Workers Hold Battle Line Firm as the Great Struggle Enters Sixth Week

Union Organizations in the Silk Workers' Strike

The silk workers have not lacked union organizations in the past. Due to the highly competitive condition of the industry, the relatively high degree of skill required, and the varied division of crafts the workers have been divided into many unions and they have not enjoyed the benefits of an all-embracing union that organized without regard to craft and which included a large number of workers. Such a union existed in the great 1913 strike and has come to the fore again in the present battle in the form of the American Federation of Silk Workers, and its Paterson section, the Associated Silk Workers.

The Associated Silk Workers was born in struggle against the reactionary leadership of the U. T. W. in 1919. For winning conditions in the strike of 1919 which the manufacturers and the U. T. W. didn't think they deserved the notorious officials of the A. F. of L. expelled 300 hat band weavers who formed the Associated Silk Workers.

This organization was a fighting militant union from its very inception. In 1924 it again had the honor to incur the wrath of the U. T. W. which advised all A. F. of L. unions not to support the strike conducted by the Associated, calling it an outlaw organization.

Record of the Associated
The Associated Silk Workers was permeated with a radical outlook. On its Executive Board the Left wing had a majority. A member of the Communist party was one of the organizers. The officials of the union looked to the militants for leadership and policy. A better field for the Left wing and its class education, a higher type of class struggle union could be found nowhere in the country. In spite of all of these meritorious qualities the stupid Stalinists, in pursuance of their blind and disruptive policy, split the Associated Silk Workers in 1928 and formed the National Textile Workers Union.

It is ridiculous to oppose a split under all conditions. When a union becomes the creature of reactionary officials who make the sell-out to the bosses their only policy and prevent the rank and file of the union from using its democratic rights to change the course and leadership of the union then a split is often unavoidable. But the Stalinists had no such grievances against the Associated. They split the union because they could not fetter it with their mechanical control.

Approximately 500 broad silk weavers followed the National union on its ruinous course. Both the Associated and the National entered the 1931 strike about equal in strength. The strike of that time was only a shadow of what it is today but here again the National union revealed a glaring incompetence and an unwillingness to face facts. Instead of a genuine offer of common action with the Associated they sabotaged all real moves toward unity. Instead of cementing the solidarity of the workers, as was their elementary duty, they pulled rabbits out of the hat, such as arbitrarily advancing the date set by the Associated for the strike. The National, as a Left wing, was unable to exert any influence on the then timid leadership of the Associated. It was shortly before this strike that the Associated affiliated with the U. T. W. The National emerged from the strike only a shell of what it had been at the outset.

Decline of the N. T. W.
The story of what happened in the N. T. W. from 1931 to date has already been told in the Militant. The lack of freedom of expression for the workers within the union, the selection of officials from above, the formation of craft organizations, the carrying criticism of the Associated for not calling the present strike sooner than they did and then the right-about-face proposal to delay the strike after it had been called by the Associated, the formation of a rival national strike committee, the unbridled reports of the offer by the National union of individual strike settlements and a lower wage scale—all of this has made the workers bitter against the N. T. W. Its leading militants in Paterson have left it and joined the Associated where they play a prominent part.

On the other hand, the Associated Silk Workers, barring minor errors here and there, has done itself proud in the present strike situation. Through its militant actions it has enlisted the great majority of the silk workers. It has earned and properly deserves the support of the entire labor movement.

Independent Craft Unions in Strike

The strike in Paterson and throughout the Eastern states includes within its ranks every nationality of workers and every craft in the industry. A strong spirit of solidarity pervades the whole scene of battle. Fighting shoulder to shoulder are the unskilled, low paid dye workers and the highly skilled, relatively well paid warpers, twist-ers and loomfixers. The situation among the skilled crafts is extremely important for the strike and the silk workers union in the future.

For some time three A. F. of L. craft unions of warpers, loomfixers and twist-ers have existed in Paterson which failed even to organize an appreciable section of the trade in these unions. As in other categories of the silk industry the workers, tired of the exclusive, over-cautious tactics of the U. T. W.

The Record of McMahon as a Misleader of Labor; Bosses' Agent in the Ranks of the Working Class

Labor can fight the bosses out in the open giving blow for blow. Far more dangerous, however, is the enemy that pretends to be a friend and under the cover of his "friendship" stabs the workers in the back. Such is McMahon, the president of the United Textile Workers of America.

Consider the deeds of this man, the highest officer in an organization that sets out to improve the lot of the worker:

McMahon commenced his double-dealing, treacherous tricks even before the strike got under way. Prior to the outbreak of the silk strike McMahon urged the strike committee of the American Federation of Silk Workers not to strike until the code was settled, promising that if the latter were unsatisfactory he would tie up the whole south. What happened?

Tired of waiting for the endless hickories in Washington to bring counts, and fully aware that the hearings in Washington were deliberately intended to paralyze the fighting will of the workers, the strike committee of the Associated called the workers out.

Unofficially McMahon endorsed the strike by sending a telegram to the Port Jervis local of the U. T. W. to walk out together with the A. F. S. W. and by representing that union and its strike demands in conferences with the manufacturers at Washington.

But McMahon quickly revealed where his real sympathies lay. He accepted with open arms the strike-breaking proposal of the manufacturers for a truce, a five week "cooling down" period during which the strikers were to return to work, and tried to ram it down the workers' throats. The workers would have none of it—the strike began in real earnest, spreading over the nation.

Frustrated in this slick, under-cover maneuver to drive the workers back into the mills McMahon stripped the tactics of all camouflage. He called a meeting of the national executive board of the U. T. W. where they voted not to endorse the strike of the silk workers.

In other words, this miserable creature of the manufacturers "outlawed" the greatest strike in the long history of the silk workers' struggle by refusing to recognize the walk-out of 50,000 men as "legitimate".

But if McMahon and his no less treacherous lieutenants would not "recognize" the strike officially they proceeded at once to recognize it in reality by trying to herd the workers under the jurisdiction of the U. T. W. back to work. In the Rhode Island shops, in Strouds-on, Hazleton, Pa. and elsewhere McMahon gave orders that the strike be called off and the workers return to work.

Sabotage at Hazleton
In Hazleton, Thomson, a member of the Executive Board of the U. T. W., working hand in glove with the local police and the state troopers, sabotaged the striking of its largest shop, the Duplant. It was only against his disruption that six shops in that city were pulled down by the A. F. S. W.

Far from making good on his promise to strike the south if the code was unsatisfactory—and that was the opinion of the majority of the silk workers if not of McMahon—he is doing everything in his power to knife the strike at the very time when the silk workers need the most assistance. And on top of it all McMahon is attempting to starve the workers back to the shops by refusing to sanction appeals for strike relief by the Paterson strike committee.

Old Friend of the Bosses

The employers could hope for no better friend than McMahon. He is of far more service to the bosses against the strike than all the cops and all the forces of "law and order."

But McMahon's services did not begin with yesterday. The treacherous record of the reactionary U. T. W. machine, of which he was long a part, runs back for more than 20 years.

As far back as 1912 the United Textile Workers furnished strike-breakers in an attempt to smash the Lawrence strike led by the I. W. W.

In 1913, one of the greatest strikes in the history of Paterson's struggles, when the strike was solidly conducted by the I. W. W. under Big Bill Haywood, John Golden and Sara Conboy, the then leaders of the U. T. W. made a separate agreement with the bosses without the workers' knowledge and support, deliberately trying in that way to sell-out the workers.

In 1919 a strike was called by the Paterson ribbon weavers for the 44 hour week. This was sabotaged by the U. T. W. The U. T. W. was for compromising on the 48 hour week even while the War Labor Board was for giving the men the 42 1-2 hour week. In a short time they sold out completely, agreeing with the manufacturers to postpone (indefinitely) the shortening of hours.

But the ribbon weavers remained stubbornly on strike and won the strike. And for this 300 were expelled from the U. T. W.

During the 1924 strike of the Associated in Paterson, Sara Conboy of the U. T. W. sent a letter to the A. F. L. unions telling them that the Associated was an outlaw organization and advising them not to support the strike.

The U. T. W. under McMahon publicly denounced and attacked the great Passaic strike of 1926. Its local leaders tried to call off the strike and force the workers back into mills and urged all A. F. of L. unions to refuse to give relief to this strike.

McMahon's real philosophy is expressed in a statement made during the "campaign" of the A. F. of L. to organize the south in 1929: "We aren't talking higher wages. We aren't talking shorter hours. You can't express our objectives in those terms. We want to sit down with the mill owners, we want to take up their problems as our problems, we want the mill owners, ourselves, and the general public to sit down and diagnose the industry's ills and seek mutually a means to heal them."

There stands McMahon, revealed by his own statement as well as by his actions as an agent of the bosses, serving as president of a labor organization only to be in a better position to betray and sell-out the workers.

THE MILITANT
126 East 16th Street
New York City

With this issue the Militant begins to reflect the new course of the Communist League toward the building of a new party of Communism in America. Our aim is to transform the Militant from a propaganda organ intended mainly for Communists into a popular agitation paper appealing directly to the mass of American workers. To facilitate this transformation, and double our circulation as the first step, we are cutting the subscription rates to $1.00 per year and 50 cents for six months. The prices of single copies are cut to two cents, bundle rates to one cent a copy.

We intended to tell you all about it, and our new action program connected with it, in this issue. But the silk strike material, which represents—as a beginning—what we mean by an agitation paper, crowded out the explanation, so we will have to let it go over till next week.

Meantime, one urgent word: We are undertaking this project solely on our nerve. The new price of the Militant is below the cost of production. It requires a subsidy. We have none, not even the cost of next week's issue. We need your help and count on it. If you see the need of a Communist paper that appeals directly to the mass of American workers, records their struggles, and talks their language, there is a practical way for you to help. Solidarity Welds Ranks; N. R. A. Truce Rejected

Fifty thousand silk workers are entering their sixth week of strike with their ranks bigger and more solid than ever. The mills remain closed, the looms idle and every attempt of the bosses to reopen has been frustrated by huge picket lines of angry workers.

The strike is spreading with seven league hoots to every silk mill, large or small in the United States. Strikers travel hundreds of miles to pull down shops that have not yet joined the ranks. The National Strike Committee of the American Federation of Silk Workers voted at its last meeting to close every U. T. W. shop that is still at work—to bring the New England sector of the silk industry to a complete standstill.

As testimony to the fighting spirit that is catching on everywhere under the impetus of the silk strike is the decision of the silk truck drivers not to handle scab silk.

The monster demonstration of more than 20,000 silk dye workers on Monday, October 2, in the Lincoln City Stadium marks the high point of the great textile battle. By their enthusiastic singing and cheering the embattled silk and dye workers gave an unassailable evidence to the bosses that they had clenched their fists and gritted their teeth in firm determination to remain out until their demands are won. By this great demonstration the silk workers of Paterson and vicinity have given heart and hope to the workers everywhere. The silk workers are showing the way.

The American Federation of Silk

Historic Strike of 20 Years Ago

Never-to-be-forgotten by those who took part in it, or those who have heard its story told, the tradition of the great silk strike of 1913 in Paterson is the inspiration behind the powerful struggle that has brought the fabric of the industry to a standstill today.

Those were stirring days. For 22 long weeks the silk workers of Paterson maintained the battle lines unbroken. Workers were clubbed and shot by policemen and detectives. Upwards of 800 strikers were thrown into jails unfit for dogs. The organizers were persecuted. The strike was vilified by a lying press which screamed with rage at the revolting slaves, and demanded that the leaders be tarred and feathered and driven out of town. The pulpit thundered denunciation at the men and women who wanted a better life in this world. But with grim determination

Workers have become a great magnet of attraction for the independent, scattered and craft unions that are flocking to its banner from every silk center in the nation. The Allentown workers have affiliated to the national strike committee of the A. F. S. W. The United Warpers League of Paterson and vicinity have followed their lead. The A. F. S. W. has come forward as a uniting force consolidating the energies of all the silk workers under one common direction.

Again the A. F. S. W. has affirmed its unshakable will not to return to work under anything but a national agreement. The disruptive role of the N. T. W., which had issued a public statement declaring its readiness to sign separate shop agreements on a lower scale than the one demanded by the A. F. S. W., has so discredited this organization that it was compelled to issue a "denial" in an evasive statement issued by John J. Italian.

The demands of the strikers, refusing to compromise, have remained the same as at the outset of the strike—$36 for weavers, the thirty hour week and the two loom system. A test of the strikers' militancy in obtaining these demands took place at the Crow Dye plant where the strikers clashed with the strikebreakers. Several workers were arrested.

N. R. A. "Truce"

Senator Wagner, of the NRA, has come to bring "industrial peace" to the strike-bound silk areas. Not so long ago the silk workers learned what the industrial peace of the NRA meant for them in reality—calling off the strike in a five weeks "truce" during which time the government and the bosses would impose the slave silk code on the workers. In spite of the treacherous agreement of McMahon to this "truce" the strikers voted it down as a man. They must be just as wary of the new maneuvers of the NRA and any of its agents in labor's ranks.

The answer of the strikers to every attempt to lure them back into the mills under promises of "adjustments" under NRA protection has been to strengthen the picket lines and to spread the strike to other silk centers.

The silk workers' strike started after the NRA machinery had already shown how it functioned in other strikes, in collusion with the reactionary labor leaders, to muffle the revolt of the workers and break their fighting ranks with deceitful promises and threats. The tragic experience of the Pennsylvania miners has not been lost on the silk workers.

With such vigilance as the strikers have exhibited to date, with the mass picketing and the sterling militancy that has animated the silk workers they are bound straight for victory!

One Hundred Years of Trade Union Struggles in the Silk Industry

Paterson was the cradle of the class struggle in the United States just as Lyons a great silk center, was in France. Paterson has been the storm center in the battles of the silk workers for more than 100 years. Innumerable strikes, some that ended in victory, and some in utter rout, some that were bloody, and others that were peaceful, some by crafts and others by the entire industry, have been fought by the Paterson workers. These battles were the road-pavers for the great conflict that shakes the textile industry today.

THE PATERSON STRIKE OF 1828
The first strike of factory workers in this country occurred in Paterson in 1826 among the men, women and children cotton operatives. (Silk as a fabric did not make its appearance till twelve years later). These slaves had been toiling from sunrise to sunset. They lived in company-owned tenements. They were striking against the attempt of the bosses to change the lunch hour from twelve o'clock to one and for the ten hour day. Marking the first act of solidarity, the building trades and machinists struck in sympathy. Marking the first act of government terror against striking workers, the militia was called out to drive the workers back to the shops. The strike was lost and the leaders discharged. However the bosses later conceded on the non-hour dispute.

PATERSON—1835
The next strike in Paterson did not come until 1835 when 2,000 cotton mill workers struck for the eleven hour day, the abolition of the store-order system and excessive fines. The workers were led by an organization called the Paterson Association for the Protection of the Laboring Class, Etc. They were aided by the Newark working-men who sent in $20. for relief and the New York workers who appointed committees for the same purpose. The workers of Paterson held out for six long weeks and then their ranks were broken through a compromise offered by the bosses in which two-thirds of the workers returned under a five days in the week and nine hours on Sunday. The merciful bosses had yielded one and one-half hours. The workers remaining out for the 11 hour day were blacklisted as were the children of the leaders.

"ORGANIZE THE UNSKILLED"
In 1879 the International Labor Union waged an eight months battle in Paterson against a reduction in wages. The workers were starved back into submission. Significant about this strike was the appearance of an outstanding leader, P. J. McDonnell who was a staunch advocate of industrial unionism and whose slogan was "organize the unskilled". Under his guidance huge strikes of many months took place in Fall River in 1879 and again in 1884. Strikebreakers smashed the strikes in both these cases.

SLAVE WAGES—1894
The silk operatives of Paterson, driven to desperation by the wretchedly low wages, which, according to the Daily Guardian of the time, were "insufficient to buy the commonest kind of food and purchase coal and wood", walked from mill to mill pulling down the shops. The New York ribbon weavers joined the strike and the Paterson strikers trudged all the way to New York to visit their fellow strikers. The workers returned the visit. But if the strikers were united, so were the bosses of Paterson and New York who had a binding compact to break the strike. Many a striker received a free permanent wave from a policeman's nightstick. The strike was neither won nor lost—some of the mills granted the raise in pay and others did not.

Out of this strike emerged three craft unions—the Horizontal Warpers Association, the Ribbon Weavers Union, the Loomfixers and Twist-ers Union and also two unions that cut across craft lines—the Broad Silk Weavers Union and the Silk Workers Union.

INCH BY INCH

For a while things simmered in Paterson, only for hell to break loose again around the period of 1899, 1900 and 1902. Picketing, police clanking, arrests, denunciation from the press and the pulpit ran through the last years of the last century and the opening of this one. In 1899 after an eight months siege during which time strikers were jailed for calling strikebreakers "scabs", the United Ribbon Weavers Union won a one-cent-a-yard increase on the piece rate.

The United Textile Workers began its career in 1901. Soon after the Paterson craft unions affiliated to it.

Picket lines again in 1902. Led by the Ribbon Weavers Union against which an injunction was invoked, standing the union $5,000 for fines in picketing cases, the broad silk weavers and the dyers won an increase of one and one-half cents on a yard.

LIVING CONDITIONS

The wretched conditions of the years following the turbulent opening of the twentieth century prepared the way for the great battles of 1912, 1913. According to the Silk Association the average wage of the worker was less than $10 weekly and in that period the cost of living rose by 60%.

I. W. W.—1912

The Detroit faction of the I. W. W. headed by Rudolf Katz conducted an unsuccessful struggle against the four loom system. This strike proved to the sceptics that the English speaking and the foreign born workers could stand together and fight side by side. The story of the 1913 strike is told in another column of the Militant, as is the Associated Silk Workers strike of 1919.

AMALGAMATED TEXTILE WORKERS UNION

From May 1919 to November 1922 a militant, class struggle union, whose creed was "one big union for the textile industry" swept the field, winning big battles in Lawrence, Paterson, Allentown, Pawtucket Valley, West Hoboken. It had 50,000 members. This was the Amalgamated Textile Workers. Bad leadership, adverse conditions, a few lost strikes were the cause of its disbanding in 1923.

The crisis of 1921 hit the Paterson broad silk workers local of the United Textile Workers a mortal blow and it passed out of existence.

8 HOUR DAY SLOGAN IN 1924

In 1924 the Associated Silk Workers led 13,000 broad silk workers of Paterson in a strike for the 8 hour day, to offset the 3-4 loom system, a 15% wage increase and union recognition. They won a partial victory, many of the shops recognizing the union and granting wage increases.

THE PASSAIC STRIKE—1926

Clubbed and tear-gassed by cops, slugged by gunmen the silk dye workers of Passaic, Garfield and Lodi, New Jersey held out valiantly against a 10% wage cut and for union recognition under the Left wing United Front Committee of Textile Workers. They lost the strike after a long and memorable struggle.

SOLO OUT

The U. T. W. betrayers of New Bedford sold out many silk workers after a stubborn battle of 22 weeks, in 1928. In the same year the Associated conducted a strike for a wage increase and union recognition. But the strike was not solid. Many crafts remained at work, the union was split in the midst of the strike and it was lost. The 1931 strike is also reported in another column.

IN CONCLUSION

A great tradition belongs to the silk workers, and great lessons are to be learned from it. In the silk workers' struggles stretching over one hundred years many victories have come and gone. The silk workers have had to cope with betrayals on the one hand and craft division on the other. Sometimes they have won and many times they had to return to the mills—vanquished. But the amazing vitality of the struggle of the working class is attested by the present strike—the greatest in the history of the silk workers. This struggle will not cease with the conclusion of the present strike. It will become fiercer and more relentless until that day comes when the working class by its united strength will build a new system where strikes will become memories of a past age of slavery and oppression.

Notes of the Week

MR. REVERE REVEALS

If you're in the working class or if you're bound to get a headache wading through the boss press, especially now—under NRA. The high pressure salesmanship methods of the recovery administration—always professing with their great, passionate love for the laboring masses—are simply overwhelming.

When you're lucky enough to survive the intoxicating bullhym of the front page and the stultifying hypocrisy of the editorials, you will, however, find a good sobering bromide in the financial columns. They usually tell the unadorned truth. They're got to. Because they constitute the only part of the paper that's actually written for the boss—minus the bullhym and minus the embellishments.

And here is what we found on the financial sheet of the N. Y. Herald-Tribune recently:

"With the strong arm of government around the wage earner," says a certain C. T. Revere (of the firm of Munds, Winslow, and Potter), "the labor unions are displaced as guardians of the toiler.... The basic reason for the labor union as we have known it in the past no longer prevails."

This is Mr. Revere's government. He speaks of it knowingly. And he is addressing his kind, on the form of his class. He has no need for camouflage and subterfuges here.

The Herald-Tribune, appropriately enough, sums up his remarks in the headline, "How to Unions Seen by Ievers in NRA Plans." That tells the whole story in a nutshell.

And as if he were anticipating the argument of the recent strikes and the big, successful unionization drive, the gentleman from Wall St. adds:

"Economic forces (?) work out their solution in inexorable fashion even against the infatuation of the working masses."

If we know anything at all of economic forces (sic) and if the present widespread and far-flung testimonial of strike militancy mean anything, Mr. Revere may yet discover that there is nothing quite so inexorable as the workers' march to power, as the economic solution of the working masses.

We might add...even against all the pious "class peace" wishes of the labor fakery and all their persistent servility.

Mr. Revere knows what his class wants and needs, and so does the awakening worker.

The proof? The first plank of nearly every strike action in the growing working class upsurge and the major objective of nine tenths of them has been—union recognition!

That's what the workers think of the "strong arm of government!"

LET HIM WHISTLE

"In Pittsburgh, 3,000 to 5,000 miners, singing as they go, request Carnegie steel workers to join a 'holiday movement' with 85,000 other steel and mine workers in three states."

"Carlyle said: 'Give me the man who sings at his work!'"

"A strike seems, hardly a thing to sing about!"

—ARTHUR BRISBANE.

For all of our sympathy with Mr. Brisbane's outraged...esthetics, and in spite of his rather impressive appeal to Carlyle's authority, we cannot nevertheless understand why he should begrudge the workers a "holiday"—the bankers only had one of their own not so long ago.

It is only just, and even Carlyle had a warm spot for justice.

Still, if the eminent sage of Haverford finds strike holidays "hardly a thing to sing about" in his capacity as major shareholder of a profit-mad enterprise, he ought to compose himself as a member of the Fourth Estate.

We can well understand that he cannot sing over a strike. Just let him whistle....

THERE'S GOLD IN THEM THAR HILLS

"Green Backs Plan for U. S. to Assist Jobless Mine Gold"—Newspaper Headline.

Having clasp the employed working class in codes of ermine and led them into the promised land of the New Deal, the great American Labor Leader prepares to bring down a shower of gold manna (or are we getting it mixed up with NRA?) upon their less fortunate brethren, left behind in the wilderness of unemployment.

St. Louis Needle Trades Strike

St. Louis.—On August 10th 3,000 needle trades workers went on strike in protest against the sweatshop conditions prevailing in St. Louis and their low wage standards of $5 and $6 a week. The strikers rallied under the banner of the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union because of the impression of strength and support it could give them in their struggles against the bosses.

The ILGWU, although in the A. F. of L. for 25 years, boasts of one of the most progressive preambles of any A. F. of L. union. "The preamble to the constitution recognizes the fact that the workers must organize industrially as well as politically in order to effect 'the abolition of the capitalist society' before the workers will be in a position to 'secure their rights as producers'."

Accordingly the garment workers were under the impression that the ILGWU leadership, nationally as well as locally, would give them all the moral and financial support possible, in order to enable them to win their strike. These hopes were soon shattered. The local leadership attempted to settle the strike three times without any concessions from the capitalists. Dubinsky, president of the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union, said that the national union was "off the gold standard" and would be able to give "normal support" to the strikers, but "not much financially." The small amounts of strike relief finally paid out were gained as the result of continual and vicious demands by the rank and file.

The only reason the silk dress workers didn't get as good a contract in St. Louis as elsewhere was because the local union didn't get funds enough to hold out for our demands. It was due to the militancy of the rank and file and the support given by Balis, national vice-president, AND NOT THE LOCAL OFFICIALS, that we finally gained the following demands: shop committee in each factory; 10 percent increase in wages; no discrimination in re-employment of strikers; equal distribution of work; no attrition of all discharges. Although the contract doesn't call for a closed union shop, this demand could have also been gained, if the St. Louis local had the right kind of union leadership fighting militantly in their behalf.

Organizing the Greek Painters

New York.—The most exploited section of the American working-class is that of the unorganized. This section is largely composed of foreign workers, and especially of those that come from countries industrially backward. The Greek painters undoubtedly belong to this section. Although their trade is skilled they remained outside of their trade organizations, with the exception of a few who are in the A. F. of L. because of the fact that they have no tradition of any sort of trade unionism. Another reason could be that workers when coming to this country intended to leave as soon as they made a few dollars. The long years of the crisis however has taught them to realize the idea of returning home rich was an illusion, and they had to remain here as a part of the American working class. As a result of all this they began to see the necessity of organization.

About four weeks ago a few of the more progressive ones assembled in the cellar of the Santa Barbara Greek Church to discuss their problems. They elected a committee which decided to call a meeting the following Sunday at the same place. More than 350 were present at this meeting. Several Greek Stalinists were mobilized from the Greek Spartacus for this meeting. When their spokesman (Hargolis) (Harrison) was presented to address the meeting as a representative of the TUUL the crowd arose en masse and shouted, "We don't want him!" "No Communists here, he's a Communist." (How clearly it could be seen how the Stalinist bureaucrats have discredited the name of Communism).

This however did not prevent Hargolis, when finally given the floor, from giving orders as though he were in a unit meeting of the Communist party. He stated that unless they remove from their temporary committee the "disrupters" (Katsikis, Poulos) the movement cannot go forward. He said the Greek painters must organize themselves independently as a Greek Club, and that later they could decide where to affiliate.

Undoubtedly he meant to take them into the TUUL. But why didn't he clearly state this and point out facts to convince the workers of the advisability of such a step instead of maneuvering with the proposal to form a club? Simply because the TUUL is no less discredited in the eyes of the workers than the official Communist party.

The policy of the Left Opposition proposed by the writers, was that as soon as they are organized the Greek painters immediately ask for a charter from the A. F. of L. painters' union, as one of its locals, with provisions suitable for the organization of the Greek workers. We took the stand that the Greek painters needed union organization in direct association with the other workers of the trade, not isolation from them in a club.

But due to the Stalinists' maneuvers in dragging out the meeting points of order, etc., more than two-thirds had left the hall when a vote was taken as to whether they should remain independent as a club or go to the A. F. of L. In spite of that 77 voted for our proposal and 54 for that of the Stalinists. They then authorized the committee to investigate the ways and means of getting into the A. F. of L. and present a concrete program.

The following meeting, however, the Stalinists mobilized twice as many of their supporters as were present at the previous meeting and, instead of bringing a program according to the previous decision of the members, they presented their old program. The workers present protested and, although less were present than at the previous meeting, they walked out in protest and only about 80 Stalinists and about 15 workers remained. The remaining voted anew whether to go to the AFL or remain independent, 25 voted for the Stalinists and 15 against.

Once more the Stalinist policy helped to disorganize the awakening Greek painters. But we will not allow them to carry out their policy of "Rule or Ruin". There are more than 200 Greek painters in various A. F. of L. locals who are willing to support our program in organizing the Greek unorganized painters. With their help we will carry out this plan.

The "United Front" in California

OAKLAND, CALIF.—

On September 25, 1933 a meeting of the United Front Conference to aid the victims of German Fascism was held in Oakland, Calif. 12 people were present. Outside of one delegate representing an unemployed organization, one observer from the Sheet Metal Workers' Union and two delegates from the Communist League, the other eight people represented the Communist Party and such independent organizations as the "Friends of the Soviet Union". The majority of them represented nothing even of this sort. This was the result of several months of muddling on the issue, of muddling on the united front tactics, of putting up a paper screen of paper organizations.

That this result was considered by party people as fully representative of their "leadership" is the fact that this meeting of the "united front" Conference considered it perfectly in order to expel the Communist League of America as an organization from the Conference. The motion for expulsion was not motivated in a new way. It called for expulsion of these "disrupters, counter-revolutionary Trotskyites". Otherwise, the "conference" looked more like a unit meeting of the Communist party turned inside out than a meeting of a genuine united front.

One thing in this Stalinist united front was genuine. This was the fanatical, blind hatred for the Communist League of these militants adhering to the official C. P. and who are misled by their bureaucratic, bankrupt leadership. The method used by these people can be illustrated by the following. At the previous meeting comrade Moss of the Communist League, who succeeded in putting through several motions, was elected on the arrangements committee which had to meet in the Carpenter's Hall. When comrade Moss came there at the appointed time he did not find anybody there. The reason is that in order to escape him the C. P. people met in a pool room where only Stalinists who had been "tipped off" could find them. Still that printed on the reverse of this form, to wit:

1. That the names and addresses of the publisher, editor, managing editor, and business managers are: Publisher: The Communist League of America (Opposition) New York, N. Y.

Editor: Arne Swaback Managing Editor: Arne Swaback Business Manager: Thomas Stamm Post Office Address: 126 East 16th Street, New York, N. Y.

2. That the owner is: (if owned by a corporation, its name and address must be stated and also immediately thereunder the names and addresses of stockholders owning or holding one per cent or more of total amount of stock. If not owned by a corporation, the names and addresses of the individual owners must be given. If owned by a firm, company, or other unincorporated concern, its name and address, as well as those of

"absence" of comrade Moss was given as a proof of the "disruptive tactics" of the Communist League. The rude, mechanical expulsion of an organization from the mock united front, by people loyal to the corrupt Stalinist machinery, who shamefully play with the issue involving the victims of Fascist gangs, and their inability to organize a movement which, at the first stage, promised a better result judging by the first response, obliges the Communist League of America to organize a genuine, representative movement of working class organizations to fight against Fascism.

It must be clearly stated that only one genuine attempt to put life in this still born "united front" was made and it was made by the Communist League, in the way of Jimmy Higgins work and in an attempt to present a program of action. The Communist League of America became active here lately. A branch was organized and good forces are rallying around it.

Mirror Workers Strike Ended

NEW YORK.—

The general strike of the novelty mirror workers, is now definitely and tragically at an end. The strike that was declared on September 12th with so much enthusiasm and hope for the establishment of some decent working conditions, and involved some three hundred and more workers, with the most militant determination to struggle and "stick it out to the end" has been allowed to peter out without the least fault of the workers themselves.

The organization of the union that was originally begun by a number of young but energetic workers, was steered away from its correct path, from the moment it came in contact with the stupid Stalinist bureaucrats in the shape of the T. U. U. L. At one point, when the general strike was still solid, the bosses' Association offered to grant most of the demands if the union affiliated to the A. F. of L. The Stalinists, concerned far more about the fortunes of the T. U. U. L. than about the interests of the workers, stood out for a "revolutionary" union. Caught in between the two forces, the bosses and the TUUL, the consequence result was, as was forewarned by the original organizers, the workers got no union at all, notwithstanding the victory scored by the settlement of two shops upon more or less favorable terms.

The Left Oppositionists, sensing the mood of the workers, seeing that they were beginning to lose hope and their former determination, tried to bring the strike to a speedy settlement, by demanding affiliation to the A. F. of L. But Sam Nesson would hear nothing of it. Instead he violently attacked the worker who made the proposal, calling him all sorts of names in the best Stalinist manner, even going so far as to call him a spy for the bosses. It is interesting to note that not one worker believed that, and later they conformed in the Oppositionist that they believe all of Nesson's slander holds for Nesson himself. The workers seeing that victory was almost within their reach, and yet not being able to obtain it, became demoralized and began to go back to work, at first singly then doubly, until there was literally a stampede to rescue whatever was possible.

The stupid Stalinist can explain the loss of the strike very easily. If it had not been for a couple of "skunks" going back to work all might have been well yet. The bureaucrat does not realize that it was precisely because of his blind leadership that several "skunks" went back to work. Needless to say many workers are totally disgusted with Nesson, the TUUL, the Party and everything else that is "red". The Stalinist contribution in the mirror workers' strike, as elsewhere, was demoralization and defeat.

Swaback Opens Tour at Newark

At the meeting of the Left Opposition on the 20th of September, the workers of Newark had an opportunity to hear comrade Swaback give the first lecture on his national tour. He spoke of the cause of the down consequences of which forced the Left Opposition to change its policy and concentrate its forces and activities towards the establishment of a new party and a new International.

The degeneration and final collapse of the Communist International and its national sections facilitated the danger of a counter-revolutionary overthrow of the Soviet Union. Our hope as a faction to reform the party and the International is completely exhausted, leaving the only other road: the formation of a new party and a new International.

The meeting impressed the workers gravely. Queries penetrating the smallest particle of the vital question were launched at the speaker, the answers to which made a increasingly clear, that the Left Oppositions path is the only positive one.

So great was the demand for our literature that our supply was exhausted before all those eager to receive it could be satisfied. This will be remedied at our next meeting in the near future, to which we shall go well equipped. Workers crowded around comrade Swaback after the meeting and were eager to have him explain the things to which they received no satisfactory answer at the meetings held by the official party. We gained a few new members and numerous sympathizers thus making us stronger for the gigantic task ahead of us, which we shall not shrink but continue on unflinchingly in the interest of the world proletariat.

With the 'Militant' Builders

NEW PRICE

Beginning with this issue the new price of the Militant will be 2c a copy. The idea behind this reduction in price is to give the paper a wider circulation.

NEW SUBSCRIPTION RATE.

At the same time and for the same reason the subscription rates have been reduced as follows: 1 year, $1. (Canada and foreign, $1.50); 6 months, 50c (Canada and foreign, 75c).

TO NOVEMBER 15th.

The sub drive which opens with this announcement will run until the 15th of November. That gives us about 5 weeks in which to materially increase the number of subscribers on our list.

HISTORY OF THE RUSSIAN REVOLUTION.

In the three Militant builders getting the most subs from now till November 15th we offer the following (or equivalents in other books): First place—the three volumes of each individual member, must be holder appears upon the books of the company as trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the names of the person or corporation for whom such trustee is acting is given; also that the said two paragraphs contain statements embracing affiant's full knowledge and belief as to the circumstances and conditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stock and securities in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner; and this affiant has no reason to believe that any other person, association, or corporation has any interest direct or indirect in the said stock, bonds, or other securities than as so stated by him.

THOMAS STAMM, Business Mgr. Sworn to and subscribed before me this 2nd day of October 1933.

RITA M. WOLF, Notary Public (My Commission expires March 30, 1935).

the history of the Russian Revolution by comrade Trotsky; second place—two volumes of the History; third place, one volume of the History.

DOUBLE THE CIRCULATION.

We are so confident that the new orientation of the League and the more popular price of the Militant makes it possible to extend the circulation that we have set as our goal a 100% increase in the number of subscribers. If you are a laborer, you can do your share by getting a sub from a fellow worker. If every subscriber sets that as his minimum goal it will be no job at all to double the circulation.

Then, there are some irrepressible comrades who go out and gather in anywhere from 6 to 30 subs. So all in all the work we have set is not beyond our abilities.

Shachtman Speaks at Philadelphia

Philadelphia, Pa.—The discussion on our new course was met in Philadelphia by the largest turnout for an Opposition meeting here. Comrade Arne Shachtman spoke on "The Second and Third Internationals after Hitler's Victory" before an audience of over 100, most of them Communist workers.

Our speaker analyzed the traitorous role and second breakdown of the Social Democracy. He followed by tracing the tragic course of the C. I. leadership, capped by the German capitulation and a cowardly whitewash of the whole policy of defeat. Forces of regeneration for a new Communist movement are marshalling. This movement will have a really revolutionary defense of the workers' state. This movement bases itself on the Lenin Congresses of the C. I. and Marxism. The cadres, the policy of the Left Opposition is its guide.

Comrade Tom Holmes, a young militant whom the Young Communist League expelled a week ago for "Trotskyism" was chairman. He spoke on the YCL practice of "party democracy." Sol Thomas, whom the C. P. also expelled for the same crime of holding views favorable to the Left Opposition and who openly demanded that the Party recognize its errors on Germany and the trade union policy, spoke on his experience in and defense of our trade union policy.

A lively discussion followed; about ten people taking the floor. Most of the discussion was from Stalinists present, who tried in their argumentatively weak but nevertheless less logical manner to defend the "leadership" and the "line". Against us they prepared to quote the N. Y. Times; to tell us they were not responsible for not calling the 7th World Congress of the Comintern because they weren't in USSR; and insinuations and outright slander to the point of trying to incite members of a union against a comrade on a trade basis. A member of the C. P. district Euro who was present took the floor but evaded an offer of equal time with our speaker—a debate.

The clarity and boldness of our revolutionary position put forward by our speaker's brilliant speech made a deep impression on the crowd. They remained till after midnight, contributed generously to a collection (after paying admission), asked many questions, and among the youth asked for information about the "Spartacus Youth Club" which was organized the following Wednesday.

This meeting is the latest series of meetings the Philadelphia L. O. branch has been holding, revolving around the world shaking events in Germany. In early August comrade Arne Swaback soon after his return from abroad, came here and spoke on "Germany Under Hitler" to a good audience.

The Philadelphia branch has rented 524 W. Thompson Street which will become a center for our activities. Those interested in our activities, study classes and the Spartacus Youth Club communicate with the Secretary at the address given. The branch is experiencing a steady growth and strengthening of its work. New contacts, particularly C. P., Y. C. L. and Y. P. S. L. members, and workers attracted by our street meetings, are being made continually.

Labor Fakery at Work

Roosevelt, General Johnson, the U. S. Steel and Lewis, Murray, and Co. of the United Mine Workers are united in a typical N. R. A. victory. The victims, as usual, are the workers, in this case the strikers at the Frick mines of the Steel Trust. The mutual triumph of all parties concerned (except, of course, the workers) had been recorded by the signing of an agreement, promising "union conditions" in the captive mines, by Thomas Moses, for the Frick Coke Co. and by Philip Murray, vice-president of the UMW.

The business smells to heaven with the hypocrisy of the labor fakery and with the bullhym of the NIRA in operation. What have the workers gotten in this settlement of the strike? A minimum wage for inside miners in Pennsylvania of $4.60 for an eight hour day. If the miracle happens of the miners getting five days a week of work and having no deductions from their wages made for powder, etc., they will get $23. In the face of a dollar that is down 1.3 this comes to less than $16. When the mine company is through making its deductions, the rest will be swallowed up by the rent for company houses and the robbery prices at the company stores, leaving the miners in their usual state of penury, and debt to the company. And in the captive mines, where the workers have already fought through two bloody strikes, the union will not be recognized.

No Union Recognition

Although the New York Times calls it "recognition in everything but name" the operators of the captive mines have already indicated during the strike, that is now raging, that they had no intention of dealing with any union representatives. And they mean what they say. Thus the workers are left with conditions almost as before, with every assurance in the world that the bosses will brutally crush their union as soon as the strike is ended.

Some very significant statements have been made by General Johnson and Murray about the settlement. On Oct. 2nd Johnson came out with a statement that he had practically ordered the UMW to accept the settlement. Already the cold steel, hidden behind the NRA bullhym, begins to show itself. We can be certain that General Johnson's order was a very real order. And did the bureaucrats of the Union protest? Far from it. Gracefully taking their cue, like the well trained capitalist flunkies they are, they obediently signed on the dotted line, and now are busy trying to break the strike.

Says Murray in calling the miners back to work:

"The President then said to me, 'Philip, I want you to get these men back to work.' I replied 'If there is anything in God's world that I can do for you, I will be glad to try.'"

—N. Y. Times.

And while you were engaged in this loving conversation with the President, Mr. Murray, what about the workers on the picket lines of Pennsylvania and Kentucky? But Murray did think of them. Concerning the President's command he states: "Any union or union officials who refuse to obey their command will not live long." Thus Murray assumes his masters that the UMW gangsters will be ready to help the bosses in killing off rebellious workers.

The Miners Are Fighting For A Union

And yet with all of this treachery among the leadership, the workers are fighting for their union, and their union is still the United Mine Workers. Although Martin Ryan, the Pennsylvania strike leader, asks when were Lewis and Murray on the picket lines, at the same time he calls upon the workers to get every mine under their union, the UMW. The workers who are fighting in the mine fields are beginning to realize that the leadership is rotten with corruption.

The workers know that the "settlement" is a sell-out. They are still fighting. Martin Ryan calls upon them to continue the strike until the L. C. Frick Company recognizes the union and signs the code. And now if this revolt is not to be crushed as so many revolts have been in the past, there is the greatest need for a real, organized Left wing in the UMW.

On the National Recovery Act

I. To interpret correctly the NRA one must understand bourgeois democracy in its full form and base his analysis on the uneven development of capitalism.

Bourgeois democracy, symbolically speaking, is an elastic substance—in countries where it exists, the ruling class attempts to stretch the democratic concept to an extent necessary to meet the conditions and reactions of the masses, to cover up the shortcomings of capitalism.

President Roosevelt, in speaking about the dictatorial power invested in him by Congress, said that it was done within the bounds of democracy. He was correct. The boundaries of democracy reach out far. The ruling class outlines these boundaries and moves them whenever necessary.

Only in the event of the ruling class contending with ever-widening conditions and a revolutionary proletariat who threaten the existence of their state, will they change their form of rule. When bourgeois democracy in its most extended form fails to cover up the discrepancies of capitalism (if the workers are not ready to take over power themselves) the democratic form of that capitalist government dies in the struggle between the two classes and is replaced by capitalism with open tyranny against the masses' fascism.

II. To say that the NRA is a step toward state capitalism would be incorrect. What we understand by state capitalism is that when business in a country disintegrates to the extent that it no longer pays profit on investments, the state takes over these industries to save whatever it can for the capitalists of their system of exploitation. It is not inevitable, however, that capitalism of a country when finding itself in such a position must necessarily develop into state capitalism.

We know that when aggravated conditions arose in other countries the ruling class used violence and open suppression of the workers in order to maintain themselves in power.

Furthermore, we do not know just what form state capitalism would assume if it was to come about. This would depend upon the general economic conditions and the sharpness of the class struggle in the country at that period.

Measures of the NRA alone without the required conditions could not lead the country into state capitalism. Its attempt to bring about class collaboration does not necessarily carry such germs. As to the monopoly in industries that the NRA tends to this with a great speed than before. We must know that monopoly is part of imperialism.

In predicting the transition to state capitalism there lies the danger of mistaking centralization of wealth, accelerated by the crisis, for the final breakdown of the economy of the country and the transition to state capitalism.

Even in the event that the railroads and a few other industries are taken over by the government, it would not mean that we entered the period of state capitalism. This has been done by governments under different conditions before.

Outlining state capitalism as a possible phase of capitalist development, it would be incorrect to assume that the former can begin before the crisis threatens to wipe out the top layer of the ruling class. It would also be incorrect to assume that the capitalists will without a struggle, give up the phase of competition in their system in a way that it will curtail their profits. Similarly it would be incorrect to say that the capitalists can use the machine of bourgeois democracy to move gradually into state capitalism. The greed that exists in capitalism and the dissatisfaction of the masses that grows proportionally with such conditions, point to conflict instead.

The mistaking of the NRA with state capitalism creates the danger of confusing the workers as to what the stage of the struggle they are in and bringing them to the false conclusion that capitalism solves its own problems by the process of evolution and will eventually change into some form more beneficial to mankind.

At the present stage of development a section of the American masses retain their false concept that the capitalist state operates for the benefit of the people. To expose the NRA as a step toward state capitalism is neither correct nor would it react favorably for the revolutionary movement. Many workers who are not class conscious would welcome the idea of state control as a way out.

III.

The United States, being a country of vast natural resources and having entered the capitalist phase at a later period, developed industrially on such a tremendously large scale that together with its imperialism it was able to keep its so-called equilibrium until the beginning of 1929. Because of that, the crisis came to this country upon different conditions from those in Europe without finding a strongly organized working class.

The past opportunities of the country actually monopolized by the few, but interpreted generally in application, created in the United States a bourgeois ideology within its working class. Unlike the European workers who passed through scores of years toward crystallization as a class, the American worker, with his individualistic psychology remained separated from his fellows, going through year after year of the crisis under severe hardships with hopes for better times returning.

The ruling class in the United States has hardly a solidified proletariat to contend with, but the condition of the country and the 17 millions unemployed in themselves constitute a threatening force against the system. As the reaction of things always are in accord with the conditions that bring them about, the NRA is the logical outcome, reflecting American conditions and therefore the American way of doing things.

On the one hand this is an extreme move to stop unemployment and on the other, the execution of the plan is left mostly to the employers. As such the NRA can have very little success in a system based upon rugged individualism.

The NRA is meant to have one other function for the ruling class and that is, an institution through which they will try to shape the ideology of the American working class in such a way as to check their dissatisfaction from flowing into revolutionary channels.

Through clever maneuvering the NRA characterizes itself as a labor agency, pretending to take the part of the workers. It thereby aims to give the impression that all differences can be met by the NRA. This gives it the form of an American institution for the collaboration of both classes meaning to instill into the minds of the workers that such a thing is possible.

The NRA is a desperate attempt on the part of the ruling class within the works of bourgeois democracy to prolong their system of exploitation.

Conclusions from German Defeat

Modern history will record no greater crime than the defeat of the German working class and the rise of fascism under conditions which were favorable for a far different result. The German proletariat, the flower of the international working class, was defeated without a struggle.

The dialectic of the whole historical process was toward the Bonapartist regime of Von Schleicher—Von Papen. Not only was this unforeseen but the Bonapartist regime itself which posed the whole question on the point of a needle—Fascism or Communism—was not understood and the Stalinists continued to play with the treacherous theory of "social fascism" and the isolationist theory of the united front from below. The enemies of the revolutionary proletariat could ask for nothing better.

Incidentally, the defeat of the German working class does not stop there but becomes a defeat for the world working class. In Hitler is to be perceived the super-Wrangler of the world imperialist bourgeoisie. Not only has the world revolution been set back by decades but at the same time a way has been opened up for an attack on the Soviet Union through the destruction of its most powerful ally, the organized German proletariat. Nor is this all. From a potential ally possessing the revolutionary state—rifles, artillery, cannon, etc.—which it could have brought forward in the struggle for the defense of its sister republic.

Lenin and Trotsky saw in the Russian revolution a stage in the world revolution. Since 1917, the basic contradiction of capitalism, next to the antagonism between the productive forces and the national boundaries which points to the inconsistency of the national state, has been the existence of the workers' republic on the one hand and the capitalist encirclement on the other. The eclecticism of Stalin-Bucharin, which combines the reactionary non-Marxist theory of socialism in one country with a hypocritical lip-service to the slogan of world revolution, is a denial and a renunciation of this fundamental contradiction of capitalism.

From such a hopelessly narrow, theoretical departure there follows basically the blunders of tactics and strategy from which—and from which alone—can be explained the terrible tragedies of the Chinese and the German revolutions.

The Marxist theory of the Permanent Revolution is, in its essence, the only theory that follows logically from the Leninist formula of imperialism as the last, the decay stage of capitalism—an epoch which will be marked by wars and revolutions. The rotting structure of imperialism—capitalism weighed down by the contradictions which are inherent in its now outgrown property relationships threaten its death crash to smother the whole of mankind's technical and cultural accomplishments. The next stage in the evolution of society is Communism. The next and only historically progressive class to become conscious and to carry out the tasks imposed upon it by history is the proletariat. Hence the epoch of revolutions which follow in the path of decaying capitalism are proletarian revolutions. Upon the recognition of this depends the tactics of the revolutionary party.

Are the Stalinists capable of meeting the test? Germany, China and to an extent England show that they have not been equal to it in the past. History shows that the Comintern has been transformed from the organizing center of the world revolution into the organizer of gigantic defeats. But what are the perspectives for the rebirth, the regeneration of the International of Lenin and Trotsky? Drugged by the poisonous theory of socialism in one country, weighed down by the oppression of the bureaucracy the perspectives are dim and few. The Stalinist International is incapable of making a revolution anywhere. It has met its 4th of August. If its betrayal was unconscionable it was nevertheless fatal and disastrous. Its well-meaning and its good intentions can be pointed to only with a feeling of remorse and shame. The road to hell is paved with good intentions.

Never before has history imposed such a gigantic task as that which faces a small group of revolutionists today. The capitalists are in a murderous offensive and the workers in retreat or at best in a weak defense—such is the picture when we look at the situation at large. The Second International is an international only in the sense of the international betrayal of labor; the Third International is, as incapable of rousing and leading the workers as the Second International is unwilling—what can be expected of them? It is necessary to face the facts. In Germany and China new parties are needed. The deceitful and lying accounts about Soviets in China and "revolutionary upsurge" in Germany proved to us that these people are not revolutionists but miserable clowns who play and play badly at the "game" of revolution.

The German working class will live to travel the road of revolution again. Upon the wreckage of its cruel and senseless defeat, of its blasted hopes, out of the dead ashes of its burned out illusions will spring its regeneration, its rebirth. But these will not be blotting out the hideous nightmare of the past. The dialectic of the situation lies in the fact that out of the recognition of its weaknesses the cautious selection of its leadership. When it travels the road of revolution again it will do so under the leadership of tried and seasoned revolutionists, those who have led revolutions before, the heroes and butchers of the victorious Bolshevik October.

—G. ROBERTS.

Nationalization and the N.R.A.

The initial stage of the "new relations" of capital and labor under the Blue Eagle has given rise to new hopes and illusions on the part of all shades of reformists. This is due to the fact that, in working out the slave codes for the different industries, the trap was baited with "concessions" to the workers. This enabled the capitalist to put through their plan with a minimum of "labor strife." Many of the old working class problems have been presented in a new light by the N.R.A. One of these problems is the question of nationalization of the industries. Therefore, it is essential to understand this question and to explain the relation of nationalization to reaction, reform and revolution.

Complete nationalization of industry cannot exist under capitalism, but nationalization of different industries in different forms is an essential part of capitalist development. In the period of decay capitalism, the question of nationalization is often a life and death question of capitalism. This is also true in times of war. Either class can use the slogan of nationalization of the industries. The application, reaction, reform or revolution, depending on conditions and class relations and on how the slogan will materialize in life. Fascist reaction, reformist social democracy, laborist or revolutionary communism—each of these, at certain stages of the class struggle, require a program of nationalization. The slogan must apply to that requirement.

A Slogan of Reform To begin with, one can say that under capitalism the use of the slogan of nationalization, by itself, is a slogan of reformism and nothing else. Even if one adds to this slogan the demand for worker's participation in the nationalization, it is still confined within the realm of reformism. Take for example, the NRA. It represents the first steps toward partial nationalization of industry. It is the embryo. The capitalists of the coal and railroad industries are divided on the question. Some are urging nationalization, with compensation, in order to be relieved of a bad investment. If the NRA does not bring the desired results, through the organization of a form of cartels and the elimination of the small producers, steps toward nationalization of the steel industries will be taken by a section of the capitalists and reformers. They will enact "temporary emergency measures" which will become "permanent" until the industries again pay dividends.

To issue the slogan of nationalization of the industries, such as the "Humb Plan", etc., in relation to the NRA, would be to render service to reformism as well as to reaction. Does this mean that we close the door to the use of the slogan of nationalization? As an isolated, separate, propaganda slogan, yes. But not if it is properly coordinated with other slogans and actions suitable for the objective conditions.

The NRA brings this question to the fore. But present conditions require that we place the other slogans and actions first and the slogan of nationalization as secondary, and as an auxiliary slogan to the other.

The Working Class Approach

Since the capitalists and the workers can both use the slogan of nationalization one must answer the question of how it will be possible to distinguish the class content of the one from the other. The coordinating slogans must deal with the question of workers' control. This is the working class approach to the question. The working class action must be in the direction of working class control. Slogans serving this aim must be applied.

It is time to allow must be applied, and action in the trade union control of production, open book-keeping in the capitalist industries and nationalization without compensation. The main emphasis must be placed on propaganda and action dealing with the question of workers' control of the industries. The most important action today, toward this end, deals with the trade union question. This has been pointed out in the Militant, week in and week out. Without a strong left wing in the trade unions, armed with a correct policy, the revolutionary Communist cannot even consider the question of nationalization and workers' control in any concrete sense.

The working class content of the slogan of nationalization is distinguished from the enemy class content on the question of propaganda and action toward workers' control. The question of workers' control includes the question of nationalization, but the nationalization does not of itself include or imply workers' control. It is up to the workers to decide this question. To grab the problem at the wrong end will play into the hands of the reformists. The revolutionists must guard against loose talk on the question of nationalization.

The best way to insure the proper application of the slogan of nationalization and workers' control is to speed up the work and activity of the present stage which deals with our trade union policy and trade union work. Once the revolutionary Communist is entrenched in the trade unions this slogan will become a living issue in this stage of American capitalism.

THE DEVIL'S GRANDMOTHER AGAIN

About the United Front with Grzeszinsky.

L'Humanite of September 19th reproduces the photograph of Grzeszinsky, the former social-democratic chief of police of Berlin, in the role of witness before the London counter-trial in the case of the burning of the Reichstag. It is clear that the poor editors of L'Humanite did not think about the significance of their printing this photograph. Otherwise, they would have resigned with shame, admitting that they have no right to be in charge of a workers' newspaper.

The London counter-trial which attempts to establish the truth in the matter of the burning of the Reichstag is an act of political struggle against fascism. The judges, witnesses, experts make their appearance at this trial not through compulsion but in order to achieve a definite political aim: the struggle with the hands of Hitler. Grzeszinsky detests Communism; he proved it in deeds, having shot down Communist workers. However, the same Grzeszinsky voluntarily appears at the London counter-trial to testify in favor of the Communists: Torgler, Dimitrov and others against the Fascist Goering and Co. By publishing the report of the London counter-trial and in particular the photograph of the witness Grzeszinsky, L'Humanite participates in a united front with Grzeszinsky against Goering. Is this not clear?

More than two years ago we wrote that in the struggle against Hitler we are ready to make a united front not only with the devil and his grandmother but even with Grzeszinsky himself. The unfortunate editors of L'Humanite and the "Cahiers de Bolchevisme" spilled not a little ink then, trying to prove our complete adherence to social fascism. Truly fate is unmerciful to these people. Grzeszinsky could have died in time, or could have gone over to fascism so as to lighten somewhat the lot of the ill-fated editors of L'Humanite. But Grzeszinsky lived through, emigrated, appeared at the trial in favor of the tried Communists and thereby forced L'Humanite to print his photograph as an ally in the united front.

The London counter-trial, no matter how modest its political significance, is nevertheless very much worthwhile. Perhaps the readers of L'Humanite—the editors are

When President Roosevelt signed the National Industrial Recovery Act he expressed the belief that history would record it as the most important and far reaching legislation ever enacted by the American Congress. "It represents," he said, "a supreme effort to stabilize for all time the many factors which make for the prosperity of the nation and the preservation of the American standard of living."

To stabilize for all time—this is not possible in a world of flux, of constant motion, in which economic equilibriums are established to be shattered again. Least of all is it possible in a capitalist world—and still less so during its period of decline and decay. Nevertheless Roosevelt knew his ritual. He knew that the NRA would form the foundation upon which American imperialism hoped to make new advances and new conquests in the world market. Today the administrators are impatient to get this whole machinery in complete working shape in order to start seriously upon this advance. But today such an advance is also a problem much more complicated than before.

Results of Early Expansion

American capitalism in its early period of development had at hand all the prerequisites for monopoly capital within its own borders. When centered within the industrialized northeastern states, it found, by pushing westward, a mighty field of expansion for export of capital and export of means of production. But the resulting powerfully developed national economy, the vastly expanded productive forces and surplus of capital available produced also its opposite—growing interdependence upon world economy. American capitalism extended its structure throughout the world and acquired a world basis. Up to this point the law of uneven development of capitalism by which the various countries pass through their development in different forms and different tempi, has acted as a lever favoring the United States.

Through this uneven development,

Strike Wave Points the Way of the Future Development which, as comrade Trotsky reminds us, is more of a historical reality than a law, the United States reached its stage of combined development. This took on the form of a highly advanced industrial system alongside of a backward political ideology which is most directly reflected within the working class. The internal colonization, or rather the seemingly limitless expansion of the home market is, of course, the main factor and forms the basis for this retarded consciousness. Enormous capitalist profits and super profits allowed for a wide margin available for the maintenance of a higher standard of living for the labor aristocracy. Class collaboration unfolded to almost perfection and thereby reinforced the means of keeping the working class as a whole in subjection. Upon such a foundation the super structure of bourgeois democracy could attain its greatest triumphs and secure for itself a long lease of life.

American Capitalism Depending Upon World Equilibrium

But speaking in historical terms American imperialism arrived belatedly upon the world arena. It was therefore deprived of the luxury of floating leisurely with the upward current of growing capitalism as was enjoyed by British imperialism for an extensive period of time. The American counterparty was compelled to make a forced march at dramatic speed to acquire a world base. But its emergence coincided with the period when the capitalist system on a world scale was passing its peak and was heading in a downward direction. That its own inner contradictions have become vastly intensified by this process has already been proved by the crisis reaching its greatest proportions precisely in the highly advanced United States.

During the period of growing capitalism the unevenness of development of the various countries was far greater than now. Today the world has become more uniform. The backward countries have supplemented their backwardness with the latest industrial advances. Capitalist economy is world economy extending beyond the legal boundaries and intertwined among nations. Its outstanding feature is the interdependence of the various national economies. Each of the contending powers are dependent upon the world equilibrium and subject to all of its shocks and turns. Most of all is that the case of the United States because of its far flung interests. It should, therefore, not be necessary to reiterate the indisputable fact that when the United States penetrates further into the world market the mighty barriers of conflicting imperialist interests arise in all their imposing magnitude.

Future Trends Within the Country

But this is only one side of the problem. Within the United States itself, its new world advance will impose a terrific strain upon the class relationship existing at present. This relationship can by no means be held within its present bounds even with the assistance of the NRA machinery, which is designed primarily for such a purpose. The slightly favorable turn in the economic conjuncture which is now in evidence tends by itself to spur the workers on to make increasing demands and thereby bring more to the surface and make more acute the conflicts engendered by the capitalist mode of production. With the NRA institutions attempting to check these conflicts they will assume more of a political character. At present the heavy crop of strikes which are spreading like wildfire everywhere indicates the future trend of developments.

In this country we are moving no longer within the orbit of conditions of the past. The margin of capitalist profits formerly available for the maintenance of a higher level for the labor aristocracy has become seriously narrowed. American capitalism, in order to effectively pursue its furious onslaught upon the world market, and to be prepared for the competition it meets, needs above all a low wage level throughout its industrial enterprises. To maintain the tranquility of class relationships of the past on this basis is not possible. We must therefore visualize the immediate future in the United States as one of sharply intensified struggles with the added phenomenon of disturbances reaching revolutionary proportions not at all out of the question.

No one can as yet predict whether a real and substantially favorable change in the economic conjuncture can be accomplished in the United States. But the conflicts and disturbances which will grow out of the efforts for its accomplishment can be foreseen. The formerly favorable lever for the United States constituted by the uneven development of capitalism has been turned into its opposite and is reacting against the United States. It is now compelled to seek the new roads of advance within a decaying world system. It is compelled to assume the major responsibility for checking further class disturbances and, if possible, for the crushing of further proletarian revolutions inevitably growing out of the more intense world exploitation. If to this is to be added the possibility of failure to arrive at a favorable change of economic conjuncture, then it is necessary to say that the perspectives for the United States assume a much more directly revolutionary character.

The relations of world economic forces have changed with the rise of American imperialism. With the shifting of the world economic center to the United States this change became more definite and more direct. But with this shift, there is also a corresponding shift—at first only slowly but sure to gain momentum—of the revolutionary center from Europe to America. In a general sense we formerly counted upon the revolution to be accomplished in Europe first and upon the victorious European proletariat to light to hold its own against reactionary America. It is now possible to say, still speaking in a general sense, that this outlook has been reversed by the dialectics of the relation of forces. Revolutionary struggles here move up to the very top of the agenda of historically immediate possibilities.

It is said in informed quarters that a reporter of an important capitalist paper ventured the prediction to Roosevelt: "If you do not succeed with the New Deal you will be known to posterity as the worst President the United States ever had." Roosevelt answered ironically: "If I do not succeed with the New Deal I will be known to posterity as the last President of the United States."

1. The very fact of a conference of 14 parties, organizations and groups of most heterogeneous character and tendencies was the result of a very deep crisis of the socialist and communist movements, or more exactly the fruit of the collapse not only of the Second but also—on another historical level and due to other causes—of the Third International.

2. There can be, it is clear, no thought of the building of a new international by organizations which have profoundly different and even opposite principle bases. The Left Opposition participated in this conference under its own banner with the aim of assisting in the principled separation from reformists and centrists and of drawing together truly homogeneous revolutionary organizations.

3. The only real result of the conference, but an exceptionally important one, is the declaration signed by four organizations (L.O., S. A. P., two Holland parties: R. S. P. and O. S. P.) which represented the first deliberate step in the direction of the building of the new foundations of Marx and Engels.

4. The Plenum clearly realizes that the four named organizations of different political origin cannot attain complete unity on fundamental principles, tactical and organizational methods within a few days. At any rate, the attained result creates sufficient basis to believe that the future work of the organizations on the programmatic Manifesto and tactical documents will make it possible not only to assure the necessary unity of conceptions, but also to attract under the banner of the new International a number of other revolutionary organizations and fractions.

5. The Plenum considers it necessary immediately to begin the elaboration of the programmatic documents and to create a technical secretariat which could, while yet in the process of editing the Manifesto and the resolutions, enter into contact with sympathizing organizations so that their opinions, suggestions and criticisms may find a reflection in the text of the programmatic documents.

6. The Plenum instructs its representative in the programmatic commission to be guided by the basic ideas expressed in the Declaration of the Bolshevik-Leninists and made public at the Paris conference of August 27-28th.

7. With regard to the decisions adopted by the heterogeneous majority of the conference and permeated through and through by this heterogeneity, the Plenum of the Bolshevik-Leninists does not find it possible to take political responsibility for these decisions. Insofar as the adopted decisions may lead to this or that practical action (for example boycott of Hitler Germany) the Left Opposition is ready according to circumstances, to take part in actions which correspond to its general principles.

On the basis of practical activities the Left Opposition will always aim at a closer drawing together with parties and organizations nearest to it. Only under this condition can a broad and courageous policy of the united front for immediate political aims help the work of the building of the new Communist International.

• • • • •

The Plenum calls upon all sections of the International Left Opposition to realize fully the historic importance of the step made. A task of immediate urgency now consists in giving the "Declaration of Four" the widest possible publicity in Communist, Socialist, trade-union, and especially, youth ranks. Through newspapers, leaflets, posters, in speeches and discussion it is necessary to popularize and to interpret the meaning of the Declaration. Without sparing any effort it is necessary to rouse the proletarian vanguard to the building of the new International.

The declaration of the Bolshevik-Leninists made public at the conference ends with the words: "Our revolutionary responsibility is immeasurably great. Let our creative work rise to the height of this responsibility." Let us fully realize that these words refer first of all to the Bolshevik-Leninists themselves.

—PLENUM OF THE INTERNATIONAL SECRETARIAT.

Sept. 13 1933.

In taking this position the Plenum only makes use of the right which the Conference granted until October 15th to all the participating parties, namely: to ratify, or on the contrary, to reject the resolutions of the conference.

The Silk Workers' Battle

In the general resurgence of labor militancy which has greeted the inauguration of the NRA the general strike of the silk workers holds today a place of outstanding prominence and significance. The spirit of 1913 is abroad again. The strike, now in its fifth week, presents a solid battle line of 50,000 workers which extends throughout the main centers of the industry. In its numbers and scope the present strike is the greatest in the long and stormy history of the silk workers' struggles. It deserves the closest attention of the workers everywhere. The silk strike has a meaning for the entire labor movement.

So far the strikers have stood solid. More, they have steadily spread out the strike over a wider area while frustrating all maneuvers to induce them to return to work without a satisfactory settlement. This has been made possible by the fusion of the rank and file mass with a broad group of experienced and tested trade union militants who have been through the mill and know what they want. Paterson is the heart of the industry, and the Paterson militants, heirs of a great tradition, are naturally the main driving force of the present strike. What was done and what was attempted in the epic struggle of 20 years ago in Haywood's time is not without influence even today. The Paterson strike of 1913 awakened and inspired the progressive elements of the working class. It lives in their memory. The strike of 1933 may very well exert a similar influence. If they keep to the line they have pursued up till now, if they do not falter and, above all, if they keep a sharp eye on McMahon and the NRA sharks, the militants waging the present battle will write a page worthy of the old tradition.

THE UNIONS IN THE STRIKE

The trade union situation in the silk strike is an especially interesting example of how a mass revolt can surmount old divisions, and make its way through the most complicated forms. The A. F. of L. union in the textile industry—the United Textile Workers—is one of the most reactionary and incompetent organizations in the country. It has a long and malodorous record of betrayal which has driven the textile workers to independent unionism, in one form or another, for decades. The best militants in the industry have grown up in incessant struggle against the U. T. W. treacheries and have been steeled in hatred against it. Many of the leading militants in this strike are veterans of various independent movements. There are former I. W. W. men among them. Not a few were once active in the National Textile Workers Union (the Stalinist organization).

The main directing force in the strike comes from the Associated Silk Workers. This organization came into existence and remained for years as an independent union. Now it belongs to the American Federation of Silk Workers which, in turn, is affiliated, as an autonomous section, with the U. T. W. and through that, with the A. F. of L. Thus, the forces of the strikers have been unified under official A. F. of L. auspices by a strike committee whose most aggressive and militant members are hostile to the reactionary philosophy and practices of the U. T. W. on the one side and to the stupid, bureaucratic and disruptive methods of the Stalinist N. T. W. on the other. Under these peculiar and complicated conditions the silk workers have been welded together for the greatest strike in the history of the trade. In this achievement there is to be seen the most convincing proof that the form of trade union organization is subordinate to the substance of the movement. Trade union militants everywhere can learn an important lesson in tactics from the silk workers in this respect.

MAIN FEATURES OF THE STRIKE

The strike has been distinguished by several other important features. It is national in scope—practically all the silk-producing centers are tied up—and from this the strike derives much of its exceptional power. The Paterson militants displayed magnificent energy in despatching committees by the truck-load to spread the strike to other points. They didn't fall into the NRA trap and go back to work under a deceptive "truce" on the promise of "adjustments" later. They reject all negotiations for separate shop or craft settlements. They stood out, and are still standing out, for a satisfactory national settlement. To secure this they rely on the picket line more than on the NRA conferences at Washington.

A black spot in the strike situation is the activity of the National Textile Workers Union. This organization, due to bad leadership, lost its opportunity in the industry. It forfeited the confidence of the best militants who once belonged to it, drove out others who raised the voice of criticism, dwindled down to a paper shell and came to the crucial test of the strike without membership, leadership or policy. The main tide of the silk workers movement was already flowing strongly in the channel of the American Federation of Silk Workers. This should have been the cue for the N. T. W. to eliminate itself and merge with the mass movement. Instead of that the attempt has been made to split the ranks and set up a rival strike committee.

This dangerous game, which incensed the conscientious militants who concerned themselves with the interests of the workers and who desired a united struggle in their behalf, only added further discredit to the people whose light-hearted adventures in the trade union movement had brought them a bad enough name already. And worse may follow, if latest reports are true. Frustrated in their efforts to make a deep split in the strikers ranks, and isolated to a section of the dye workers who are new to organization, the N. T. W. is reported in the Paterson papers to be offering separate shop settlements below the demands of the official general strike committee. They had better beware of this kind of "competition". The disavowal of such intentions in the Paterson papers of October 3 didn't come too soon.

The composition of the silk strike leadership, and the course it has followed up till now, give promise of a successful outcome of the struggle which will lay the ground for a big revival and development of progressive unionism in the textile industry. The silk workers themselves are conducting their own strike. Warding off the treacherous interference of McMahon & Co. on the one hand, and dispensing with individual "stars" on the other, the actual direction of the strike has been taken over by a broad collective group of militants, actual silk workers, who are rooted in the industry and experienced in its union struggles.

STRIKE POLICY

The strike policy that will yield the best results is clear enough:

Systematic exposure of the strike-breaking machinations of the NRA administration. No illusions about it. No confidence in it. The workers can rely only on their own strength. Their strength is manifested in their solidarity, in their strike. Therefore, no "disarming", no "truce", no return to the shops without a definite and satisfactory settlement. This is point one in a realistic and militant strike policy. Struggle to the end for a national settlement. No trifling with the solidarity of the strikers by individual shop settlements or dickerings in regard to them.

Work for a single union as well as for a single strike committee. Tighten the bonds between the striking units in the various silk centers in a single strike committee of the American Federation of Silk Workers. Persuade all the local organizations of strikers now independent, and the independent craft organizations, to affiliate with the Federation as well as with the strike committee.

In addition to the above line of policy, which flows logically out of the whole situation, a couple of additional suggestions may be offered. The first relates to the necessary preparations for the possible prospect of a drawn-out battle. The second, to the liquidation of the struggle of rival unions.

With every passing day the meager resources of the strikers dwindle and the bosses will count on breaking their ranks with the club of hunger. To meet this danger the efficient organization of relief machinery is a pressing necessity. The silk workers, who are selling an example to the workers everywhere, have every right to appeal to the entire labor movement for financial aid. They should do so without delay. What they do, or fail to do, in this respect now may easily prove decisive at a later stage of developments.

The Federation strike committee has been perfectly right in its head-on struggle against the disorganizing activities of the N. T. W. and in rejecting its maneuvers for a joint strike committee. The N. T. W. has long since lost its real basis as a union and the time for such proposals is past. What is needed in the strike now is a single union, not a joint strike committee of rival unions. The Federation of Silk Workers has already established its overwhelming supremacy. The task now is to make its organization complete as the sole union representing all the workers. To that end, the Federation would have nothing to lose, and much to gain, by offering to take the N. T. W. strikers into the union as a body. This would deprive the N. T. W. leaders of any justification before the strikers for maintaining a separate organization. Regardless of their attitude toward the proposal itself, if sincerely put forward, and made known to the strikers would exert a powerful influence for the consolidation of the strikers movement in a single union. The strike would thereby gain in strength.

THE REAL TEST AHEAD

The real test of the silk strike is still ahead. It has been a comparatively peaceful affair so far while the attempt was being made to suffocate the revolt quietly with the poison gas generated by the NRA. But the class struggle has not been eliminated. The bosses have not ceased to be the ruthless cunning and exploiters of the workers. The police and all other agencies of government remain the tool of the bosses for the suppression of the workers. Even while the oily game of negotiation and maneuver goes on the weapons of force are being made ready. They may be turned on the workers in full force at any moment. Then will come the real test of the strike and of the quality of its leadership. The less illusions are entertained, the less the blunt truth of the class struggle and all its implications are concealed, the better the preparation for the coming developments.

The strike wave now sweeping over the country, of which the silk workers movement is a part, represents the beginning of a great class awakening of the American workers. The path they are entering on now, will lead them far from the place where they have stood before and from the ideas and illusions—inculcated by the propaganda of the bosses—which they have held. In the strikes they will learn by experience what the government is. They will see it in action against them every time. They will have to fight bitterly for every inch of ground they gain, only to lose it again the moment they relax their vigilance and slacken their struggle. The workers will be forced to learn that the "new deal" they need is a new social system without exploiters and without slaves. Nothing less. The strike leadership that understands this, explains it to the workers and leads them toward it is the leadership that really represents the interests of the workers.

LOOK TO PATERSON

The silk workers, who stand today in the forefront of embattled labor, have a great responsibility. The workers throughout the country, noting their stubborn struggle and remembering many of them, the glory of the past, will turn again to Paterson for inspiration and perhaps for leadership in the difficult and complicated task of building unions and making them really serve the interests of the workers.

The militants conducting the silk strike have shown how to make an A. F. of L. union function as an instrument of struggle. It is up to them also to demonstrate that affiliation to the United Textile Workers does not mean reconciliation with the reactionary philosophy and treacherous practices of the leadership of this organization. In the present strike such tendencies are to be observed on the part of certain individuals. Let them watch such people and warn them of the old proverb: he who gives the devil a finger will soon have to give his whole hand.

If the silk strike has already attracted national attention, its continuance to a victory will invest its organizers with a national authority. The progressive forces in the labor movement, now scattered and demoralized, need a reorganization. This is the most imperative task of the hour. If the militant elements of the silk strikers persevere with their efforts and live up to their opportunity they can play a responsible part in its fulfillment.

Two American Congresses «Against War»

The "historic Anti-War Congress" has adjourned, and as was to be expected, it has left absolutely no positive residue, save a bitter taste in the mouth of every revolutionist, and illusions in the minds of those workers duped by the macabre masquerade of the Stalinists.

More than once in these columns we have submitted the whole Stalin-Barbusse (in the United States: Browder-Sinclair-Dreiser) movement to a thorough criticism which laid it bare as a burlesque of a genuine united front movement against fascism and the danger of imperialist war, as a pericious pacifist deception calculated to cover up the impotence of the international Stalin apparatus. The just concluded New York congress merely remained true to smug tradition of the Amsterdam assembly last August and the Paris gathering that followed it. It represented nothing but the Stalinist organizations plus a few handfuls of pacifists and confusionists serving as a "respectable front". Like its predecessors—the Anglo-Russian Committee, the Kuo Min T'ang alliance, the "World League Against Imperialism"—it is part of the Great Illusion of Stalinism.

The Stalinist Theory About War

The official Stalinist theory of international socialism leads directly to the conception that the struggle against imperialist war and for the defense of the Soviet Union, requires, or permits, policies and practices from those pursued in the general strategy of the proletarian vanguard. A revolutionary policy must be followed "in general" in the struggle of the British working class against the bourgeoisie and its labor lieutenants. But in the struggle against the war danger, the British Communists must subordinate themselves to the Churchill and Cawks. The proletarian in the colonial and semi-colonial countries must conduct an independent struggle against its ruling class. But in the alleged interests of the defense of the Soviet Union, it must be tied to the chariot of Arabian princes, reactionary Hindu mystics, Balkan "peasant" leaders or demagogic office seekers from Catalonia to Cathay.

In essence, this course resulted

The New York Barbusse Movement and The «People's Council» of 1917

In the blowing up of the Second International when the crucial test confronted it. The international is an instrument of peace, and not of war, was the Kautskyan explanation in 1914. If there is any difference between that and the conduct of the Stalinists, it is that the latter half conceal themselves behind the thin mask of Messrs. Munzenberg, Barbusse and their similars. Nevertheless, this does not eliminate the fact that at bottom we are dealing here with a semi-pacifist, semi-social patriotic conception, which has led to the August Fourth of both internationalisms.

A Striking Comparison

The New York congress affords us the opportunity of making a most striking comparison between it and a similar movement in this country in 1917—the "People's Council of America for Democracy and Terms of Peace". If a few names and terms are changed as they have to be for the period of time that has elapsed, it will be difficult to distinguish the one from the other. Or, if there is a distinction, it lies only in the fact that the Barbusse movement and its proponents have been deteriorating and collapsing at a speedier rate.

The "People's Council" was as much a cover organization for the Socialist party as the Barbusse movement is for the Stalinists. It too had as its aim the struggle against war and the preservation of peace. It too proclaimed itself a "friend of the Russian revolution" and demanded that the peace terms of the "Russian democracy" be universally accepted. It too held its "historic conventions", represented itself as the 1917 equivalent of the "real united front", and at its constituent assembly in Chicago in September 1917 declared itself to be "representing in all over two million members" (American Labor Yearbook, 1920).

Among its founders and spokesmen could be found almost exactly the same organizations, the same individuals—at all events, the same types—as those that composed the New York congress a few days ago. If the Barbusse movement has Mrs. Annie M. Gray of the Women's Peace Society, the 1917 movement had the equally well-intentioned Harriet Park Thomas, of the Women's Peace Party. For the Barbusse actress, Mrs. Alla Nazimova, the People's Council had the actress Miss Lola LaPollette. Mr. Leopold Stokowski's place was occupied in 1917 by the sculptor Frank Stephens. Rabbi Israel Goldstein had his counterpart sixteen years ago in Rabbi Judah I. Magnes, just as the present secretary of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, Mr. J. B. Matthews was at that time represented by its then secretary, Mr. Edmund C. Evans. The People's Council had its J. B. Salustius then, and the Barbusse Committee has him now. Both movements had more than their quota of ministers, pastors, priests and other gentlemen of the gospel. The official party representatives in 1917 were J. Hillquit, Lee Panken and Berger; today they are Browder, Minor, Hathiway and Bedacht.

The "Peoples Council" was, as is quite well known today, a miscarriage. It organized no real movement against the war, nor could it. It even proclaimed that "We are not discouraging enlistments. We are not obstructing the conduct of the war". Its belly caved in completely and there was no backbone to hold it up. The pacifists, as before 1917 and ever since, proved to be against war until... it broke out.

A Superficial Distinction

Al, but you forget that it was the social patriotic Socialist party that inspired and maneuvered the People's Council; whereas now it is the revolutionary Communist party that is behind the Barbusse movement. The objection is based upon a superficial distinction in this case, for the difference is less real than apparent.

The Communist party does, it is true, adopt revolutionary theses on how to fight the war danger; it speaks and writes incessantly of the transformation of imperialist war into civil war, of the struggle against pacifism, and more of the same.

But—and this is the nub of the question—the Socialist party of 1917, in its own conventions and press, also paid formal homage to the revolutionary phase. At its St. Louis emergency convention in 1917, it declared (majority resolution on war): "We particularly warn the workers against the snare and delusion of defensive warfare. As against the false doctrine of national patriotism we uphold the ideal of international working class solidarity.... The acute situation created by war calls for an even more vigorous prosecution of the class struggle, and we recommend to the workers and pledge ourselves to the following course of action: 1. Continuous, active and public opposition to the war, through demonstrations, mass petitions, and all other means within our power." Radical enough, wasn't it? Among its signatories were not only the revolutionist Ruthenberg, but also the Centrist Hillquit and the social imperialist Berger. So much for their words. In action however, the St. Louis resolution did not prevent Hillquit and Berger from dissolving the Socialist party and its anti-war work in the wispy-washy pacifist morass of the People's Council, which served American imperialism so well, in its own way, while the war was actually on.

the strikers gave a lesson in proletarian unity to the whole country.

Beginning with the Henry Doherty mill the strike spread like wildfire embracing all the silk slaves of Paterson who left their looms in open revolt against the introduction of the 3 and 4 loom system and for the eight hour day. The workers had toiled and starved long enough for a wage that averaged six to seven dollars a week during the year. The strikers now voiced their hitherto inarticulate demands for a 25 percent increase in wages and a minimum of twelve dollars a week for dye workers.

At the helm of the strike stood the heroic I. W. W., fanning the discontent, inspiring the faltering, guiding the militants, braving the terror, teaching the rudiments of the class struggle to countless thousands and writing a page of labor history in letters of red. The names of Bill Haywood, Elizabeth Gurley Flynn and Carlo Tresca will long be remembered for their unflinching devotion as leaders of the strike of 1913.

Thousands of strikers, men and women, thronged the picket line in the grey hours of the morning where the police beat them mercilessly. Hundreds were taken in black Marias to filthy jails. But they were not swayed from their goal. John Reed, who reported the strike, recounted an incident where a group of nine strikers were held for more than 22 hours without food, water or bedding in a jail meant for one. And that during this whole time they never ceased cheering or singing.

Several workers were shot and killed by hired assassins during the strike. Phillips Russell wrote in the August 1913 International Socialist Review of an incident that typified the magnificent spirit that animated the workers in the strike. A striker named Madonna was killed by an armed thug doing scab work in the mill. A crowd of workers gathered at the burial of Madonna.

"By her husband's open grave Madonna's wife turned and faced the thug. In broken halting English she began to speak.

"I do not cry," she said. "Madonna is dead, but still I can cry. They have killed my man, but I shed not one tear. After you win the strike, then maybe I cry. I do not ask help from you, though my man is dead. I ask only that you win the strike."

Is it any wonder that the memory of this strike has survived for more than 20 years?

The local press raised the red scare. The bosses were quite ready to deal with a "scab" union. They brought the J. T. W. and its misleaders Sara Conboy and John Golden, to Paterson, made a private agreement with them behind the backs of the workers and then hired the army, guarded it with policemen, firemen, with bosses ready to cool off the workers and an army of thugs, and proposed to sell the betrayal to the workers. But the strikers would have none of it. They stormed out of the meeting stronger for the I. W. W. than ever.

This did not convince the bosses yet. So they tried shop conferences with the workers and secret ballots but the strikers would not be intimidated back to work. The authorities arrested Haywood and the other strike leaders several times on all sorts of trumped-up charges, but to no avail. The kept press of Paterson, the Call and the Star, set up a holler that Haywood and the others were defaming the strike Spangled Banner and substituting the Red Flag. The workers however did not fall victim to this propaganda. That they understood what was really involved was revealed by Bill Haywood who told of a meeting where the following happened:

"Elizabeth Gurley Flynn was on the platform at a big strike meeting one day explaining the significance of the red flag when a striking dyer sprang up from the middle of the audience crying:

"I know! Here is the red flag!"

"And aloft he held his right hand—stained a permanent bloody crimson, gnarled from years of toil, and corroded by the scarlet dye which it was his business to put into the fabrics worn by the dainty lady as well as the fawning prostitute.

"For an instant there was silence and then the hall was rent by cries from the husky throats as all realized this humble dyer indeed knew the meaning of the red badge of his class."

Good reason that the strikers held out, grimly determined, for almost five months, their children sent to New York to sympathetic workers, and their own stomachs empty. Take as an instance the great parent in Madison Square Garden the like of which has never been seen before or since, in which 1,029 strikers gave a graphic portrayal of their great battle before a crowded house. This thrilling, unforgettable spectacle before a packed house was just one of the ways the I. W. W. dramatized the strike and roused the support of labor to it.

All of the grandiose efforts of the bosses and their local agents were frustrated by the strikers and their leadership. Here is a clipping of the rabid Paterson Star of the time which relates the failure of one of these incidents:

"With flags flying and the city decked out in gala garb, the great silk mills of Paterson reopened their doors to welcome back 35,000 men and women operatives.

"The ending of the gigantic labor war was beautifully planned. The factory owners were going to forgive their erring workmen. Mayor McBride and the police saw the end of their troubles approaching. The ministers who had urged the workers to return understood their exhortations were to be obeyed.

"It was a very successful end of the strike, marred by only one thing—none of the strikers went back."

No, it was not any stunt of the work. It was economic pressure—bosses that forced the men back to sheer hunger—that began to tell after 22 weeks of strike. The strike was lost.

Because of its cost, because of the travail, the sacrifices, the heroic militancy, the Paterson strike of 1913 has gone down into the annals of labor never to be eradicated.

tinuous, formed clubs of the warpers and the other trades, independent of any of the existing unions in the city.

What is most interesting, however, is the fact that the National Textile Workers Union, which is committed to a policy of industrial unionism, was instrumental in the organization of the United Warpers' League and the clubs of loomfixers and twisters. Members and sympathizers of the N. T. W. were the most active figures, the creators of these organizations. There is no doubt they worked under the guidance and sanction of the leading body of the N. T. W. Why weren't these crafts amalgamated into the National Textile Workers Union? Why were they organized without any official connection with it?

So discredited had the National Union (Stalinist) become in the eyes of the workers that recruitment of experienced workers into it was wellnigh impossible. In other words, the National Union ceased to possess any vitality which would make growth possible. Instead of recognizing this fact as honest and progressive unionists, and sending these workers into the ranks of the Associated, the leaders of the N. T. W., hoping later—should better times come—to corral the skilled crafts into their paper union, followed the traditional A. F. of L. policy of separating the skilled workers from the broad mass.

But if the N. T. W. could not organize the workers directly into their own union neither could they hold them under their influence. For more than five weeks now the National Union, which has sympathizers on the Executive Board of the United Warpers' League, have been exerting every effort to get the latter organization to send representatives to the national strike committee run by the N. T. W. Except for one incident of recent date, where the full membership was not present, the warpers have every time overwhelmingly refused to be aligned with this splitting national strike committee. And when the membership had discovered that the National Union people had jammed through a motion to send five delegates to Albiontown they immediately rescinded the motion and voted to withdraw the delegates. The workers saw very clearly what the N. T. W. was unable to understand.

From the beginning of the strike the warpers have made overtures to the Associated towards obtaining representatives on the strike committee of the latter organization. This move was consummated within the last few days, and the United Warpers have elected two militant workers to the Associated strike committee where they were well-received.

In the course of the earlier attempts for a common strike committee one of the conditions put by the Associated, before this could take place, was for the United Warpers League to come to some agreement with the A. F. of L. Horizontal Warpers League. In characteristic A. F. of L. style the latter refused to come to any kind of an agreement until the United Warpers League would liquidate and its members join their union as individuals. This was refused by the membership. And for several weeks the negotiations dragged along until the rank and file of the Associated Strike Committee voted to send a letter to the Warpers League inviting the warpers to elect two delegates to the strike committee on the single condition that the elected delegates be subject to the approval of the Associated strike committee.

Bill Keller, under instructions to send the said letter, composed it in such bureaucratic fashion that the warpers rejected it. Then a declaration of the Associated strike committee, incensed at Keller's action, came to the warpers and asked that the old letter be returned and read a new invitation which was unanimously accepted by the membership.

Before the warpers live the big job of completely organizing the craft, of amalgamating with the loomfixers and the twisters, who are already represented on the Associated strike committee, and of laying the ground for the end of separate craft unionism in Paterson by ultimately affiliating with the American Federation of Silk Workers.

'The Evil Genius of the American Labor Movement' A Monument to Gompers

"It is fitting that in the capital of the nation a statue should stand through the ages to remind future generations of the services to that nation of a patriot who served his country well."

These are President Roosevelt's words of tribute in dedicating a monument not to a general, an admiral or an imperialist free-booter but to a labor leader—Samuel Gompers, the deceased president of the American Federation of Labor. The president of the United States is so lavish with his praise for Gompers because he feels a deep admiration for the man whom he rightly considers not a tribute of the oppressed or a warrior for a new society but a staunch pillar of the powers-that-be, a "patriot."

We have no argument with Roosevelt when he says that Gompers "served his country well." Indeed Wilson's eulogy of Gompers, quoted by Roosevelt, reveals how deeply the masters are indebted to Samuel Gompers.

"If I may be permitted to do so," said Wilson in 1917, "I want to express my admiration for his patriotic courage, his large vision and his statesmanlike sense."

Khaki Shirts Get Medals

New York City.—Silver medals for "bravery in action" have lately been bestowed upon several members of the Fascist Khaki Shirts of America who took part in the clash with anti-Fascists in Astoria, N. Y., on July 14, when Anthony Fierro, anti-Fascist student, was killed. It is for Fierro's death that his comrade Athos Terzani faces trial here solely on the basis of an accusation by "General" Art J. Smith, commander-in-chief of the Khaki Shirts.

Eight of those who were in the Astoria affair, including Smith, were decorated recently in Khaki Shirts headquarters in Philadelphia. This was done with pretentious ceremony. The silver medal is described as "the American Fascist meritorious service cross."

After "General" Smith received this honor from the general staff of his organization, he bestowed a like decoration on Adjutant General J. E. Monaghan, Col. Pasquale Rogliano, Emilio Torres, Frank Moffer, Mario Martin, Albert L. Agostino, and Algisso De Felice.

At the same time a silver cross was pinned upon Mrs. Domenico Sica, widow of an Italian character, who was killed in the Astoria affair. Sica was killed in South Philadelphia in June, and press reports said that he met his death during an attempt of the Khaki Shirts to break up an anti-Fascist meeting in a hall. Investigation indicates, however, that Sica was not injured during the break-up of that meeting, but was stabbed afterward on the sidewalk outside, evidently by some private enemy.

New Inquiry Into Killing

District Attorney Charles S. Cadden of Queens County, who agreed on August 28 to make a new inquiry into the Fierro killing, has before him the declarations of Terzani and another eyewitness, Nicholangelo Palumbo, made on the night of the tragedy, that Fierro actually was shot down by "General" Art Smith's associates in the Khaki Shirts.

Mr. Cadden is running for Borough President of Queens on the Democratic ticket next month, and his office voiced no objection when the Terzani defense asked recently for two months postponement of the trial. It is now set for November 27.

So far no brief has been filed by the prosecution in support of Assistant District Attorney Joseph Loscalzo's resistance of the defense demand for photographs of all finger-prints on the murder-gun. Just what tangible reasons Mr. Loscalzo can offer for withholding those finger-prints remain to be seen. It is believed by observing lawyers here that the prosecution will have difficulty in justifying its position that it should not be obliged to disclose the finger-prints on the gun in advance of trial.

Terzani's four-page affidavit which accompanied the petition for the finger-prints, contends that he cannot have a fair trial unless he is permitted to show by expert testimony that the finger-prints on the pistol are not his. He challenges the state to produce those prints in open court.

Money is needed urgently for Terzani's defense. Contributions should be sent to Herbert Mahlor, treasurer of the United-Front Terzani Defense Committee, 94 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

of what has to be done. I like to lay my mind alongside of a mind that knows how to pull in harness. The horses that kick over the traces will have to be put in a corral."

"In Harness"—For the Bosses
From the outset of his career as a labor leader, Gompers caused the capitalist class little worry. He knew how to pull in harness—not for the workers. The bosses resented a lucrative harvest from the plasticity of Samuel Gompers who traded the fighting battalions of the proletariat for the Judas gold of respectability.

Gompers founded the American Federation of Labor; he was its president until his death in 1924. For this activity he has not suffered the storm of abuse, calumny and vilification with which the ruling class so profusely showers the protagonists of the labor movement. On the contrary he is glorified in a monument erected to his memory in the citadel of American imperialism. A curse at the death of "Big Bill" Haywood, a sigh of relief at the passing of Debs and a monument for Gompers! The oligarchy of capital knows how to estimate the work of labor's leaders.

It never could be said of Mr. Gompers that he "kicked over the traces." His kick was at the working class. His long years of service, earning him such profuse praise from Roosevelt, began with renegacy from the socialist movement whose ideas he assimilated as a young cigar maker. He deserted socialism for the respectability of a "pure and simple" craft union movement whose motto was "a fair day's wage for a fair day's work."

He wanted no connection with the socialists because they preached a doctrine of "class hatred and violence." No connection with the socialists or the mass of unskilled workers who might be contaminated with radical ideas—this was his credo in founding the A. F. of L. in 1881. The great mass of exploited workers standing outside of the sequestered cloister of the aristocracy of labor were also outside the concern of Gompers.

A Bulwark Against Radicalism
The whole career of Samuel Gompers was predicated on currying the favor of the master class, of showing them by deeds that the labor movement that he led was good 100% American—a bulwark against radicalism. In 1904 the memorable strike led by the American Labor Union and its great industrial force, Eugene Victor Debs, dared the power of the railway magnates. The government sent the militia against the strikers. On the other side the railroad men were supported by the Knights of Labor and the Farmers' Alliance which promised to feed the strikers. The country was in an uproar, the class lines were drawn taut and the unions were clamoring for action—for support of the Pullman workers.

Gompers called a meeting of the A. F. of L. Executive Council and refused to call either general or local strikes in support of the beleaguered railroad workers. Debs was charged with contempt of court for violating the injunction. Gompers seized this opportunity to prove to the master class that the labor organization associated with his name would have no part in radical action. The strike was lost in no small degree because of the treachery of Gompers. Debs went to jail; Gompers won the good graces of Wall Street. Gompers was learning the lesson of solidarity—with the ruling class.

National Civic Federation
It was as president of the National Civic Federation that Gompers earned his spurs as a trusted lieutenant of the capitalists within the ranks of labor. An organization composed of notorious labor haters like Ralph Easley and labor

Mass Movement Surges against Old Forms; Roosevelt Threatens Strikers

The fifty-third annual convention of the American Federation of Labor, now in session in Washington, D. C., marks the largest gathering of this body representing more workers, than any time since its conclave in Buffalo in 1917. Its attitude towards the NRA, the rising strike wave and the burning problem of craft or industrial unionism are up for decision at this meeting.

The convention is infused with the ballyhoo spirit of the "New Deal." President William Green told the assembled delegates of the blessings of the NRA, saying that the "tide has turned" for labor and, further, that "the president himself will rely upon the hosts of labor to see this thing satisfactorily through." Exactly what this reliance on the president will mean the delegates were not long in finding out. Senator Wagner came before the gathering and bewailed the fact that the working class, which had so patiently suffered during the four years of crisis, "should resort so largely to extreme methods after revival has begun and when further revival depends upon the success of the program of cooperation." The strikes are plainly disturbing the Roosevelt administration.

Johnson Threatens Strikers

Much sharper, much blunter, and far more threatening was the warning of Roosevelt's man Friday, General Johnson, Green had complained that the wages set in the codes were not adequate. Others had urged that the organized workers use their power to gain what they thought was so generously offered under the NRA. This was manifested in the great strike wave that has been the almost automatic response of the working class. Not so with General Johnson who attempted to persuade the delegates that their rights were "effectively" protected under the NRA administration. And if the workers would not believe this, if their conditions of life belie it, then Johnson has this to say: "The plain stark truth is that you cannot tolerate the strike." If, in spite of this threat, the workers have recourse to the strike weapon then Johnson has the following threat to make: "Public opinion is the essential power in this country. In the end it will break down and destroy every subversive influence."

It is unnecessary to write that the delegates did not accept the challenge and fling it back into his teeth. As has been the case for years the Left wing was conspicuously by its absence. The fat salaried office holders are monopolizing the stage. The Greens and Lewises, for whom Johnson has words of praise as against the rebellious coal miners, are running this show. The Stalinist party, which has consistently robbed the A. F. of L. of any organized Left wing, sent its "A. F. of L. Committee on Unemployed Insurance" to the convention. It was refused admittance on the grounds that the unions it claimed to represent were already seated at the convention and it was peremptorily thrown out by the police. No word of protest was raised in the convention.

A "Family" Faction Fight

It is true that there is a faction fight in the Federation. But this is only a family quarrel over the spoils. John L. Lewis is making a bid for power. Green is solidly entrenched. It appears that Green and his lieutenants will retain the honor of being the outstanding official servants of the capitalist class in the labor movement.

These squabbles for place and sinews give a picture of unreality to the convention of an organization that is a tidal wave of unionization sweeping the country. 500 federal unions, some in basic industries, have been added to the A. F. of L. in the recent period. Whether they liked it or no, the bureaucrats of the Federation were forced to wrestle with this problem.

The sending of armed detachments against the workers and the forcible suppression of the Communist Party in Havana and other cities marks the end of the Martin government's development to the left on the basis of the struggle against imperialism, and its evolution to the right out of fear of the workers and the pressure of the Cuban bourgeoisie and the American imperialists. This change of direction, which is characteristic of the whole course of the petty bourgeoisie and was to be foreseen, is inherent in the position of the petty bourgeoisie in Cuban society.

The social structure of Cuba is cast in the capitalist mold: bourgeoisie, petty bourgeoisie and the working class. But for the bourgeoisie it is a distorted one. The bourgeoisie is not master in its own house. The almost total concentration of the economic resources of the country in the hands of American capital leaves little room and very few avenues of development for the Cuban bourgeoisie except in the service of Yankee imperialism. Thus, Machado on the road to power became the vice-president of several American corporations in Cuba.

But the petty bourgeoisie cannot aspire even to vice-presidencies. The student in the university who studied law knew that nearly all of the legal practice of the country was in the hands of large American law firms. The colon, who rented land from the large American owned mills and corporations, on which he raised sugar cane, the only market for which these same mills and corporations, was hopelessly enmeshed in the net of American property and finance. Across the road of development into big bourgeoisie in Cuba stands the American imperialist colossus.

The Impoverishment of the Petty Bourgeoisie

On the other hand, the crisis in sugar, which began years before the present world crisis of capitalism, impoverished not only the workers but also the petty bourgeoisie. To pay the interest and principal on Machado's loans from Wall Street, his extravagant public works program, and his army, he levied upon the petty bourgeoisie with crushing force. Out of their decreasing income the petty bourgeoisie had to pay the exorbitant rates of the American owned utility companies. In New York City, which has a high rate, the cost of domestic electricity is six and five cents per kilowatt hour. In Havana it is as high as twenty. Although they were equipped to use these necessities, whole towns are forced to do without gas and electricity.

Under the pressure of the increasing difficulties of his rule, Machado reduced the public services. All high schools were closed in 1932. This economy program was also extended to a lesser degree to the low schools. Practically a whole generation was condemned to illiteracy. The appropriation for army mules was thirty-two cents a day; for hospital patients, before the hospitals ceased to function, twelve cents.

The Pressure of the Crisis
The merciless pressure of the crisis, the domination of the country's life by American capitalism and the tyrannical rule of Machado drove the petty bourgeoisie on to the path of revolution. The same factors pushed the workers along the same road. All the efforts of the petty bourgeoisie to remove Machado were unavailing until the workers intervened with a general strike. The continuing struggles of the workers provided the Left petty bourgeoisie with their opportunity to remove the servile De Cespedes government.

Striking Silk Workers Protest New NRA Code

The Paterson silk strikers have met the latest intervention of the government in its attempt to impose a code containing lower wages than those obtaining before the strike. They have rejected it to a man. The battle lines stand solid.

It is this institution that is supposed to raise wages and improve conditions—the NRA—which has made the proposal to the striking silk workers that they return to work under a minimum wage of $12-$13. The thin veneer of the Roosevelt New Deal is beginning to peel off—for the Paterson workers at least. The first intimation that such a raw deal was being put over by Roosevelt and his crew brought a delegation of strikers from Paterson to Washington to make it clear that the silk workers would not countenance this step backward to slave conditions—that they would fight the battle to the end and get a settlement on the picket line where they make the greatest challenge to the bosses' lie.

So flagrant was the proposed code, such an outright concession to the rayon bosses, that a peculiar form of united front took place in Washington. Not only the delegation of silk workers, but preachers, businessmen, politicians and silk bosses went to the capital to protest the proposed code. The bosses are making the most of this coincidence.

The Paterson Evening News purrs with unconcealed delight over what it considers a demonstration of class collaboration.

Paterson is Making History

"The trek to Washington, which brought several hundred Paterson silk strikers, manufacturers, dyers, businessmen and clergymen together fighting as one in the common cause, is an epochal demonstration of the civic consciousness of this city."

"When all shades of labor and employing thought can join hand in hand and, forgetting their basic differences of wages and hours, stand shoulder to shoulder with their proverbial enemies, the bosses, then there is some powerful moving force which is welding together so solidified and impressive a movement."

This statement is calculated to deceive the workers. The interests of the bosses and the workers are far from identical. The Paterson silk bosses are opposed to the present code because it would be disastrous to their business, their profits, in the struggle with competitors. The silk workers can rest assured that the bosses will fight for a strike settlement at rock bottom level. Just wait: tear gas and policemen's clubs will dispel all this pretty idyll of class collaboration.

'Rev.' Green Preaches

The President of the American Federation of Labor besides being a great "friend" of Labor and a still greater friend of the bosses is also a magnificent preacher. If anybody has any doubt of the labor "leaders" preaching abilities, he has only to read his sermon delivered last Saturday at Washington Cathedral. In his heart-rending appeal to the bosses to banish poverty from our sinful earth Father Green said:

"Masters, render unto your servants that which is just and equal, knowing that ye also have a Master in heaven."

"Instill in those who have made possible your success the power to continue living a good life. Among them let your blessing be shown in the form of adequate and steady wages."

Bill Green, as we see, is not only a faithful servant of his earthly bosses but also a devoted preacher of the Gospel of the Big Boss in heaven.

At the present time a hearing is in progress in N. Y. for a silk code. What will emerge from this hearing is still a matter for conjecture. But this much is certain: if the silk workers relax their vigilance in regard to the conviving of the NRA and the officials of the U. T. W., represented by Panken at the hearing, then the outcome of the strike will be far from favorable for the strikers.

The extension of the strike, the maintenance of the picket lines—only on this condition can the Paterson workers wrest a victorious settlement from the bosses.

Miners' Strike Bucks N.R.A.

In spite of Senator Wagner, and all the big and little flunkies of the A. F. of L., the striking miners in Pennsylvania have not accepted this wisdom. When the "magnificent policies" of the NRA were revealed to them last week by a "settlement" that did not recognize the United Mine Workers in the captive mines of the Steel Trust, the miners remained on strike. Roosevelt and Johnson had ordered them to go back to work, vice-president Murray of the NMWA had rushed head over heels to accept the settlement, Murray had promised that any miner who did not return to work "would not live long", and still the miners stayed out.

Even if Lewis, Murray and Co., try to pass off a sell-out "settlement" the miners understand the difference. After all the money which such sellouts put into the purses of Lewis and Murray is sweated out of the hides of the miners who remain in peonage and slavery. Even when the UMWA misleaders threatened to outlaw the strike, the ranks held firm.

The Miners Force A "Reconsideration"

Result: President Roosevelt is now almost talking in union recognition. Murray is again rushing headlong to open new negotiations. The U. S. Steel Trust has finally consented to confer with the U.M.W.A. In short, the miners have forced Roosevelt, the U. S. Steel, and the C. M. W. A. bureaucrats to begin all over again in their attempt to swindle the strikers out of the gains of their strike. If, instead, the miners had accepted Senator Wagner's recovery philosophy, they would be back at work with nothing gained except bullets and deaths from its steel Trust's gunmen.

The strike is far from won. Although Roosevelt is talking bravely about "collective bargaining", he is still the same man who a week ago accepted the agreement that did not recognize the union. The Murray, who is now lacking the hand of the steel bosses, is the same man who threatened death to all miners who did not accept the sell out. From such people the miners can expect nothing but treachery. If the strike demands are to be won, it will not be won through Roosevelt's promises or through the negotiations of Murray. They will be won only through the militant struggle of the workers themselves. And only through a militant policy in the U. M. W. A. will these demands, once won, be maintained. For that policy to exist, there must be an organized Left wing in the union.

Too Much Coffee!

Workers who have trouble these days getting a nickel for a cup of coffee ought to have their loyalty to the capitalist system strengthened by the following article from the New York Times of October 7, 1933:

"Since July 1931, the National Coffee Department of Brazil has destroyed 3,050,124,000 pounds of coffee, having a value of approximately $200,000,000, according to reports to the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange. The program of destruction so far has eliminated the equivalent of a full year's world consumption.

"In the last few months the Brazilian Government agency has been speeding up the destruction. In September 1933, 196,430,000 pounds, or 1,511,000 bags, were destroyed, while in the three months ended on Sept. 30, 621,660,000 pounds, or 4,782,000 bags, were destroyed, either by burning or by dumping into the ocean.

"About 15,500,000 bags of coffee are held in the Brazilian warehouses now, against 25,048,000 a year ago and 27,999,000 two years ago."

If you go without coffee now you know the reason. There is too much of it.

Too Much Butter!

The recent advice of the government to the farmers to plow up at least 10 million acres of cotton, while a large section of the population is clad in the shoddies of rags, was not enough. The insanity of insanity that has hit the starving American proletariat square in the face is the news that there is too much butter! The solution? Well, there are many. But one and all are directed toward one end, to cut the existing supply of butter. To bring this about the dairy companies say that it is necessary to kill a large number of the cows now on hand. But this will not of course solve the question of the "surplus" butter which is already on hand. For this they need money and they have already asked the RFC for a fund of 30 million dollars to buy up this "surplus". It will then be turned over to the tender mercies of the big hearted dairy bosses who are not a bit squeamish about saying what they are going to do with it. They say openly they will destroy it, if necessary.

In the land where millions walk the streets and starve; where hunger stalks the country like some gaunt wolf, leaving a train of death, disease, prostitution and crime in its wake; where 8 million unlearned school children try to learn on empty stomachs that George Washington was a great man; where infant mortality and suicide present a steadily rising percentage, where demonstrations of starving workers are common, and frequent, in this land there is, if you please, too much butter!

Sabotaging the Mooney Front

Sept. 9 was the date set for a huge Mooney demonstration on Boston Common. In preparation for this demonstration the preceding Sunday, Sept. 3, was designated as Mooney Sunday. All organizations regularly holding meetings on Boston Common Sundays were called upon to disperse with their own meetings and participate in the Mooney meeting. The C. P. was approached and promised to open the meeting from its platform and then turn the platform over to the Mooney meeting.

C. P. Fails to Appear

Sunday, Sept. 3, came. No organization held a meeting of its own. Some organizations turned out to the Mooney meeting. And the C. P.? They were nowhere to be found. It was after waiting for some time in hopeless expectation for the party to appear that the Left Opposition produced its platform and the meeting was opened, not by the C. P. as promised, but by the committee itself.

This, as we remember, was the campaign meeting to prepare the masses for the great demonstration scheduled for September 9 at which we were to hear the best speakers; those speakers capable of stirring the masses to action. And it was not an easy matter for the committee to come to a conclusion as to who should be the main speaker. For a brief two weeks before the date of the demonstration it was reported that the national office of the Tom Mooney Council of Action had made no reply to the request for a speaker. The delegate of the Communist League then proposed comrade Cannon as the speaker for Sept. 9.

It must be said at this point that if the Stalinist party had been conspicuous by its absence up till now, it became more conspicuous by its presence—by proxy—as soon as our speaker was proposed. Experience has taught us to distinguish between the attacks that come from a party member and those from a party member who is trying hard to make good. And so the party "sympathizer" proceeded to point out that by no means must the Communist League delegate "who wants to disrupt the united front" be permitted to bring her political interests here and build prestige for her organization. Under no circumstances must Cannon speak because "that would give a face to the meeting." The support to this attack came from other such "supporters" of Communism who stated that they would be satisfied with local speakers for the sake of helping peace in the committee. Thus the Stalinists won a victory: the Mooney demonstration had no face.

However, when the day of the demonstration arrived, when the "impartial" chairman lauded the N. R. A. as a revolutionary movement and urged the workers to support it; and when the "dynamic" Palmer, whom the National office sent, posed Mooney to the audience not as an outstanding labor leader but as a poor victim of frame-up which might befall anybody it became evident, even to the staunch supporters of the Stalinist party, that the Mooney meeting without a face was not very attractive.

Campaign Speech for the C. P.

Out of the audience, therefore, was picked a leading party member who was to make repairs. And he did. From this speaker we got a variety of subjects. He traveled extensively, from Tom Mooney to Cuba and then to the U. S. S. R. and ended up with a campaign speech for the party. The heart of his master would have throbbed with joy if only he could have heard the concluding sentences as they fell from the lips of his best disciple: "Three cheers for the C. P.!" "Join the ranks of the C. P.!"—All at a Mooney united front meeting!

But those who work sincerely for Mooney gave serious consideration to the meaning of united front. To them a united front meant neither the exclusion of Communist speakers nor a loose, undisciplined organization where each political representative can speak for his own organization. To them it meant further that each participant in open meetings must confine himself to the subject at issue. In this case, Tom Mooney. Consequently, at the following meeting of the committee charges were brought by the most active delegates that the C. P. speakers had violated the united front. The delegates demanded action or they would withdraw.

This, which would have meant the destruction of the council of Action, was averted, at least for the time being, by a decision to put these charges in writing to the party. The argument in defense of the party that the speaker only "subbed" can merely imply that one cannot find among the party's best those who know and can take a position whenever necessary. Such is the training that endures receive under Stalinism. Let those who shield and support such miserable action reflect for a moment. They who refused to let the workers listen to comrade Cannon for fear that his speech might draw the attention of the masses sacrificed another Mooney demonstration and made a mockery of the united front. Let them take responsibility for such failures. The interests of Tom Mooney demand an answer: Why did the Stalinists sabotage and then flagrantly violate the discipline of the united front?

FROM THE MILITANTS

In the Pocketbook Makers Union

It is three months since the strike of the Pocketbook Workers was settled. To date, however, the "Fraternal Club" administration has not called a membership meeting to report about conditions in the shop or whether the agreement is enforced. Meanwhile the employers don't live up to the agreement, in many shops workers do not get the scale. The administration is not doing a thing to see to it that the employers live up to the agreement. Although the cost of living has gone up the wages of the pocketbook workers have remained the same. Yet even the old wage scale is not enforced. In many shops overtime is permitted at a time when unemployment is so serious in our industry.

Moreover, Charles Goldman, the despot, the czar of our union, is misusing the employment office for his clique. Only his henchmen are given jobs. Workers who have been idle for two or three years have no chance of getting a job and are condemned to starve with their women and children. Is it any wonder why the misleaders have not called a meeting for the last three months? Yes, they did call two sections meetings to fill vacancies in the two sections. What happened? At the pocketbook section meeting a few weeks ago the entire office staff came and terrorized the membership in order to smuggle through their candidate for the Joint Council. When they could not succeed the manager, Steu, broke up the meeting.

Two weeks later the operators' section meeting was called. Again they tried the same scheme of terrorizing, bulldozing, watching how members voted. In spite of all this the operators elected all the rank and file candidates. The "Fraternal Club" candidates were defeated. In conservative unions, even, we never hear that officers should interfere in section affairs, but in our union the "Fraternal Club" gang want to rule and dictate even at section meetings.

Furthermore, the "Fraternal Club" and the fake "Progressives", the Matlins, the Ladermaus, the David Myers; they, together with the union administration forced a tax of ten percent on the workers without a membership meeting. They also put on a staff of organizers and business agents without the approval of the membership. The entire needle trades are worlding at the present time 35 hours a week. We in the pocketbook industry, who have so much unemployment, are still working 40 hours a week. In the meantime, according to rumors, the union officials are negotiating with the employers the terms of a Code. Have they called any membership meeting to discuss the terms of the code or to report on the negotiations? No. And why not? The answer is that the "Fraternal Club" and the "Progressives" say this union is a democratic organization and a socialist union; we are not like the Left wing who try to capture the union for the Communist Party; we are not Left wingers. So they divided the union among themselves. The right wing has always looked upon the union as its private property. This is in accordance with Socialist Party democracy in the trade unions.

We warn the pocketbook workers in time and we urge them to come to the next membership meeting and demand an account from our misleaders for all these outrages they are committing daily against the workers.

Pocketbook workers, now is the time to unite all our forces against the bosses and against all cliques. For a union by and for the workers. —N. D. F.

Discussing «Trotskyism» in Brownsville

After ten years of repression the platform of the Left Opposition is penetrating the wall of falsehoods and silence that the mental enforcers of Stalinism built around the Communist movement. In Brownsville, for example, no longer suffices to dismiss "Trotskyism" with a contemptuous shrug or sneering string of epithets. The ceaseless hammerings of the Left Opposition have brought results. The party members and YCLers demand clarity.

Particularly in the last several weeks the most discussed subject has been that of "Trotskyism". The lessons of the German debacle have left their inevitable imprints. There is frightful demoralization and indifference within the ranks of the party and mass organizations. The Unemployment Council is no factor in the lives of the workers of the locality. Almost as bad off is the International Labor Defense. Notwithstanding its supposed membership of over 300, the district records show that there was not one single dues payment made last month. It would be interesting to ask Shifter and Dresslin, the Stalinists in charge, why not one of the leaders calling upon the workers to demonstrate against the Nazi Reichstag fireman, was distributed.

In the Workers' Clubs

An even worse condition, if possible, prevails in the workers' clubs. The American Youth Club, once referred to as the cream of working class organizations, has degenerated under party leadership to almost the same level as any petty-bourgeois social club. The revolutionary policies to which it was dedicated when it was launched, have, in actual fact, been relegated to the limbo of the forgotten. The main activity of its membership at present is in making the Sunday night dances a financial success. The Student Forum exists in name only. Its doom was sealed when the members and sympathizers of the Left Opposition were expelled. And Joe Ross, the League bureaucrat, who rose to the highest position in the club because of his scandalous mongering against the Oppositionists, has long since deserted it. Like most others who live on slanders, the first signs that he would have to participate in rank and file activity, sent him scurrying.

The logical outcome of all this is an air of pessimism and gloom pervading the Left wing movement in the neighborhood. The most glowing eulogies about the correctness of the party line and the great possibilities for organization, leave the rank and file cold. Certainly the office leadership of Sklar and Gilbert will not lift the morose and gloomy atmosphere of the stupor and lassitude that exists within the ranks.

Discussing «Trotskyism»

Although there is at present a general strike of painters taking place, it is not this that is worrying the party leaders. The discussion on "Trotskyism" in the party headquarters, the open reading of the Militant, the fact that a resolution demanding a debate was passed at an open air meeting at Pitkin and Bristol Streets has them frantic. They know that an accounting will soon be asked for from the district, if it already has not been done. Among the active and clear-thinking party and league members there is a growing belief that the C. P. is unable to live up to its blustering and boisterous rhetoric. Defeat after defeat on every field is driving home the painful lesson of the bankruptcy of Stalinism. With ever-growing force the conviction that the principles of the Left Opposition are correct, is asserting itself. There can be no doubt that within a short space of time the best forces of the party will renounce the organizers of defeat and take their rightful places with the inheritors of October—THE BOLSHIEVIK-LENINISTS.

The Left Opposition in Australia

SYDNEY, AUSTRALIA—

August 10, 1933.

Comrades:

The back numbers of the Militant etc., arrived safely and satisfied a long-felt want. We cannot thank you too much for the assistance you have given us in getting a clear perspective of the situation, and we hope to be able to go ahead in the future strong in the knowledge that we have a sound international connection. It is unfortunate that we had not got contact with you before our conference, otherwise we could have improved considerably our general political line. However, we are rather elated to realize that despite our lack of knowledge regarding the international situation as a whole, we more or less arrived at a correct estimation of the situation.

We are enclosing a copy of our first pamphlet which is creating quite a sensation here. When you realize that the revolutionary movement in this country, has been spoon-fed with the sophistry of Stalinism for many years, and that a work by comrade Leon Trotsky is as rare as water in the Sahara Desert, you will comprehend what difficulties lie ahead of us. But we have every confidence. The leadership of the Stalinists here is in the hands of a very mediocre set of individuals, who follow faithfully and blindly in the tortuous wake of the Comintern's zig-zags. So great is their faith in the infallibility of the Stalinist leadership that they have given up any attempt even, to apply the alleged "line" to the conditions in Australia (which is not on the verge of a revolution, any situation, but mechanically repeat every tactic and even every word that emanates from the Seats of the Mighty in Moscow. They have created a new "heaven" and a new "God" and taken unto themselves the mantle of the "chosen race". The result is funny, and, as comrade Trotsky says "anything funny is fatal—in the revolutionary movement."

Bankruptcy of Australian C. P.

The sectarianism of the C. P. of A. In the past, which has now developed into Right opportunism, is responsible for the fact that the Australian Labour Party (under Lang) has been able to ban, not only the Communist Party, but all of the fraternal organizations without even a protest from the workers. No member of the A. L. P. is allowed to belong to a fraternal organization, the result is that those organizations have dwindled to a few party members and supporters, and in many cases have gone completely out of existence. The influence of the party is getting smaller every day, but owing to our present inability to widely disseminate the line of the Left Opposition, the members that are leaving the party in disgust are not turning to us, but are falling into inactivity and apathy. We are making our chief task the solving of the literature problem. Without a weekly organ our propaganda is necessarily limited and we are doing our best to overcome this difficulty. There is a wonderful market for the works of comrade Trotsky available, and we propose to reprint as many as possible in pamphlet form directly funds are available.

Yours for Communism,

For the Secretariat.

Wrecking Crew

at Work in the Chicago I.L.D.

When the International Labor Defense was organized in 1925, it answered a long-felt need in the American labor movement. Here at last was a workers' defense organization which had as its primary task the defense of any worker, irrespective of his political beliefs or organizational connections. It was because of this united front character that the I.L.D. succeeded in rallying to its support representatives of almost every section of the organized labor and political movements. Thus the occasion of the 1st conference to establish this organization, was indeed a step toward the I. L. D. experienced a rapid growth on the basis of its non-sectarian and class policy. Particularly during the campaign to save Sacco and Vanzetti, the organization rallied new sections of the working class to it and succeeded in building a genuine mass defense movement.

The I. L. D. traveled a new road when the organization was subordinated to the factional interests of the Stalinists. It became sectarian. It defended only those workers who were members of the Party or belonged to organizations affiliated to it. Non-party organizations successively withdrew from the I. L. D. until the leadership was concentrated wholly in the hands of the Party, without being able to draw to its support those many non-party elements who were affiliated to the I. L. D. at its birth. Members of the Left Opposition, arrested, either at Party demonstrations or in non-party activities, were refused aid from the I. L. D., only because they were members of the Left Opposition. Sympathizers of the Left Opposition who were victims of the capitalist state, were promised defense only if they would renounce their support of the "Trotskyites". Similarly with the Lovestones. Or else, the I. L. D. bureaucracy carried on an expulsion campaign to drive out of the organization all those members who belonged to the Left Opposition, the Lovestone group, or who did not agree with the Party or its policies.

Recent events in Chicago testify that the I. L. D. has not only not changed its inner policies but, quite the contrary, continues to pursue that ruinous course notwithstanding its disastrous effect upon the organization. The following incidents are deserving of consideration.

Up until about a year ago, the I. L. D. in Chicago, had for all practical purposes, two lawyers who handled all the cases for the organization. These were Albert Goldman and D. J. Bentall. Due to various causes, the I. L. D. attracted to it a number of lawyers who offered their services, without charge, to the I. L. D. and who, by and large were moving closer and closer to Communism.

This relationship was shaken with the development of the German situation and when the question of the united front was discussed in certain sections of the Party. The discussion on the German situation and the united front began last fall in the Workers School at which comrades Beidel, Goldman, Francis Heisler and Jack Scher were instructors. The latter three were lawyers for the I. L. D. In the course of these discussions, comrades Beidel and Goldman who were Party members, continued to press for their point of view which coincided with the standpoint of the Left Opposition. They were subsequently expelled from the Party. While organizational measures were taken against Goldman, for the time being comrades Heisler and Scher who were not members of the Party, were allowed to continue their work in the I. L. D.

Against comrade Goldman the leadership of the local I. L. D. began a campaign of slander and finally decided not to use him any longer as a lawyer for the organization. He was no longer assigned to cases, although considered by everyone as the outstanding lawyer of the I. L. D. The local I. L. D. evidently decided to allow him to finish up on one serious case involving six comrades, 5 Negroes and one white arrested at a demonstration, on the serious charge of assault with intent to kill and conspiracy to kill, carrying with it a possible sentence of 14 years. When Goldman spoke at a Negro forum on the south side of the city, defended himself against the slanders of the Party and explained the position he took which led to his expulsion from the Party, he was then removed also from this case. This action of the I. L. D. aroused the resentment of a number of the comrades facing the charges in this case.

With respect to comrades Heisler and Scher who were not members of the Party but very close sympathizers, the I. L. D. pursued a more "lenient" policy until these comrades identified themselves with the Marxian Educational Center as instructors. From that time on they were given no cases to handle. Though no decision of such a character was formally made, the attitude of the I.L.D. to these comrades is tantamount to their removal as attorneys of the I. L. D. They are being replaced by entirely inexperienced lawyers who are prepared to accept every dictum of the Party without question.

Through it all the membership remains in a state of ignorance because none of the actions of the I. L. D. bureaucracy are made public. All of these "decisions" are made at the top without any ex-

Rousing Meetings Greet Swaback

At New Haven

New Haven.—On Tuesday, Oct. 3, before an audience of fully 100 workers, comrade Swaback gave a lecture in the Workers' Circle, Center, New Haven on the "Future of International Communism". The listeners were mostly S. P. members and sympathizers with a sprinkling of Yipsels and a few C. P. members and sympathizers.

The spirit was excellent as all listened attentively to comrade Swaback's words. This was probably the first revolutionary speech most of the Socialists had ever heard. It also gave them an opportunity to compare our unmitigated criticism of the social-democracy with the Stalinist repelling and usually slanderous attacks.

In the discussion period there were some questions on the dictatorship of the proletariat and Communist tactics in general. One Socialist condemned the Third International for forgetting the words of Marx, "Workers of the world, unite". He wanted us to enter the social democracy, which, he claimed, would be revolutionary in a crisis. He was effectively answered by comrade Swaback who reminded him that the social democracy had itself broken Marx's advice in 1914 by sending working-class brothers to fight each other.

One Stalinist demanded the floor for 15 minutes and when the audience voted that no discussion should be more than 5 minutes, he refused to speak. Another more sincere C. P. member stated that the C. P. had called for a united front with the Socialists. He defended the trade-union policy of the American Socialists. Comrade Swaback proved decisively that the comrades was in error in both instances.

After the meeting about twelve of the youth comrades went to the home of the comrade where Swaback was staying and a long discussion was held on the prospects of our youth work.

At Boston

Boston.—The Boston branch formally opened its headquarters Friday, Oct. 6 with the lecture by comrade Swaback on "The Future of International Communism".

The hall was packed to capacity with an audience of excellent composition and deep interest. Comrade Swaback traced the development of the labor movement. He presented the life of the Second International, its collapse and final transformation to national reformism. The Third International, comrade Swaback pointed out, came on the scene of the Second and out of necessity to carry on the work of international Communism. He described the life of the Third International under the leadership of Lenin and Trotsky and its retreat from internationalism since Lenin's death, under the leadership of Stalin and his theory of Socialism in one country leading to its collapse in 1933.

Comrade Swaback gave a vivid picture of the German events to which he was an eyewitness, and which were decisive in the collapse of the Third International. He pointed out the dangers facing the Soviet Union because of the wrong policies; the danger of Thermidor within the Stalinist regime. Comrade Swaback sketched the work of the I. L. D. as a faction of the C. P. throughout the last ten years endeavoring to bring it back to the Leninist path and brought forth its present task imposed by history, to build the forces for a new, a Fourth International to again raise high the banner of international Communism.

The questions and discussion which followed comrade Swaback's lecture were very interesting and important. A number of questions came regarding the Soviet Union. The workers again and again took the floor in discussion and comrade Swaback took up fully each question raised. The workers' influence-planations being made to the ranks. This dangerous practice of eliminating anyone who is not in agreement with every policy and viewpoint of the Stalinized Party, has led and continues to lead to only one result: further stifling of the I. L. D., prevention of its growth and freedom of existence, and its subordination to the bureaucratic leadership of the Communist party. In order to function in the I. L. D. you must be ready to give up all independent thought. You must be prepared to accept, and more than that, you must agree with the policies of the Party. Otherwise there is no place for you in the I. L. D. That is why the I. L. D. is a mere shell of its former self. That is why it cannot grow and no more resembles the organization of its early years. The united front policy which made possible the birth of this organization has been overthrown for a stupid policy of sectarianism. Lawyers identified with the revolutionary movement for decades, or those sympathetic to Communism cannot be used by the I. L. D. because they have views that differ from the Party leadership, while the I. L. D. finds it "expedient" and correct to employ Tammany criminal lawyers (Liebowitz) in cases involving workers persecuted by the capitalist state. In reality there is nothing strange in this practice. It is the result of the line pursued by the Party in the I. L. D. which can have no other results.

«Spiritual Values»

for Hungry Men

Those unemployed workers who still believe that they will be helped out of their present intolerable situation by folding their hands and letting the President take care of them, would do well to read over again a speech which he made Thursday night before the Federation of Catholic Charities. Especially three statements which he made there, taken together, give the whole gist of the unemployed program of the Roosevelt administration.

First the usual sugar-coated promises: "It is for us to redouble our efforts to care for those who must still depend upon relief, to prevent the disintegration of home life, and to stand by the victims of the depression until it is definitely over". This goes along with the redoubing of the propaganda spread by the government, that it is about to spend 700 million dollars for relief, that it will buy 75 millions of farm products to be worked up into food and clothing for the unemployed, etc.

What Does It Actually Mean?

There is no question that 700 millions is a great deal of money, whether to an unemployed worker or to J. P. Morgan. But what does it actually mean, even if the spend money were actually to be spent without deductions for costs of administration, honest and not-honest graft, profits, etc.? With 12 million workers out of jobs at the very least even after the so-called recovery, it means that for the whole coming winter the government proposes to provide about $80 for each unemployed worker, whether a single man or the head of a family. This means all of 8 to 9 dollars a month, or 2 dollars a week. On this amount the unemployed worker is expected to keep his family together, provide food and clothing, etc. This is supposed to keep him contented and prevent him from demanding real unemployment insurance, let alone a change in the whole social system from top to bottom!

More than this, experience has shown that the Roosevelt administration is not likely to spend even the 700 millions about which all the propaganda is being made. Early this year they appropriated 500 millions for unemployment relief. In nine months' time they have succeeded in spending $182,500,000 out of this sum; it is being very economically administered, since they still have two-thirds of it left. They can find 2-1/2 billions to spend in loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to support bankrupt corporations and banks, 3,300 millions for a so-called public works program which turns out to be batheously construction to prepare for the next war, 2 billions for the saving of the small homeowner (in reality for the saving of the mortgage sharks)—but even when they do get money appropriated for unemployment relief, they find it is very hard to spend it.

«Spiritual Values» for the Hungry

No wonder Roosevelt went on to say, right after his sweet promises of help to the "victims of the depression": "The Federal Government has inaugurated new measures of relief on a vast scale, but the Federal Government cannot, and does not intend to, take over the whole job."

Notice with what art he raises the workers' expectations, then keeps them suspended with the carefully-worded warning that the Federal Government refuses to assume full responsibility for the unemployment question.

After this, it is quite logical that he should dispose of the whole matter by stating, "The people of the United States still recognize, and I believe, recognize with firmer faith than ever before, that spiritual values count in the long run more than material values."

This is nothing but a translation into the language of evening dress and formal banquets of the old phrase, "You'll have pie in the sky when you die."

And what gives special point to it is the fact that he used this piece of sickening hypocrisy to show how superior the American system of "spiritual values—not grub" is to the Russian system, where they are doing away with religion but are intensely interested in such things as wheat and steel.

The Roosevelt program comes to this, then: first feed the worker with promises, then shove the responsibility off to others—the state, the city, private charity; finally, when the worker realizes he has gotten nothing at the end of it all, tell him to be resigned to his fate and to think of all the "spiritual values" which he is accumulating as he starves.

All the agencies of the State—the government itself, the newspapers, the radio, the church, all try to make him swallow these ideas, which are so profitable to them because they prevent the worker from realizing what the situation is and from putting up a fight for his demands. The first step is for him to clear away these cobwebs if they have found a place unconsciously in his own mind. Then he will be ready to think of how to organize to get what he wants, and what he must have if he is to survive as a decent human being.

WE BEGIN

Our new sub drive is under way. The first week's results are encouraging. Our out-of-town sub getters have started off with a rush. The list below tells the story:

M. K., Youngstown	8
V. R. Dunne, Minn.	5
J. Fruitman, Toronto	3
H. Ross, Manhattan	1

This is only a beginning. Time must be allowed for returns to come in from the cities west of Minneapolis. Next week's report will show that they too are in the field after subs.

CARRY ON

Remember that the drive closes on November 15. There is still time to overtake these fast starters. But that means work. Our goal is a 100% increase in our paid circulation. We can do it—if every friend of the Militant puts his back into it.

IST—2ND—3RD.

For the one who heads the list on November 15 there is waiting the three volumes of the History of the Russian Revolution by comrade Trotsky; second—two volumes; and third—one volume. That should make every one bustle.

The A. F. of L. Convention, the Strike Wave and Trade Union Perspectives

The 53rd annual convention of the American Federation of Labor convened at a turning point in the life of the labor movement when the resurgent forces of new life, thrust forward by the powerful impulsion of the class struggle, are beginning to push their way through the dry crust and restraining forms of conservative trade unionism.

The new masses who are sweeping into the trade union movement, heralding their arrival by tumultuous struggles, are without any direct representation at the convention. The strike wave, the great, new, vital and determining factor in the labor movement, lacks an authentic spokesman there. But this dread spectre is present all the time and dominates the proceedings. The strike wave is the unofficial delegate which disturbs the dead calm of self-satisfied conservatism so familiar at all A. F. of L. gatherings in recent years. All the important speeches and deliberations were made as if in reply to the thunderous arguments of this new force which is speaking in terms of class battles, of strikes and picket lines.

The forces of resurgent life, represented by the strike wave, which have not yet found formal expression in official representation, did not record their real strength in the convention proceedings. They only recorded their presence in the situation and served notice of a future participation. That alone was sufficient—so ominous is the new power—to make it the axis around which all the proceedings and discussion revolved. The stormy and irrepressible forces of the new labor militancy, clamoring their demands in the nation-wide strike movement, evoked the terrified concern of the labor lieutenants of capital gathered in solemn convention, and of the political spokesmen of capital, including the president of the U. S. and his general, Johnson, who addressed them.

The Real Program of Roosevelt

The real design behind the benevolence of the Roosevelt administration towards union organization was brought out more sharply and clearly at the convention. They want a trade union movement that will be an instrument to restrain the workers, to prevent strikes and to suppress and outlaw the strikes that do occur. Only a few months have gone by since the NIRA was hailed as the liberator of the workers, and already the iron fist is coming out of the velvet glove. Roosevelt's threat to put the recalcitrant horses in a corral; General Johnson's blunter declaration, "You cannot tolerate the strike," and his appeal to public opinion "to destroy every subversive influence"; the glorification of Gompers and the reminder of his role in dragging the American workers into the war—in these expressions of the authentic spokesmen of the capitalist exploiters the Roosevelt program was given a plainer and more easily read translation than before.

The appearance of Green in a Washington church pulpit, with his pitiful appeal in biblical language to the "masters" to be good to their "servants", unspeakably contemptible and servile as it was, only served to demonstrate how neatly the A. F. of L. leaders have fitted themselves into the NIRA scheme to harness the insurgent movement of the American workers through the official trade union movement. There is no doubt where they stand, nor where the convention which they dominate stands.

The New Factor in the Labor Movement

But the outward manifestations at Washington are by no means an accurate reflection of the situation within the A. F. of L., and still less of the present-day labor movement in its broader aspects. Against the policy and intentions of the capitalist politicians and their labor allies, as revealed at the Washington convention, the new outstanding developments must be considered—the influx of hundreds of thousands of new workers into the unions, the formation within a few months' time of 500 new federal unions, the insistent demand for the industrial union form of organization to meet the needs of the newly organized masses. These factors, counterbalanced to the formal official decisions and pronouncements, require consideration in a rounded view of the actual situation.

They are an essential part of the "proceedings" of the 53rd convention of the A. F. of L. And in addition to that, the thunder of the strike wave outside the door also belongs in the record. An appreciation of the present situation in the trade union movement, and of the A. F. of L. convention as a distorted reflection of it, is possible only if these factors are taken into account and given due weight and importance. In that case the one-sided picture of the Washington gathering, as just another expression of hide-bound conservatism, fades away and we see the actual movement as it is in reality, fermenting with new life and on the verge of great convulsions which will upset all the schemes and plans.

Nothing was firmly settled or decided for the labor movement at the Washington convention. The new elements at work in the trade unions registered themselves and served notice, so to speak, of a further participation later on. The contending forces in the trade union movement, which will clash with increasing fury from this time forward, met in a preliminary skirmish at Washington. From there the conflict will be transferred back to the field of class struggle—to the strikes, the picket lines, the battles with the state forces and armed thugs, and the forthcoming internal struggles within the trade union organizations.

All of this is projected on the basis of a strike wave of such dimensions as has not been seen in recent times and which, in our judgment, is only a curtain raiser of what is to follow. The bosses and their political and trade union agents apparently have the same opinion. They have enunciated their program at the A. F. of L. convention. The labor movement itself, that is, the real movement of the masses, has not yet worked out an estimation of the perspective and a program of its own. This is the big task and need of the present time. Its solution devolves naturally on the class conscious elements.

The strike wave is the first reply that the American workers have made to the frightful conditions and standards imposed upon them during the crisis and which the NIRA mechanism is seeking to stabilize and make permanent. The present scope and insurgent militancy of the strike wave are especially portentous as to what is to follow if the workers fail to get satisfaction of their demands.

Trade Unionism - - After the Collapse of the NRA

And this, in our opinion, is precisely what is going to happen. The attempt of the Roosevelt administration to "plan" industry on a basis of capitalist private ownership is inevitably doomed to a resounding collapse, and that very probably in the near future. With that, and with the failure also to satisfy the expectations of the workers which were aroused by the ballyhoo campaign of the NIRA, will come a tremendous disillusionment of the workers and a rapidly increasing tendency, on their part, to resort to more aggressive struggles; to rely on their own strength and organization. Trade unionism, which was held out to them in the first stages of the NIRA as a device to restrain their independent movement, will become for the workers the medium for its expression on a colossal scale. The workers will turn to trade unionism in real earnest, and they will be bent on making the unions serve as instruments of struggle against the exploiters.

Then, as has already been clearly intimated in the threatening speeches of Roosevelt and Johnson at the Washington convention, the benevolent mask of the Roosevelt administration will be taken off. The unions they encouraged, and even coddled, as long as they thought they could serve as "harness" will meet open opposition from the government. All the forces at its command, from systematic anti-union and anti-strike propaganda to police and military force, will be brought to bear. The unions, insofar as they really fight—and that is the function which the conditions of the times impose upon them—will have to fight for their existence against the government itself.

The capitalist attack against the trade unions as organs of struggle will be carried inside the unions. Green, Lewis & Co. will be called upon to purge the organizations of their militant elements and restore the unions to conservative and respectable docility. The prompt response of these treacherous agents of capital to this demand is assured in advance; their attitude at Washington, in harmony with all their previous conduct, signifies this first of all.

New Struggles within the Unions

The trade unions, swelling into larger proportions by the influx of new members on one side, will witness wholesale expulsions and splits, engendered by the reactionary bureaucracy, on the other. Insurgent workers who insist on striking—the "horses" that "refuse to work in harness"—will meet the condemnation of the labor bureaucracy. Their strikes will be outlawed and denounced as Communist plots. A campaign of red baiting will be inaugurated against revolutionaries and Communists. Where these do not exist they will be invented. Every worker who wants to fight for his rights and wants to make the union fight for them will be branded as a "red". The next developments of the trade union movement will unfold in a seething tide of labor rebellion—"outlaw" strikes, clashes with the authorities, fierce internal struggles in the unions, expulsions and splits.

The fact that already today hundreds of thousands of workers are streaming into the trade unions is in itself a fact of incalculable significance. The workers are on the move. That is what is new, that is what is important in the situation. The trade union is the first and most elementary form of working class organization, for which no substitute has ever been invented. The workers take their first steps on the path of class development through that door. Hundreds of thousands are taking this step already today, a large percentage of them for the first time. Millions of others will follow them tomorrow. No matter how conservative the unions may be, no matter how reactionary their present leadership, and regardless of what the real purposes of the Roosevelt administration were in giving a certain encouragement and impetus to this trade union revival—in spite of all of this, the movement itself represents an elemental force, a power which, properly influenced at the right time by the class conscious vanguard, can break through all the absolute forms and frustrate all the reactionary schemes.

The Task of the Militants

This movement of the masses into the trade unions can be seriously influenced only from within. From this it follows: Get into the unions. Stay there. Work within.

Before any serious development of a revolutionary organization can be expected in America this penetration of the trade unions must begin in earnest. The militants who undertake this task now, after all the discredit brought to the name of Communism by the Stalinists, will labor under a double handicap. The complete and unchallenged supremacy of the reactionaries in the trade union leadership; the weight of the government and of all capitalist propaganda and repressive forces on their side; the popular hostility to Communism and the relationship of forces in general—these circumstances alone will constitute huge obstacles at the beginning. Besides that, the new Left wing movement will have to pay for the sins and failures of the old.

The labor fakers will start new expulsion campaigns against the radicals the movement their influence is felt again in the mass movement. It is folly to think that the task of penetrating the mass trade unions, under the given conditions, and of reconstituting a vigorous Left wing within them can be accomplished with brass bands playing and banners flying. Quiet and persistent work, and loyal cooperation with all progressive-minded workers who want to build fighting unions—this simple prescription stands first in order. The rest will follow.

We give no pledge to refrain from revolutionary activity in the unions or to turn our backs on "outlaw" strikes. We leave such trade union tactics to opportunists and traitors. It is our aim, on the contrary, to be with the masses, especially at the moment of their sharpest collisions with the capitalists, whatever form these collisions may take. In order that this association with the revolting masses can have a fruitful revolutionary influence, it has to begin now by an entrenchment of the militant and class conscious elements in the A. F. of L. unions and the formation of a Left wing within them.

Notes of the Week

SAID THE MAD HATTER

When you hear about the great need of killing 1,000,000 hogs to help the Drive toward Prosperity, you will, no doubt, look up and wonder. A sneaking suspicion will grow within you that there is something cockeyed with a system that requires such waste to keep going.

You look around you. Eleven million hungry men are still pounding the pavements, unemployed. The bright fellows in the government's brain trust keep on tinkering up all kinds of plans to keep the grain crop down, to curtail the live stock. They have to. The leaders of our system that we call capitalism tell them we have too much.

That's the big trouble with us. We have too much. That is why eleven million men must starve.

Odd enough, every worker will admit to himself, and keep wondering. But sometimes the mad hatters of capitalism carry their crazy talk and topsy-turvy ideas so far that the worker can't just stop with mere wondering.

The other day, for instance, Mr. Gerard Swope, a big bun among the boss class, the head of General Electric and a member of the NIRA board, was caught thinking aloud. He was comparing the NIRA with the Russian five year plan. Said Mr. Swope:

"The Soviets started from scratch. They had no industry, no financial structure, no problems of overproduction such as we had to deal with.... Their economic problem is comparatively easy."

The Soviets, under Lenin and Trotsky, took over a country riven, neglected and backward, the ruins of an empire misruled by medieval despots. Its industry lay in ruins and devastated, the wreckage of a criminally futile and disastrous war. A hostile capitalist world surrounded Workers' Russia. When that world could not put it down by force of sword, the international boss class tried to cut off Russia's credits, its sources of economic life. It was still another attempt to throttle it. In the cockeyed world of Mr. Swope.... "Their economic problem is comparatively simple", but....

"But over here we have an overdeveloped economic and industrial pattern.... That has been a colossal task with which Russia never had to be bothered."

The United States entered the world war a debtor nation. It came out of it the outstanding creditor nation, the dominant world power. Its industries surpassed in wealth and technical progress those of all other countries. Its rulers became the real dictators in a war-ridden Europe. Its resources—unlimited. A whole world stood ready to do its bidding. It had everything. "That has been a colossal task with which Russia never had to be bothered."

Help! We've got too much, cries this lion. And you've got to do more than just wonder this time. Because there is some reason in his madness this time. Says Mr. Swope—of the Soviets:

"When they need more coal they expand their mines, put more men in them and produce. The same is true of mills and other industrial structures. They do the job."

But over here, in NIRA America, "with all the natural (?) human jealousies that go with it," "different groups strive for different advantages, and in many cases with little regard for the general good."

Here you can't do the job. You've got all the tools and all the materials, but you can't do the job. "Different groups strive for different advantages, and in many cases with little regard for the general good."

Mr. Swope knows his capitalistic system, the system of profit and greed, of wasteful competition and industrial anarchy.

That is the big difficulty over here. That is what stands in the way of solving the problem in the U. S. A. And Mr. Swope tells you—that's the only thing that stands in the way. In so many words.

Two Congresses «Against War»

But the final resolution of the New York convention—is that a pacifist document? Merely to ask such a question is to display a vast gullibility. What do the words of this cooked-up resolution matter? Those who voted for it include not only the Stalinists, but persons whose avowed policy is to "promote peace between religious, classes and races" or "who are opposed to every kind of war"—and similar class collaborationist, reactionary pacifist clap-trap. What possible resolution can be adopted jointly by such elements and genuinely revolutionary elements? Nothing but a document of deceit, of sham, a mere collection of words strung together on a Stalinist string to serve as a noose for the militant proletariat and its fight against imperialist war.

The United Front and War

So you are opposed to the united front? Not at all. In the first place, a genuine united front, and not an indecent burlesque, would start off with an open appeal by the Communist International for a conference with the Second International, the Amsterdam International, the syndicalists and the International Left Opposition, to discuss a minimum program—and not to set up a special organization. In the second place, a united front with sincerely pacifist elements can never be organized to fight war in general, or even imperialist war as such. The pacifists are totally incapable of even starting such a fight, and the duty of the Communists is to say so plainly. A united front, with such groups can be confined to nothing more than concrete questions of the moment, can be maintained only for a brief time, and cannot, must not, take the form of a united organization. Anything else means a bastardized "anti-war" movement, a cruel misrepresentation, a deliberate fraud, a wax figure that melts as soon as events warm up a little.

Hasn't that already been demonstrated in less than a year? What did the Amsterdam movement do to halt the progress of Fascism in Germany? NOT A THING! What genuine, virile mass movement is setting in motion now to ward off the insolent attacks upon the Soviet Union by Japanese imperialism? NONE AT ALL! The truth is that it is as bankrupt, as impotent, as misleading as the Stalinist which brought it into being.

The Left Opposition does not conceal for an instant its attitude towards this monstrously perpetrated upon the militant working class. Our position towards it is not a new one. It is identical with that of the Left wing a generation ago, which had to combat similar manifestations of opportunism treachery and bureaucracy in the Socialist parties of that time. We can therefore do nothing better here than to quote with approval the views of the Left wing in the Socialist party with regard to the People's Council sixteen years ago, expressed in the official organ of the Left, The Class Struggle (Sept.-Oct., 1917). With hardly the change of a phrase, it applies word for word to the problem in hand.

"The Socialist party in its support of the People's Council has again made a tactical error of the first importance. Indeed, the tragedy of the situation is seen in the circumstance that our party has practically lost its identity nationally as a force against the war. All its anti-war activity is virtually centered in the People's Council, an organization that does not accept revolutionary action, and the conversation of which, moreover, is strengthened by the party bureaucrats dominant in its management. The People's Council is being used by the Socialist party officials to make votes for the party. This may succeed, temporarily, but its ultimate effect will be to make recruits for the Gompers-Sjorgo party of 'practical' social reform.... It is easy to enthusiastically accept the People's Council. The more difficult task, indispensable, is to cleave to fundamentals and express our own independent action in our own revolutionary way as adherents of international socialism."

Let the fate of the Socialist party and its "People's Council" serve as a grisly warning! The August 4th of the Comintern in Germany already indicates the fate to which the Barbusse movement has been doomed from its inception. M. S.

P. S.—The call for the New York conference started out by welcoming "the step taken by Sherwood Anderson, Theodore Dreiser and Upton Sinclair." Not one of these three dragon slayers was even present at the congress! Sinclair is running for governor of California on the Democratic ticket. Dreiser has endorsed the Roosevelt program. Anderson follows in his footsteps. Shouldn't it begin to be clear now where the "heads" of the "historic congress" have been pulling its "body"—to say nothing of its Stalinist posterior?

On Gompers

misleaders like Gompers and Mitchell, this Civic Federation was an open class-collaboration agency consecrated to the idea of "the partnership of labor and capital," to the settling of strikes at the expense of the workers and to blocking the road to organization of the unorganized.

Through this organization and together with the kings and barons of finance and industry Gompers waged a bitter struggle against socialism within and without the American Federation of Labor. As president of this organization he was instrumental in betraying the steel strike of 1901 and numerous strikes thereafter. The membership of Gompers in this capitalist organization and his concurrent presidency of the American Federation of Labor is the keystone of his role of the guardian, the watchdog of the interests of the capitalist class in the labor movement.

Against the I. W. W., this evil genius of labor unleashed the virus of his hatred. That the I. W. W. was championing the cause of the oppressed and challenging the strongholds of trusted capital meant nothing for Gompers. They were reds, "against the government" and he was out to destroy the I. W. W. When the U. S. W. officials acted as strikebreakers at Lawrence in 1912 to stamp out the militant battle led by the I. W. W., Gompers condoned the act. The same at Paterson in 1913 by a backdoor agreement with the bosses. With remarkable indifference Gompers ignored the bloody massacre of the striking coal miners in Ludlow Colorado by the Rockefeller interests. Similarly with the St. Bartholomew's night in the copper strike in Calumet, Michigan.

Against Industrial Unionism.... Gompers detested the I. W. W. as much for their industrial form of organization, which cut across the lines of craft and encompassed the mass of unskilled, as for their burning creed of class struggle. The consistent policy of Gompers was to divide the organized workers into innumerable segments, to rip the labor movement asunder with wasteful jurisdictional disputes. To this every day the American Federation of Labor is torn by fruitless jurisdictional bickering—the seed sown by Gompers is still sprouting its rotten fruits.

"Non-Partisan" Politics

In politics as in the trade unions, Gompers earned the statue erected to him in Washington. Here he chained labor to the political chariot of the capitalist class—the Republican and Democratic Gold-Dust twins of Big business. By the slogan of "Reward your friends" Gompers made labor the groveling lick-spittle of the bosses. He shied away from a party for the workers like Trotsky, only to maintain a corps of toadying lobbyists who crawled on all fours for favors from the standpat parties of the master class.

A Recruiting Sergeant For Capitalist War

It was quite appropriate that Gompers should be the recruiting sergeant for the American imperialist plunderbund holding the American workers in line for the slaughter for profits they were prosecuting in Europe. The capitalists made certain there would be no trouble from the workers when they entered the war by immediately enlisting the only too-willing services of Gompers. He secured a declaration from the A. F. of L. pledging its support of the government in the war in the event of United States' participation. Gompers was a member of the Council of National Defense created in 1916, and was influential in priming American public opinion to war consciousness.

Prior to and even after the outbreak of the war to make the world safe for bigger and better profits there was a large pacifist sentiment in this country and in the labor organization. This would never do for Gompers who put his whole heart into the patriotic campaign into driving the workers into the Morgans' carnage. He was the father of the American Alliance for Labor and Democracy which enlisted the social-patriots like Sjorgo and Russell and spread war propaganda from one end of the country to the other.

If the war was to be a success there must be a docile, rebellious, hard working proletariat in the home country and Gompers was the man for that. A member of the War Labor Board he watched hawklike that there be no strikes during the war; and if such broke loose in spite of him, Gompers had a machine to hamstring the workers' struggle for whom exploitation knew no more intense in lines of war. And for this service Roosevelt is not stingy in his plaudits when he says that "it was his (Gompers) patriotic leadership for the unanimous mobilization of the workers in every part of the union which supplemented the mobilization of the men who went to the front". A monument to Gompers in Washington—little crosses on the battlefields of France for the workers who fought for Wall Street's gold.

In His Dotage—Fighting the "Reds"

For Gompers the war did not end with the declaration of the armistice in November 1918—not the class war, to be sure; he had long ceased to recognize that. Under the cry that the war was still on Gompers and Lewis, frightened white by the invocation of the Lever Act declaring the coal strike outlaw, drove 425,000 coal miners back to the pits. Gompers did everything in his power to sabotage the great steel strike of 1919 and he finally succeeded in putting the rebellious steel workers "in the corral".

Samuel Gompers spent his dotage in a fitting manner—fighting reds. Here he was the fury of old age incarnated. Part and parcel of the post-war red hysteria, Gompers did his "bit" to preserve "American institutions" from the Bolsheviks. Heounded the Communists and expelled the Left wingers from the A. F. of L.

The American workers will remember this labor lieutenant of the capitalist class with an oath of hate on their lips. After the proletariat of this country crosses the pinnacle of power it will write this inscription under the monument in Washington:

"Samuel Gompers—the Evil Genius of the American Labor Movement."
—GEORGE CLARKE.

Cuban Gov't

But this victory and the failure of the workers to raise their struggle to the plane of the contest for state power placed the Left wing of the petty bourgeoisie in power. There, of course, they cannot long remain. Below, the workers refuse to be satisfied with programmatic promises which supplement pledges to the imperialist wolves that their loans and property will be respected. The workers are taking over mills and mines as guarantees of their demands for higher pay and better conditions, setting up workers' committees to run them and here and there they are setting up Soviets and organizing a Red Guard. All this constitutes a potential threat to the whole capitalist-imperialist system in Cuba.

This threat has driven the petty bourgeoisie to the right, toward the American "mediators". This is covered up by the protest that the workers are provoking armed intervention. The anti-imperialism of the petty bourgeoisie is not the revolutionary, international anti-capitalist program of the workers; it is the futile, nationalist, hodgepodge of the desperate middle class without a social program and without the resource and ability to guide the destinies of modern society.

In the first period following its assumption of governmental power the petty bourgeoisie made concessions to the workers. The arbitration of strikes which they instituted granted the workers' demands. At this stage of the revolution the petty bourgeoisie saw in the workers allies against the imperialists, levers with which to force concessions for themselves.

But when the workers refused any longer to follow the leadership of the petty bourgeoisie and conducted independent struggles in their own interests the petty bourgeoisie became terrified at the rising spectre of the proletarian revolution. On the other hand, the swift development of the workers' struggles and their increasingly revolutionary character frightened the bourgeoisie who, dissatisfied with the "liberalism" of the government, made and are making attempts at armed insurrection to overthrow the government of the petty bourgeoisie after which they hope to put down the workers. In this they are encouraged by American imperialism.

The fear of the bourgeoisie and the imperialist on the one hand, and the fear of the workers on the other, and the vacillations between these giants reflect the contradictory position of the Cuban petty bourgeoisie. Today, as was inevitable from the beginning, it is swinging to the right against the workers. That is the meaning of the shooting of the Communist demonstrators in Havana and in the interior. That is the meaning, of the sacking of the Left trade union center. That is the meaning of the organization of the Caribbean Army and the illegalization, in practice, of the Communist Party. It remains to be seen whether the workers will not drive off the armed students who are moving against the seized mills and mines; and whether the workers confronting the soldiers cannot win them over. What they need most for that is a correct program and leadership. The influence of Communism is growing. But the failure of the workers to put forward political demands signifies that the Communist Party, haled by Stalinism, is not measuring up to the great tasks that the situation has thrust upon it. —T. Strike Wave Hits Canada Struggles Show Labor Revival

Toronto.—

During the past several months there has been developing in Canada a strike movement of portentous moment. Parallel to the movement in the United States although much smaller in size, the strike wave in Canada is sweeping across the country, gathering momentum with each victory and giving the urge to increasingly greater struggles of the masses.

Theoretically, the situation here is of very broad significance, especially in the contrast it presents to the American situation. The question of the immediate source of the strike wave is somewhat simplified because of the absence of an N. R. A. to incite; but this immediate source is the cyclical upturn can be concretely illustrated by reference to the specific instances composing the movement—for example, the strike of the workers of Hallman and Sahle took place at a time when the firm was doing its heaviest business in four years; the upholsterers struck under the condition of a similar industrial pick-up; and the strike of the furniture workers also occurred at a time when new orders were bringing the workers back to their jobs.

Radical Term of Movement

Because of the absence of an N. R. A., however, the movement here has taken a more radical direction. In Canada, even more than in the United States, the great masses of the workers are still unorganized and therefore more bitterly oppressed by the crisis. The growth of the depression gave rise to a process of gradual liquidation of the lower strata of the bourgeoisie; and now that the industrial revival is returning the workers to the factories they are finding themselves integrated into larger and more organized economic units—which in itself would produce an urge to unionize.

Rise of the Strike Wave

It is of interest to trace the progressive development of the movement over the course of the past few months. Beginning with June there have been the following strikes:

Strike of 1000 mine workers of Glace Bay, Nova Scotia—in the face of a lockout when they refused to accept a pay-cut.

Strike of 2000 lumbermen of the Thunder Bay region for an increase of thirteen cents per cord.

Strike of 350 fur-workers in Toronto—which won for them a 20% increase and reduction in hours.

Strike of 100 canning factory workers in St. Catharines—against wages of 10 and 15c per hour. Successful.

Strike of 700 workers of the Mercury Mills in Hamilton. Concessions won.

Strike of 1400 miners in Est. Coulee, Alta. Successful.

Strike of 250 upholsterers in Toronto under the leadership of the W. U. L. Large wage increases won.

Joint strike of 700 furniture workers in five factories, and 80 workers of the Swift Co. in the town of Stratford. This can truly be called the crest of the strike wave, from the point of view of its militancy, the proportions it has taken on, and its potential after-effects. This Canadian strike of 17,000 people has been witnessing events of really international-Bolshevik portent.

Mass Movement in Stratford

The strike of the furniture workers was called on Sept. 14. The strike of the Swift workers took place in an entirely spontaneous manner on the Monday following. It was quickly taken in hand by the W. U. L. and almost instantly the two strikes became knitted into a solid mass movement. Returned soldiers served as buglers to summons the men from one factory to another whenever help was needed. The whole town is behind the strike—employed and unemployed, returned men and militia men. When it was suggested in the city council that the militia be called upon to maintain order, it was discovered that the entire militia was out on the line with the strikers. In desperation the mayor appealed to the government who promptly sent him 120 troops and four tanks from other towns. This action raised a storm of protest throughout the country. The A. F. of L. locals in Stratford formed a united front with the W. U. L. on this issue. Tremendous demonstrations were staged at one of which 8,000 people—more than half the town—turned out.

In normal times strikes occur in a sporadic manner and have value almost entirely as individual economic struggles. The present strike wave, on the other hand, is a definitely organic process, a growing movement of the masses; and as such it assumes a constantly more definite political character. In Canada its political character has been brought clearly into the open by the intervention of the military in Stratford. Much depends on the outcome of the Stratford situation. A victory here would spur the vacillating furniture workers throughout the province forward. It would set the spark to the Canadian railway workers who have been on the verge of strike for several months now...and these strikes in turn would give an impetus to other struggles.

Order Bellusi to Be Deported

Philadelphia.—Antonio Bellusi, a militant Italian worker, has been ordered deported to Fascist Italy. The deportation proceedings against him, which have been pending for some time, resulted in this decision. Comrade Bellusi was arrested in Wilkes Barre on the charge of distributing the Militant. He has been in Gloucester immigration station for several months. We want all workers sympathetic to Communism to write to comrade Bellusi there.

Comrade Bellusi has been active in the labor movement in Italy and America since 1918. In that year he joined the Italian Socialist Party. Later he joined the Communist Party of Italy founded by Bordigha. If we do not stop this deportation comrade Bellusi will be delivered over to Mussolini's fascist murderers.

So far we have had very little assistance from the I. L. D. in Philadelphia. The I. L. D. Committee Against Deportation failed to hold a meeting week after week. Three mass meetings which had been arranged were postponed. Something will have to be done to organize the support of the workers for comrade Bellusi.

Hitler's "Bombshell" at Geneva

German Fascism Bids for Arms Independence

Nazi Maneuvering for Free Hand in Military Adventure. Prepare for Drive against the Soviet Union; Seek French Aid.

Last Saturday Hitlerite Germany bolted the League of Nations and the Geneva Disarmament Conference in a precipitant action which the press universally describes as a bombshell. Insofar as the Hitlerist maneuver contributes to a more complete and accelerated decomposition of the farce of capitalist "internationalism," the bombshell has no doubt hit its mark.

After the departure of Japan last year, the German "Austro-Prussian" as the Nazi diplomats express it—leaves little more of the League of Nations than its bare name.

The sudden and startling move of the Reich followed repeated and increasingly difficult attempts, of the former allies on the one hand, to hold the lines of the status quo achieved by their robbers' treaty of Versailles; and of National Socialist Germany, on the other hand, to achieve "arms equality" and a free hand in war preparations. The desperate internal and external economic situation of post-war Germany brought into its leadership a clique of political adventurers prepared for any gamble. It was only to be expected that the latter would, the moment they felt themselves to any degree masters of their own house, initiate drastic action on the foreign front.

The Adventurism of Despair

The men whom the agonizing Reich bourgeoisie brought into power are destined to extend their adventurism of despair beyond the national borders. Under the camouflage of a "pacifist" and "disarmament" propaganda which has characterized the inter-European diplomatic maneuvers ever since the World War, Hitler attempted to get universal approval for his plan to reestablish Prussian militarism within the framework of the League of Nations. Facing, as he had always expected to face, an immovable aversion on part of the former allies powers to give up any of gains they achieved over Germany by the Versailles pact, he has from the first sought to bring about a showdown by an open break which would clearly be of advantage to him.

He merely seized the opportunity offered by the British-French stubbornness at Geneva last week. The pacifist Hitler throws the onus for the failure to disarm right into the face of the British and the French, and their dilatory tactics. Winning sympathy thereby for his "sincere desire for peace and disarmament" from all sorts of neutral nations, he makes the "just" demand: on that basis to be allowed an equal opportunity to arm up to the standards of the rest.

Fascism Seeks Military Independence

Fascist Germany is out to get a free hand in girding itself for its next, external attack. The unkind eye cast by the United States upon the British-French hegemony on the continent, its "disinterested" and "neutral" stand, the aloof position of Mussolini, growing out of Italy's special interests—undoubtedly aids Hitler's strategy. France and England are faced with a fait accompli in the German move for military independence. The hope for allied control over German armaments—arising less from fear of an immediate war, than from a view to more distant advantages—has been badly shaken by the Nazi "bombshell."

The Reich government, on its part, has made clear that in striking out for armaments independence it in no way gives up the idea of cooperation with the governments of France, Great Britain, et al. On the contrary. In his radio speech explaining Germany's latest step is not at all intended as an affront to the above two nations. He goes further than that. The Nationalist Hitler makes a direct gesture, to the French, to bury the hatchet with the Erbfeind (the "hereditary enemy" who takes up such an important place in the Nazi ideology of the Nazis).

"It would be a tremendous event," said Hitler, "if the two peoples could once and for all ban force from their common life....After the return of Saar to the Reich, only a madman could believe in the possibility of war between the two states."

A French-German Alliance?

Inclination to accept this overture was not lacking among French ruling circles, immediately after it was made. After all, the independent stand of Germany was an accomplished fact. The question arose of how to deal with the new reality. French-German cooperation, on a new, separate basis, was a possibility in any case. The sentiment in this direction grew with the publication of the Fascist chancellor's speech in full. A striking passage therein reads:

"When, however, the French premier asks why the German youth is marching and falling in line, I reply, it is not to demonstrate against France, but to evince that political determination that was necessary for throwing down Communism and that will be necessary to hold it down."

In the same speech, the Nazi leader alludes further to the aims of Germany's newly gained independence of action:

"It is not immaterial whether on the Rhine or on the North Sea the outposts of the spirit, the revolutionary and expansive Asiatic world empire stand watch....when the National Socialist movement snatched Germany back from the brink of this threatening catastrophe; it not only saved the German people, but also rendered a historical service to the rest of Europe."

Hitler's "Eastern Orientation"

On the basis of extending this "historical service," by a transition from the defensive to the offensive (for which full armament freedom is needed), the French ruling class sees more than an even chance for a German rapprochement. It demands that Hitler explain himself more fully. But it already knows clearly his motive. He has made his "Eastern orientation"—the Drang Nach Osten—more than sufficiently clear.

What is involved is an attempt to crush the workers' state in Russia and the colonization of the Ukraine. To this end the French bourgeoisie is prepared to talk business, even to consider the question of the Saar.

It is generally known that such a direction of Nazi foreign aggression is more immediate than a war against France. It is known that in such a case, the aid of other powers, financial and otherwise, is imperative for Germany. A representative French paper writes:

"We cannot understand why anyone should unreasonably remain attached to a type of procedure and international mechanism which has missed its aim. Hitler's appeal has created a new situation. In a new fashion conversation seems possible."—Le Jour, October 17.

French Munitions for Germany

France is preparing to bow before the inevitable and to try for new gains, new advantages on a different basis. From the appearance of things, the new French orientation already has taken roots. The French arm of munition manufacture, Schneider-Creusot, was recently accused of furnishing 400 (Continued on Page 4)

Trial Exposes Nazis' Guilt Frame-up Victims Face Death

Every day raises in bolder relief before the entire world what a gruesome farce is taking place in Leipzig. Even the wretched travesty upon justice conducted by the Nazi savages has heralded to the world that the scorch of guilt is singled on the brow not of the accused, the brave Communists in the dock, but inevitably on the Hitlerite rascals.

The evidence that appears before the "court," the evidence that has leaked into the trial, the testimony of any of those that have been able to tear away the gag, sends shivers of fear down the spines of the ingrates. A more patent frame-up has not been known in this crooked capitalist world. The spectre of the denunciation of the whole world sits in the trial like Banquo's ghost. It has driven the Fascist persecutors frantic.

The contradictory evidence of the Nazi dupe, Van Der Lubbe, threw the first monkey-wrench into the well-oiled plan to place the hands of the Communists on the hangman's block. The solemn verdict of the International Commission of Jurists that set in London confounded the executioners. The thundering indictment of Torgler and Dimitroff, tortured and mauled for months by the Nazi beast, has announced to the wide world that the diabolic scheme of intimidation could not silence the voice of the revolutionaries. And now the "Brown Book of Hitler Terror" looms ominously before the drum head court martial. For the time being the German Fascists have been diverted from the attempt to place the onus of guilt for the Reichstag fire on the Communist victims. They are busily preoccupied with exonerating Goering and his accomplices, who are the real incendiaries.

Unemployed Die in L. A. Fire

Los Angeles.—

Capitalism's cruelty and stupidity have taken a toll of 88 unemployed in Los Angeles' Griffith Park fire of October 17. All that remained of 61 "missing" men were handfuls of ashes. Twenty-seven charred bodies have been identified. Several hundreds are in the hospitals. A number of the injured will die.

The work at which the unemployed are put consists of building roads, camp sites, bridge paths, fire breaks—to make Los Angeles more attractive to the parasites of the country. At work in Griffith Park were 3400 men. Political appointees (not forest rangers or experienced fire fighters) were in charge. A blaze started in one of the blind canyons.

The day had been hot and the brush burned like oil. At quitting time the 3400 men were told not to go home but remain to put out the fire. The more rebellious spirits, who refused, were threatened with withdrawal of work orders, and with clubs.

Who were these unemployed? Aged and youthful laborers and white-collar workers—all poorly fed, poorly clothed and poorly clothed. They had just finished a full day's work underneath the hot California sun. They were totally ignorant of fire fighting.

Down the steep canyon walls the men rushed, impatient to put the fire out, anxious to get home. But the flames flared, the men attempted to climb the canyon only to fall into the flames like scorched flies.

"Lumpers" (unemployed) are not eligible for State Workmen's Compensation. Barring an underpayment of but trivial sum of county insurance the families of these men are to be complete objects of the most miserly charity. The blood spots of murder of the unemployed will not come off the hands of the capitalist class. The working class has indicted them. Into the collective consciousness of the masses the guilt of capitalism has been branded.

The curtain has been lifted. Nothing the Hitlerites may do will blind the world as to who is the real perpetrator of the heinous deed. The secret passage from the Reichstag to Goering's offices, the deliberate absence of the Berlin fire department until after the fire had done its intended damage, is blinding proof that the spark was ignited by the brown hordes to provide the excuse for the proscription of the German Communist Party.

Torgler, Dimitroff, Popoff and Taneff stand in the shadow of the Fascist guillotine! The bourgeois gentlemen of motley "liberal" shadings have agreed to their innocence. But that is not enough to stay the hand of the Fascist butcher. Only the mighty power of the international proletariat can shatter the plans of the Hitler, Goering and Co. to fragments. This protest has not been heard. The working class must not be silent. In its protest it must show the capitalists that international solidarity is not dead. Let this cry resound throughout the four corners of the globe; let it be thundered forth in huge demonstrations and strikes: "Torgler, Dimitroff, Popoff and Taneff must be freed!"

The Organizing Campaign of the New York Food Workers

The Hotel workers of New York City and vicinity are responding to the organizing call of the Hotel and Restaurant Branch of the Amalgamated Food Workers. The response is so enthusiastic that it surpasses the most optimistic expectations of those workers who devoted themselves to the great task of building the union again to its former strength. This splendid response is not at all accidental; but on the contrary has a justification in the fact that this union has shown the workers in the past that it can defend its interests in an effective way.

Twenty-one years ago, in 1912 the Hotel Men's Association through their chefs and head-waiters exercised a virtual terror over the workers in order to exploit them more effectively. Conditions became so intolerable that the workers determined to end them organizing themselves into a union. The A. F. of L. union, with its craft divisions did not inspire the Hotel and Restaurant Workers. Therefore, they preferred to organize themselves into an industrial union, accepting in its ranks every worker of the shop. The 1912 strike is still remembered by many old-timers in the industry as the first militant attempt of the workers to enforce humane conditions of work. Although this strike failed to organize the workers, still it succeeded in bringing home the determination of the Hotel and Restaurant workers to put an end to the humiliating conditions.

The Strike of 1918

In 1918, another attempt at organizing the Hotel workers was undertaken by this union, this time of a far wider scope. More than 18,000 workers participated in this strike. The main hotels of the city of New York could not open their dining rooms, because not only the waiters were on strike but the bus boys and the cooks with their assistants and dishwashers. The Hotel Men's association refused very stubbornly to recognize the union although they were forced to grant almost all its demands, that is, higher wages, the establishment of eight hours work, day off and sanitary conditions (lockers, washing-rooms, and the rest). They employed negroes as strike-breakers and this fact alone must teach us how necessary it is to recognize the negro as workers with equal rights in our ranks. Already many negro workers are coming to the headquarters inquiring about our drive. The bosses also organized a central employment office with a black list carrying the names of the militant Hotel workers.

Because our union did not succeed in forcing the Hotel Men's Association to recognize it and thus to secure the closed shop, the union lost many of its members, retaining a few who were devoted and willing to keep the organization alive. The next effective struggle took place in 1924 when the Union had as closed shops the entire Procurement Corporation, that is, the main Broadway cabarets. But when these cabarets were closed the union was reduced to four closed shops comprising in all not more than six hundred workers.

The 1929 Strike and Split

In 1929 this same union undertook the organization of the Cafeteria workers and succeeded splendidly in mobilizing more than three thousand workers in a militant strike that won the admiration of every unionist. This success, instead of serving as a basis for further struggles, led to the weakening of the union. This was not, on account of any blows from the bosses but from the very people whom were bragging about revolutionary devotion and the rest. The Stalinists split the union in order to build a sectarian organization under their exclusive control.

It must be said openly that this organization, the Food Workers' Industrial Union, did the worst service to the Hotel workers of our city. While accepting participation last August in a united front, its leaders, in a mass meeting for union agitation, attempted to confuse the workers by distributing cards, bearing the address of their own organization. Their spokesman, Gromber, evaded the question of fusion of the two unions and spoke the worn-out phrases of trade unionism. Comrade G. low, speaking as the representative of the Hotel and Restaurant workers branch of the A. F. W., pointed out that now, more than ever, the workers must undertake seriously the establishment of one union in the industry. These remarks of comrade G. low were received enthusiastically by the workers present. The Stalinists could not accept such a proposal because their high priest, Browder, told them plainly in the columns of the Daily Worker that "many trade union functionaries of the Party while working in other unions must at the same time try to build the 'Revolutionary unions'." In other words, go out and smash the other unions. Such is the policy of the elements who destroy whatever they are unable to rule.

The following meeting took place under the auspices of the Hotel and Restaurant Workers' Union because the Stalinists violated the united front by not only withdrawing themselves from it but also by evading the fusion of the two unions into one.

They resorted to such debasing and degrading methods as for instance the carrying of huge signs around the streets that were leading to the Palm Garden where the mass meeting took place informing the workers that the mass meeting would take place the next day. In spite of this sabotage the hall was packed and was addressed by comrades Cannon, G. low and Field and others. The union has succeeded in organizing more than 2,000 workers in more than 25 hotels, some of which rank as the biggest in New York City.

Bosses Prepare to Fight Union
The bosses, in anticipation of the pending militant fight of our union, already are putting into motion, the mobilization of all the Fraternal Societies of cooks and waiters. The outstanding organization of this nature is the Geneva, Rumors are widely circulating that already its leaders have received a fat portion of the sum that the Hotel Men's Association have raised in order to combat the efforts of the workers to organize into a powerful union.

In other words, the bosses are already preparing certain scabbing machinery to defeat our efforts. It is necessary to follow carefully our elementary duties in to approach the members of the Geneva and the like and convince them to join our Union and at the same time, to expose the scabbing character of their leaders who, as it is plainly known to all, are nothing but agents of the bosses. The Geneva especially always aims to serve one purpose, namely, the interests of the headwaiters and Captains. Only our Union is in a position to serve effectively the interests of the Hotel and Restaurant workers. The 54 hours a week and the apprentice system, which are discussed quite extensively in another article in this issue, would have been inserted in the code if our Union as well as the other unions did not undertake their organizational drives. Very soon the hearing will be held in Washington, D. C. and the stronger we are the easier it will be for us to enforce our demands in the code.

The Fight for Union Recognition
As could be expected this rapid growth of the Union created quite a great problem to be handled by a few workers. The form of its constitution fortunately, is an ideal one. But as the form of the A.

F. of L. Unions is subordinated many times to the substance of the movement, so the industrial form of our union is not always a guarantee of its automatic application. Therefore the workers themselves, who join our Industrial Union, must be educated to understand our union thoroughly and must be encouraged to participate in its leading committees and especially in its organization committee. Then and only then will we be able to fulfill our great task of organizing the Hotel and Restaurant industry as thoroughly as to insure the recognition of the union by the mighty Hotel Men's Association. Otherwise, even if the bosses will be forced to recognize the demands of the workers they will do so only temporarily, under the pressure of the drive. In order to assure permanent gains, and not permit the bosses to throw overboard all these concessions it is necessary to force this recognition of the union and the closed shop.

Let all of us redouble our efforts and bring into the union more fellow workers in order to force our bosses to recognize our union. Thus we can put a stop to the miserable wages and long hours. We can also end the humiliation that we, the Hotel and Restaurant workers, are forced to undergo, not only from the guests of the hotels, but also from the militaristic commands of our head-waiters and chefs. We must always bear in mind that besides the kitchen and the dining-room departments we can also organize the other workers of the hotels who are equally exploited by our bosses, that is, chamber-maids, laundry-workers, elevator operators and the rest.

Trotsky Writes To the British "New Leader"

October 2, 1933
Editors "New Leader"
Dear Comrades:
In the Daily Worker of September 14th I found the letter of comrade S. A. Smith who defends the I. L. P. from the accusation that its delegates have participated in Paris in the building of a Two and one half International. I have no basis whatsoever to interfere in the essence of this polemic. I must point out, however, that from the letter of comrade Smith the conclusion might be drawn that in Paris there was actually laid the foundation for a Two and One Half International, although without the participation of the I. L. P. I consider it necessary to dispel any misunderstandings that readers of the "New Leader" might have on this score.

It is true, that certain organizations which occupy an intermediary position between the Second and the Third International, such as the Norwegian Workers Party, the French P. U. P., the Italian Maximalists and others, have participated in the Paris conference. But precisely all these organizations expressed themselves against the new International. For the creation of the new International, not a Two and one half, but a Fourth International, were the following organizations: The International Left Opposition, the Socialist Workers Party (SWP) of Germany and two Italian Socialist parties, the Independent Socialist Party and the Revolutionary Socialist Party. I urge the readers of the New Leader, as however, also the readers of the Daily Worker to acquaint themselves with the Declaration of the named organizations "On the Necessity and Principles of a new International". Here I shall quote only one paragraph (No. 8) out of eleven.

"While ready to co-operate with all the organizations, groups and fractions which are actually developing from reformism or bureaucratic centrism (Stalinism) towards revolutionary Marxian policy, the undersigned at the same time declare that the new International cannot tolerate any conciliation towards reformism, or centrism. The necessary unity of the working class movement cannot be attained by the blurring of reformist and revolutionary conceptions, or the adaptation to the Stalinist policy but only by combatting the policies of both bankrupt Internationalisms. To remain equal to its task the new International must not permit any deviation from revolutionary principles in the questions of insurrection, proletarian dictatorship, Soviet form of the State, etc.

In conclusion I allow myself to say that the International Left Opposition (Bolshevik-Leninists) is much further removed from centrism (No. 2-12) than the present Barbussovian Comintern.

With revolutionary greetings,
L. TROTSKY.

LEAGUE ACTIVITIES

C.L.A. Activities in New York

REORGANIZATION.—The New York branch having grown beyond the size within which effective functioning is possible, the membership, decided to reorganize on the basis of borough units. Working branches are now operating in the boroughs of Manhattan, the Bronx and Brooklyn, enjoying the full autonomy of branches in any other part of the country, each with its own executive committee, while having the work centralized and guided by a City Executive Committee. Enthusiasm is running high and each of the branches is working out plans for concentration on its own territory.

All three branches now have their own headquarters. In this way, there will not only be a center in each of these boroughs for mass meetings, classes, but also a gathering place for all friends and sympathizers of the Left Opposition.

New York's headquarters remain as before at 126 East 16th Street and are open all day long. The headquarters of the Bronx branch have just been opened at 535 East 146th Street. George Saul is the branch organizer. The headquarters of the Brooklyn branch are 354 Watkins Avenue corner of Belmont, with Joseph Carter as local organizer. All three branches meet on Tuesday at 8 o'clock in the evening.

OUR MEETINGS.—The first two mass meetings in the series organized "For a New Communist International! For a New Communist Party in America!" proved to be highly successful. The Manhattan meeting at Irving Plaza had the hall full to overflowing. The speakers of comrades Cannon and Shachtman, and participating actively in the question and discussion period. In the Bronx, some 200 workers turned out to attend the Hollywood Garden meetings.

Plans are being made by all the branches now to follow up the initial meetings with others dealing with the same subject.

SCHOOL AND FORUM.—The fall term of the International Workers School began in Manhattan last Monday, October 15th, with two of the courses: The State and Revolution given by Jack Weber, and Fundamentals of Marxism given by John G. Wright. Both of these courses are given from 8 to 10 P. M. Monday evenings. Two other courses are given at the same hour on Wednesday: Organization Principles by Martin Abern and Applied Economics by B. J. Field. The admission to each session is twenty cents, and the fee for an entire course, ranging from ten to twelve sessions, is $1.50. Registrations are still being accepted at the headquarters of the school, 126 East 16th Street, all day long and in the evenings up to 10 P. M. Complete outlines for the courses are to be made available to registrants at ten cents a copy, and twenty-five cents to others, not students, who are interested in them.

The forum session is also getting under way. Each of our three branches plans to have its own local forum in its own quarters. Manhattan has already begun, and its forums will take place every Friday evening at 8 P. M. sharp. Last Friday, October 13, Joseph Carter spoke on the significance of the revolution in Cuba. The week following, on October 20, Max Shachtman will speak on the municipal elections in New York and put forward the standpoint of the Left Opposition, discussing at the same time the problem of what ticket revolutionary workers should vote for in the coming elections. Bronx and Brooklyn forum meetings will be announced in the coming issues of the Militant. All workers are invited to attend and participate in the question and discussion period from the floor.

IN THE TRADE UNIONS.—All efforts are now being concentrated in the New York organization to make every member an active militant in the trade union movement. As the work is being systematized more and more, it is being seen that to this point no unionized members join the union of their craft or industry. Several of our comrades are now very active in the organization campaign being conducted by the Hotel and Restaurant Workers branch of the Amalgamated Food Workers. Others are leading the movement to organize the Greek-speaking painters, of whom there are upwards of 2,000 in New York City, into a local of the Brotherhood of Painters and Decorators of the A. F. of L. One of our comrades is the most active militant among the newly mirror workers who are now seeking to establish a local of the American Federation of Labor following their strike. The Stalinists, in this field, are engaged in their customary work of disruption and are fighting with the idea of a "red union" for these workers. Another one of our comrades has just returned from an organization drive among the clothing workers of Haverstraw, New Jersey, which took the form of a militant strike lasting several weeks. Our young comrades have been active in the recently concluded strike of the Doll and Toy workers union. Others have been in the front line of the strike of the New York upholsterers. There, by the way, as a result of the work carried on by us, the Stalinists have been pounced upon one of their own militants in the Upholstery Workers industrial union, comrade Arthur Brandmark, who has now joined the Opposition.

To continue the work of clarification of trade union policy, the City Committee has called a joint membership meeting of all three branches to be held Sunday, October 22nd, at the New York headquarters, for a discussion of our trade union line, to be led by comrade J. P. Cannon. The meeting is to start at 1 P. M. sharp. All comrades are required to attend and participate.

THE BANQUET.—Attention is called to all friends and sympathizers of the Opposition to hold open the date of Saturday, November 4, so as to attend the banquet of the Left Opposition arranged by the New York local. The banquet will take place on that day, 8 P. M., at the Stuyvesant Casino, 9th Street and Second Avenue, with music, entertainment, a dinner and brief speeches. Admission: 50 cents. Further announcements in coming issues.

—CITY COMMITTEE.

Successful Meet in Brownsville

The third meeting in the series organized throughout the boroughs of New York on the New Communist International and the New Communist Party in America, was successfully held in Brownsville at the Premier Palace last week, with a sounder trouncing of Stalinism and the Stalinists than either they or we had calculated on. More than one hundred and fifty workers were assembled, listening attentively to the presentation of our point of view by Max Shachtman when an organized group of Young Communist League and Communist Party members gathered outside the hall and were finally admitted. After the remarks of the two Opposition speakers—comrade James Cannon having followed Shachtman—the floor was thrown open for questions and discussion.

The first speaker in the discussion, was the representative of the Section committee of the official party, a Stalinist named John Morris, who was granted 10 minutes in which to present his apology for the criminal course of his leadership. Despite the courteous extension of his time by chairman Carter, Morris tried to speak for more than half an hour, standing on the presumptuousness and insolence of hooliganism. In order to bring the meeting to an end then and there and prevent further discussion or summary, Morris impudently announced that he would take up a collection for the Daily Worker on the spot. Together with his supporters, he succeeded in throwing the meeting into momentary turmoil, until he was gently heaved off the platform and his milling companions escorted back to their chairs. The pitiful attempt at thuggism and intimidation did not, of course, make any serious headway and during his denunciation of the Stalinist tactics in the summary, com. Shachtman was vigorously applauded by the workers present.

Comrades throughout the country should take note of this incident, which marks the recurrence of the Stalinist policy of breaking up meetings and seeking to disrupt the Opposition gatherings with the only means at their disposal: violence, rudeness, hooliganism. Such a reactionary course can be met with only one reply and the Opposition everywhere has been prepared to make that reply. We have not the slightest intention of allowing our meetings to be dispersed by the flying squadrons of Stalinist workers misled by the bureaucrats who comfortably occupy their office chairs during these frays. Oppositionists, defend your meetings and beat down all hooliganism in the labor movement!

700 Hear Swaback in Toronto

Toronto, Canada.—A huge meeting was held for comrade Arne Swaback in this city. 700 workers turned out to hear his analysis of the international situation and the tasks of the Communists. The size of this meeting is so much more gratifying in view of the counter meeting held the same evening by the Stalinists and several trade union meetings in progress the same evening. A fuller report of this meeting will be given in a subsequent issue of the Militant.

Phila. School Starts Classes

The Philadelphia Section of the International Workers School opens its Fall term, Tuesday, October 17th, at 524 Thompson St. The classes will be held on Tuesday and Friday of each week on the following schedule:

SUBJECT INSTRUCTOR
Tuesday
A. B. C. of Marxism—T. Holmes
7:30 to 9 P. M.
Labor in America—J. Carey
History—9 to 10:30
P. M.
Friday
Communist Manifesto—J. Hardy
7:30 to 9 P. M.
Opposition—9 to 10:30 P. M.
B. Morgenstern.

The duration of the term will be ten weeks. In the elementary class registration must be made within a period of three weeks at a fee of 25c.

In advanced classes registration can be made at any time on payment of 50c, single classes 10c. These classes mark the beginning of intensive educational activities in Philadelphia by the Left Opposition.

Our Open Forum, under the auspices of the International Workers School, will hold its first meeting, Sunday, October 22 at 8 P. M.

SUBJECT: LABOR AND THE N. R. A.
Speaker: B. Morgenstern.
Your attendance at these classes and cooperation in the Open Forum, and other important work of the Left Opposition is sincerely desired.

Swaback Lecture in Rochester

Rochester, N. Y.—The following is a report of comrade Swaback's lecture here in Rochester. The meeting was orderly and nobody interrupted Swaback. The audience was composed of about 20 members of the Stalinist party, 20 of the proletariat and about 10 of our sympathizers. About 25 others were there.

After Swaback had spoken, Sam Essman, one of the Stalinist leaders here, arose, and commenced to speak. He admitted that the Stalinists made many mistakes but that nobody was perfect. He said that they welcomed criticism within the party and that the Trotskyites were trying to demoralize the party. He forgot that Trotsky was in the party when he criticized and we know what happened to him. The party welcomes criticism of other but not of its policies. When someone criticizes its policies they expel him, and then they don't have to listen to his criticism because he is not within the party any more. Very intelligent tactics! I'll say! When Essman finished his spiel, instead of giving Swaback a change to answer him, he gathered his lambs around him and adjourned to their meeting room where, I suppose, he gave them an explanation of Swaback's criticism. Their party alone left the room. The remainder of the meeting was orderly with questions being asked and answered within the room.

—A COMRADE.

PARIS CONFERENCE

Ed. Note: For the information of our readers who wish to follow all the important international developments step by step, we are reprinting here, with the general resolution which was adopted by a majority vote at the Paris conference of Left socialists and independent Communist organizations. As stated in the resolution, of the International Secretariat of the Left Opposition (Militant, Oct. 7th) our delegation did not accept this resolution. It is reprinted here however as a document of information.

RESOLUTION OF THE PARIS CONFERENCE

The International Struggle of the Working Class.

1. Since the publication of the public manifesto at the beginning of February of this year by the seven independent revolutionary socialist parties, events have developed with a terrifying force.

2. The world crisis has shaken the capitalist system of production to the point of chaos and ruin and has forced capitalism to apply the most extreme measures in order to maintain the position of the ruling classes.

3. World unemployment increases from day to day and the attacks on the standard of life and on the political rights of the working classes grows in brutality everywhere.

4. The danger of war has reached the critical point and the militarist and nationalist passions are developing from one and of the world to the other.

5. At the same time Fascism, the terrorist force of capitalism in agony, with the single aim of destroying the workers organizations and plunging the workers into wage slavery and under tyranny will march rapidly with the aid of violence and armed forces.

6. The Hitlerite regime has completely destroyed the workers' organizations which were engaged in safeguarding the interests and the rights of the workers.

7. The victory of Fascism in Germany has shown the entire world the bankruptcy of the social democracy and the Communist Party. The Social Democracy was the strongest pillar of the Second International. Its policy in the capitalist state, its collaboration with the parties of the middle classes, its participation in governmental coalition, its toleration of reactionary governments (policy of the "lesser evil"), has led it to abandon the defense of the internationalist movement of the working class and retrieving the international unity of this class on a revolutionary socialist basis. The first step should be made by convening a world congress and re-presenting all organizations which accept the basis of revolutionary struggle for the realization of socialism. This world congress should have as its principle task the studying of a general expose of the principles and policies for effective revolution action which will be prepared and submitted to the parties by the independent socialist parties. These parties will take the initiative for the meeting of the congress at a date which will be determined later and they will make an appeal for this congress to all workers organizations.

12. The independent socialist parties will be convinced that this appeal will be listened to by millions of workers whose admirable courage and perseverance has not been shaken by the policy of bankruptcy which has led from one catastrophe to another.

Militant Builders

As our comrades and friends all over the country in the sub drive the list of subs is shooting up. Look at the list:

Branch Youngstown 14
V. R. Dunne Minneapolis 5
M. Abern Bronx 4
C. Hedlund Minneapolis 4
S. Hardy Philadelphia 4
J. Frutman Toronto 3
C. Schecht Boston 3
L. Goodman Philadelphia 2
Eckelberger New Castle, Pa. 2

The following comrades got one apiece: H. Ross, Manhattan; M. Kent, Brooklyn; R. Schapp, Brooklyn; A. A. Buehler, Kansas City; J. Carter, Brooklyn; H. Capelis, Manhattan; O. Coover, Minneapolis; M. Gottlieb, Minneapolis.

Add them up; that makes 49 new subs since the opening of the drive. And there are still a little less than four weeks to go. We expect the drive to gather still greater momentum as it goes along.

THREE FACTS.
Three facts stand out from the above list: The branch is showing the field a clean pair of heels. Number two: Notice the number of comrades and cities that are figuring in the list. That is one of the brightest things about the drive. And three: Minneapolis and the New York units are dotting the list which means that if you take it from the point of view of collective, organized activity they are doing a fine job bolstering up the list.

QUOTAS.
A number of cities have set quotas for themselves in the drive. New York has undertaken to raise a hundred dollars in subs divided as follows: Manhattan—fifty; Bronx and Brooklyn—twenty-five each. Berkeley has set a goal of twenty-five subs. So has Philadelphia. How about Chicago, Pittsburgh, St. Louis and the other cities not yet heard from?

ON THE "HISTORY."
We forgot to say in our previous announcements that wherever there is a tie on November 15 when the drive closes the prize for that place will be given to both the tying contestants. This makes it an even greater inducement. The prizes are: for first place—the three volumes of the History of the Russian Revolution by comrade Trotsky; for second place—two volumes; for third place—one volume. That is a prize worth shooting for.

FROM THE WEST COAST:
"The Paterson strike issue of the Militant is a dandy, and if I'm any judge it should win for us many new friends. The new character of the Militant will appeal more to the workers."

ests of the proletariat and consequently to ruin the German workers' movement as is to be seen during the Hitlerite era. The policy of the social democracy was essentially that of the Second International. Even after the complete failure of this policy, neither the Second International nor any of the parties which comprise it have drawn the lesson of the terrible events in Germany.

8. On the other hand, the German Communist Party has existed for fourteen years. It had the great moral support which was given to it by the presence of the Soviet Union; it obtained the vast material assistance for its propaganda and it worked in favorable conditions created by a world crisis of unprecedented proportions. By its mistakes, it also demonstrated its complete bankruptcy.

9. The Third International cannot escape its heavy responsibility for the bankruptcy of the German Communist Party whose pseudo-revolutionary policy was ordered by this Third International and the latter has completely assumed the responsibility for the mistakes by rejecting its own ideology. This degeneration of the Third International, dominated by the Russian Communist Party, and the results of the absence of a revolutionary movement in other countries through the formula of socialism in one country, the bureaucracy of the Third International has betrayed the interests of the world revolution. It introduced the struggle of the Russian Party into the parties of the other countries. It has strangled internal democracy. It has persecuted the critical spirits as heretics.

10. We have appealed for unity of action. This appeal has received no effective response from the two Internationals.

11. Considering the bankruptcy of the policies and the organization of the second and third Internationals, the socialist workers of the world are more than ever faced with the enormous task and the necessary task of regenerating the international movement of the working class and retrieving the international unity of this class on a revolutionary socialist basis. The first step should be made by convening a world congress and re-presenting all organizations which accept the basis of revolutionary struggle for the realization of socialism. This world congress should have as its principle task the studying of a general expose of the principles and policies for effective revolution action which will be prepared and submitted to the parties by the independent socialist parties. These parties will take the initiative for the meeting of the congress at a date which will be determined later and they will make an appeal for this congress to all workers organizations.

12. The independent socialist parties will be convinced that this appeal will be listened to by millions of workers whose admirable courage and perseverance has not been shaken by the policy of bankruptcy which has led from one catastrophe to another.

The Stalinists are bankrupt. If the Stalin party can be said to exist at all it is only as a bureaucratic apparatus with a diminishing number of workers. Politically the Stalin party is dead. As events and the class struggle are drawing a balance under the policies of the Stalinists and the Left Opposition, the Stalinists who began as a party are retrogressing to an ineffectual opportunist propaganda group while the Left Opposition which began as a Marxian propaganda group is moving toward the creation of a new and genuine Communist party on the unshakable foundations of Marxism and Leninism.

Exploitation of Farm Laborers

The economy of the United States has undergone such deepening change in the last decade and a half that what was formerly an avenue of escape from wage slavery for the industrial and agricultural proletariat (home-owning or tenant farming) has become a closed alley or an irreparably broken ladder.

As wage workers, though inarticulate and practically isolated from political or any kind of class guidance, America's agricultural proletariat is in desperation and restlessness. They are moving about or planning to move, knowing the far-reaching influences of the present economic system.

Just today I received the following request from my brother Robert, a beet worker in the state of Colorado:

"Try and let us know if you think that there will be any chance of getting a job in New York this winter, as there will be nothing going on here. I am quite sure that I shall not stay here after beet harvest; and maybe Richard will go with me too, but he talks about going to Idaho or Oregon. I imagine that the economic system is about as cruel toward the proletariat class most any other place as it is here, but there is not much industry in this part of the country: the beets are about the only industry here, while Oregon and Washington have beets, fruit, lumbering, hop-raising, ship work, and stock raising. Another great handicap here is that you have no chance to learn much of anything and there is no entertainment afforded, which amounts to anything. Life is very monotonous and lonesome here."

In the same letter we are given the experiences back of this conclusion, this state of mind. For blocking, thinning, hoeing, and topping the sugar beets the agricultural workers have received $11.50 per acre this year. "Food, clothing, and rent are about the same as when they paid $30.00 per acre; some things are higher and some cheaper."

Children under sixteen years of age are worked in almost all of the beet fields. "There is supposed to be a child labor law here, but it is not enforced because the Sugar Co. wants their labor done as cheap as possible. About three-fourths of the school children in the agricultural districts are kept out of school for the beets for from a month to six weeks each fall."

Where are the Stalinists Today?

The Stalinists boast that they are the revolutionary vanguard of the working class. But are they? Let us see.

Today the workers in the United States are in motion as they have not been since the crisis set in. The six hundred thousand miners are stirring with unrest. Thousands have struck for recognition of their union. Thousands are still striking for recognition of the U. M. W. A. This is the largest group of workers in a single industry in the United States. This is a basic industry. The miners are a decisive section of the proletariat. In traditions of struggle, in organization, in fighting quality they belong to the most advanced section of the American working class. How much influence have the Stalinists who once led the Left wing insurgent miners got among them today? Almost none. How many of the recent and present struggles have they led or influenced? Very few; certainly not the larger struggles.

In New York City almost a hundred thousand workers have struck for better wages and conditions. Thousands more are threatening to go on strike for essentially the same demands. Where were the Stalinists? How many of these struggles did they lead? Almost none. How many of these workers are following them? Very few.

Where are the "revolutionary" trade unions of the TUUL? Viewed organizationally and in the columns of the Daily Worker they lead a certain existence. They hold conferences and pass resolutions. But they have no influence on the struggles of the workers who are streaming into the A. F. of L. They are shells. And they cannot be revived. It is hopeless to think that the future course of the workers' struggles will lead through these paper shells.

The capitalist press admits there are close to a million unemployed in New York City and says there is no prospect of improvement this winter. Relief has been curtailed. Where are the Stalinists? What are the unemployed councils doing? Nothing. They have no real existence. There is no movement of the unemployed in New York City. And the Stalinists are out of the picture.

The Stalinists are bankrupt. If the Stalin party can be said to exist at all it is only as a bureaucratic apparatus with a diminishing number of workers. Politically the Stalin party is dead. As events and the class struggle are drawing a balance under the policies of the Stalinists and the Left Opposition, the Stalinists who began as a party are retrogressing to an ineffectual opportunist propaganda group while the Left Opposition which began as a Marxian propaganda group is moving toward the creation of a new and genuine Communist party on the unshakable foundations of Marxism and Leninism.

The continued attacks on their living and teaching conditions and the attacks now pending are awakening the rank and file of the Teachers Union of New York City to the need of action to protect their interests. Their alarm and their desire to resist is making itself felt on the conservative union administration. Under this pressure the administration is moving toward the left. It now demands unemployment insurance for unemployed teachers and speaks of holding mass meetings of the teachers and is engaged in organizing them, whereas formerly it preached the gospel of reliance on the state legislature and condemned the Left wing for insisting on mass actions of the teachers themselves.

It goes without saying that we have no faith in the administration. It sold out the teachers in the fight against salary cuts a year ago. And if it gets the chance it will do it again. But what is important for the teachers in this new "turn" of the union administration is that it has been forced to move in the correct direction. By this "turn" it opens up possibilities that may well sweep beyond the limits which it sets for the fight.

An alert and correctly oriented Left wing can play a decisive part in this movement. This is the opportunity for which it has been working and preparing. In this period and in the period to come its influence and strength should grow.

But this new perspective finds the Left wing unable to realize the opportunities that are presented to it. The Left wing is divided into two groups that are as hostile to each other as they are to the union administration. The Progressive Group which carries out a Lovestonite trade union policy thunders against the administration in its literature and speeches but supports it against the rank and file, the other Left wing group. Their orientation was reform of the administration. They condemned in principle any independent activity on the part of the Left wing. They branded as dual unionist any such attempt. That they themselves organized some of the unemployed teachers outside the union and did not until a few weeks ago bring them to the union did not prevent them from denouncing as dual unionist the other organization of the unemployed by the rank and file. In short they supported the administration from the left.

The rank and file have carried out a policy which is now contradicted by the new developments in the union. Their thesis was that the union was hopeless; that the administration had a stranglehold grip on it; that it could not be reformed into an instrument of struggle in the interests of the teachers. Readers of the Militant will recognize this thesis as one of the elements of the Stalinist trade union line. It is the A. F. of L. company union idea applied to the Teachers Union.

Errors of Left Groups

The consequences that have flowed from the false policies of these two groups have been ruinous for the Left wing and have not helped the union. Now after a fight of years the Left wing is in a worse position than it was and the administration is firmly in the saddle.

Even now they are more interested in preserving their factional differences and justifying themselves to their own members than they are in building a united Left wing. That is the task that the progressive teachers in the union face. They can, if they make the attempt, penetrate both groups with the idea of one united Left wing. For this they need a program. Whatever program they work out cannot include the false policies and conceptions of the Stalinist and Lovestonite trade union lines. The teachers need instruction in how to find their way to the trade union movement. The way to do it is not in the secret domination of the Left wing by factional cliques but in the open formulation of policies on the basis of trade union democracy. How can the Left wing fight the union administration which has destroyed trade union democracy if it violates it in its own house?

When the Left wing is united it can press the fight for a militant union representative of the interests of all the teachers in the system, steering toward the working class movement.

It Is Impossible to Remain in the Same International with Stalin, Manuilsky, Losovsky and Company -- (A Conversation)

A.—It is time to break with the caricature of an International which is in Moscow. It is impossible to bear even a shadow of political responsibility for the Stalinists. We have been very prudent and very patient with regard to the Comintern; but there is a limit to everything; now that, before the eyes of the entire world, we see on the one hand, Stalin on the other, have placed Hitler in the saddle, now that the Comintern despite the catastrophe has proclaimed its policy infallible—no man of judgment will any longer hope that this clique can be "reformed".

The Comintern "As A Whole"

B.—The clique certainly out, but the Comintern taken as a whole? A.—One must not be deceived by general phrases. The "Comintern as a whole" is an abstraction, not to say, an empty expression. The control is in the hands of the Stalinist clique. For six years now, there has been no Congress. Who has trampled the statutes underfoot? The clique. By what right? By the right of usurpation. No one section, not even a local organization, not one paper has dared to breathe a word about the necessity of an International Congress. This means that in fact, the fate of the "Comintern as a whole" lies in the hands of an irresponsible clique.

B.—That is incontestable, but isn't that just how the matter stood a year ago, when we had not yet withdrawn the slogan of the reform of the Comintern?

A.—No. That is not how the matter stood. A year ago one could still hope to save the situation in Germany. We did everything in our power to throw light on the logic of the situation. If the Comintern were a responsible organization, its leadership could not have failed to hear the voice of events. It is absolutely impossible to expect a more powerful voice. And if the Comintern remained deaf this time, it means that it is a corpse. In still another respect a decisive change has taken place. Last year the German Communist Party still existed. In the whirlpool of great events, it still had to reckon with the working masses. One was able to hope with a certain right—up to the hour of the verification—that the development of the struggle of the masses would not only make Thaelmann's Central Committee turn about, but also the Praesidium of Stalin-Manuilsky. That did not take place. Of the German Communist Party nothing has remained but an apparatus which grows weaker every day and becomes increasingly alienated from the masses. The point has been reached where the Central Committee prohibits the illegal local organizations from publishing their own articles and appeals; the duty of the local committees is but to reprint the revelations of the Manuilsky and the Heckerts. Every movement of thought represents a mortal danger for these people. The victory of Hitler is not really a "defeat" for them; it has freed them from all control from below....but now that the strongest party of the Comintern has left the stage there is decidedly no means, no channel and no lever, left by which to act upon the clique that rules the Comintern.

The German Party

B.—Can the German Communist Party be spoken of as the strongest party of the Comintern? You seem to forget the Communist Party of the Soviet Union.

A.—No, I have not forgotten. Even if one recognizes that the C. P. S. U. is a party (in reality, within the administrative cadres of the C. P. S. U., which change according to the will of the clique, several parties are conducting a covert struggle against each other), this party is, in any case, not an active section of the Comintern. The Soviet workers have no idea of what is happening to the proletarian movement in the west: nothing is communicated to them, or still worse they are ignominiously deceived. Within the Political Bureau itself, with its present composition, there is not a single person who knows the life and the tendencies of the workers movement in the capitalist countries.

The slogan of the "reform" of the Comintern was, for us, never a hollow phrase. We counted on reform as on a reality. Developments followed the worst road. That is precisely why we are compelled to declare that the policy of reform is exhausted to the very end.

B.—Is it then possible for us to leave the centrist bureaucracy the banner of the Comintern?

A.—One should not be misled by ambiguous formula. What is understood by a banner? A program? But it is long, since we have rejected the program adopted by the VII Congress as a pernicious admixture of opportunism and adventurism. In the course of several years, basing ourselves on the lessons of events, we counted upon changing the program of the Comintern by internal means. Now this possibility has disappeared at the same time as the possibility of "reform". To the miserable eclectic program of the Comintern, we must oppose our Marxist program.

The First Four Congresses

B.—And the first four congresses of the Comintern?

A.—Naturally, we do not abandon them. All the more so as the Stalinists have long since renounced them and given them over to us. Our program will build up on the foundations established by the first four congresses; it is an irreproachable Marxist foundation, it is our foundation. The lessons of the recent years—only the Left Opposition has translated them into the language of Marxism. Our International Pre-Conference has drawn the balance of these lessons in its eleven points. There is, however, a gap in this balance. The Pre-Conference met on the eve of the decisive examination to which the history submitted the Comintern. The complete and conclusive collapse of the Comintern is not recorded in the decisions of the Pre-Conference. It must be done by the Conference. As far as everything else goes, the decisions of the Pre-Conference retain all their force. The principal documents of the first four congresses plus the "eleven points" of the Left Opposition—these are the fundamental elements of the true program of the Communist International.

B.—The opponents will, in spite of everything, say that we are renouncing the banner of Lenin.

A.—The opponents have been shouting that for some time, and all the more loudly, the more they trample in the mud the heritage of Bolshevism. As for us, we shall say to the workers of the entire world that we are taking upon ourselves the defense of the banner of Marx and of Lenin, the continuation and the development of their work in the intransigent struggle not only against the reformist traitors—that goes without saying—but also against the centrist falsifications of Bolshevism. The usurpers of the banner of Lenin, organizers of the defeats and the capitulations, the corrupters of the proletarian vanguard, the Stalinists.

The C. P. S. U.

B.—Then what is to be done about the C. P. S. U.? What is to be done about the U. S. S. R.? The opponents will not say that we consider as lost the achievements of the workers' state and that we are preparing the armed insurrection against the Soviet Government?

A.—Certainly they will say it. They have been saying it for some time now. What else can they say to justify their ignominious persecutions of the Bolshevik-Leninists? But we are guided not by the clamor of the opponents, but by the actual course of the class struggle. The October Revolution, with the Bolshevik party at its head, created the workers' state. Now the Bolshevik party no longer exists. But the fundamental social content of the October revolution is still alive. The bureaucratic dictatorship, in spite of the technical successes acquired under its reign (against itself), enormously facilitates the possibility of the capitalist restoration. But luckily, the point of a restoration has not yet been reached. With favorable internal, and above all international, conditions, the edifice of the workers' state can be regenerated on the foundations of the Soviet state, without a new revolution. For a long time we have reckoned that we would succeed in reforming the C. P. S. U. itself, and through it the C. P. S. U. in regenerating the Soviet regime. But the present official party now bears much less of a resemblance to a party than two or even one year ago. The party congress has not taken place for more than three years and nobody talks about it. The Stalinist clique is now whitewashing down and reconstructing its "party", as if it were a disciplinary battalion. The aim of the purging and of the expulsions was first of all to disorganize the party, to deprive it of the possibility of thinking and of acting; now the repressions have as their aim to prevent the reorganization of the party. Yet the proletarian party is indispensable if the Soviet state is not to perish. There are many elements for it, but it is only in the struggle against the Stalinist bureaucracy that they can be brought to the surface and united.

To speak now of the reform of the C. P. S. U. would mean to look backward and not forward, to suggest one's own mind with empty formulae. In the U. S. S. R. it is necessary to build a Bolshevik party again.

The Road of Civil War

B.—But isn't that the road of civil war?

A.—The Stalinist bureaucracy conducted the struggle against the Left Opposition even in the period when we were quite sincerely and with conviction for the reform of the C. P. S. U. The arrests, the deportations, the fusillades—what are these if not the civil war, at least in embryo? In the struggle against the Left Opposition, the Stalinist bureaucracy was an instrument of the counter-revolutionary forces and by that fact, it isolated itself from the masses. Now the civil war is placed on the order of the day along another line, between the counter-revolution going over to the offensive, and the Stalinist bureaucracy on the defensive. In the struggle with the counter-revolution the Bolshevik-Leninists will obviously be the left flank of the Soviet front. The fighting bloc in coalition with the Stalinists will flow here from the whole situation. It should not, however, be thought that in this struggle the Stalinist bureaucracy will be unanimous. At the decisive moment, it will break up into fragments and its component elements will meet again in the two opposing camps.

B.—So the civil war is inevitable?

A.—Right at the present moment it is taking place. By maintaining the present course, it can only become more acute. With the further impotence of the Comintern, with the paralysis of the international proletarian vanguard and under the conditions of the inevitable growth of world fascism, the victory of the counter-revolution in the U. S. S. R. would be inevitable. Naturally, the Bolshevik-Leninists will continue their work in the U. S. S. R. regardless of the conditions. But the saving of the workers' state can be effected only by the intermediary of the world revolutionary movement. In all of human history, the objective conditions for the regeneration and its rise have never been so favorable as now. What is lacking is the revolutionary party. The Stalinist clique can rule only by destroying the party, in the U. S. S. R. as in the rest of the world. One can tear himself away from this vicious circle only by breaking with the Stalinist bureaucracy. It is necessary to build a party on a fresh spot, under a clean banner.

Pressure on the Bureaucracy

B.—And how will the revolutionary parties of the capitalist world be able to act upon the Stalinist bureaucracy in the U. S. S. R.?

A.—The whole question lies in the genuine strength. We have seen how the Stalinist bureaucracy crawled before the Kuo Min Tang, before the British trade unions. We have seen how it is crawling now, even before petty bourgeois pacifists. Strong revolutionary parties, truly capable of fighting against imperialism, and consequently of defending the U. S. S. R. will compel the Stalinist bureaucracy to reckon with them. Much more important is the fact that these organizations will acquire an enormous authority in the eyes of the Soviet workers and will thus finally create favorable conditions for the rebirth of a genuine Bolshevik party. It is only on this road that the reform of the Soviet state is possible without a new proletarian revolution.

B.—So then: we abandon the slogan of the reform of the C. P. S. U. and we build up the new party as the instrument for the reform of the Soviet Union.

A.—Perfectly correct.

B.—Is this tremendous task commensurate with our forces?

A.—The question is put erroneously. First of all, it is necessary to formulate clearly and courageously the historical task and then to assemble the forces for its resolution. Certainly we are still weak today, but that does not at all signify that history will grant us a delay. One of the psychological sources of opportunism is the fear of great tasks, that is, the lack of faith in revolutionary possibilities. However, great tasks do not fall from the sky; they emerge from the course of the class struggle. It is in these same conditions that we must seek the forces for the resolution of the great tasks.

Danger of Adventurism

B.—But doesn't the overestimation of one's own forces often lead to adventurism?

A.—That is absolutely correct. It would be pure adventurism if we were to "proclaim" that our present organization is the Communist International or if, under this name, we were to unite ourselves mechanically with the various other opposition organizations. The new International cannot be "proclaimed": it still has to be built. But one can, and one should, from today onward, proclaim the necessity to create a new International.

Ferdinand Lasalle, who was no stranger to opportunism, nor to adventurism, nevertheless expressed the fundamental requirements of revolutionary politics: "Every great action begins by the assertion of what is." Before replying practically to the questions: How is a new International to be built, what methods are to be applied, what delays are to be fixed—it is necessary to assert openly what is. The Comintern is dead for the revolution.

B.—On this point, in your opinion, there can be no longer be any doubts?

A.—Not a shadow. The whole course of the struggle against National Socialism, the conclusion of this struggle and the lessons of this conclusion—equally indicate not only the complete revolutionary absence of the Comintern but also its organic incapacity to learn, to mend its ways, that is, "to reform" itself. The German lesson would not be so crushing and so unimpeachable, if it were not the crowning piece of ten years of the history of centrist blundering, of pernicious errors, of ever more frightful defeats, of increasingly fruitless sacrifices and losses, and, in connection with that, of a complete theoretical debacle.

tion, of a bureaucratic degeneration, of parasitism, of demoralization, of duping the masses, of interrupted falsifications, of the banishment of revolutionists, of the selection of functionaries, mercenaries and pure lackies. The present Comintern is an expensive apparatus for the weakening of the proletarian vanguard. That is all! It is not capable of doing more.

Muenzenberg a Symbol

Wherever the conditions of bourgeois democracy open up a certain space, the Stalinists, thanks to the apparatus and the cash box, simulate a political activity. Muenzenberg has now become a symbolical figure of the Comintern. But who is Muenzenberg? He is an Ousek on the "proletarian" arena. Empty slogans, which engage one to nothing, a little bit of liberalism, a stock exchange of journalists, literary drawing rooms where friendship for the U. S. S. R. has its price, a theatrical hostility towards the reformists, changing easily into a friendship for them (Barbusse) and, what is important, a well-adorned cash box, independent of the working masses,—that is what Muenzenberg is. Living politically on the aims of the bourgeois democracy, the Stalinists still demand of it the crowning point—that is strike down the Bolshevik-Leninists. Can one sink lower?... Yet, let but the bourgeoisie seriously lift the fascist, or the simple police, fist, and Stalinism draws its tail between its legs and retreats docilely into the void. The Comintern in agony can give nothing to the world proletariat, absolutely nothing, save evil.

The Comintern a Brake on the Revolutionary Movement

B.—That the Comintern, as the central apparatus, has become a brake on the revolutionary movement, it is impossible not to acknowledge, just as it must be agreed that a reform of the apparatus, independent of the masses, is absolutely unrealizable. But what about the national sections? Are all of them in the same stage of degeneration and decadence?

A.—After the German catastrophe, we have seen, in Austria as well as in Bulgaria, how the Stalinist parties were liquidated without resistance on the part of the masses. If the situation is more favorable in some countries than in others, the difference, despite everything is not very great. But let us even admit that one section of the Comintern or another is conquered by the Left Opposition: the morning after this fact, if not on the eve, it will be expelled from the Comintern and it will have to seek for itself a new international (something of that sort happened in Chile). Cases of that sort took place also during the appearance of the Third International: thus, the French Socialist Party, transformed itself officially into the Communist Party. But that did not change the general direction of our policy with regard to the Second International.

B.—Don't you think that thousands of "Stalinists" sympathetic to us will move away from us in fright when they learn that we are breaking finally with the Comintern?

The Axis of the New Crystallization

A.—It is possible. It is even absolutely likely. But it is with all the greater decision that they will join with us at the following stage. It must not be forgotten, on the other hand, that in every country there are thousands of revolutionists who have abandoned the official party, or who were expelled from it, and who did not join us in large measure because, in their eyes, we were only a faction of that same party with which they were disgusted. An even greater number of workers are right now separating from reformism and seeking a revolutionary leadership. Finally, in this situation of putrefaction of the Social Democracy and the collapse of Stalinism, a young generation of workers is rising for whom a stainless banner is needed. The Bolshevik-Leninists can and should form the axis of crystallization of all these numerous elements. Then all that is of a living nature in the Stalinist "International" will shake off its last doubts and will join us.

B.—Are you not afraid that the new orientation will encounter an opposition within our own ranks?

A.—In the first stage, it is absolutely inevitable. In many countries, the Left Opposition is linked up by all its work, more than anything else, if not exclusively, to the official party. It has penetrated very little into the trade unions and had hardly interested itself at all in what is happening in the ranks of Social Democracy. It is high time an end were put to narrow propaganda. The turn should be preceded by a broad and serious discussion. It is necessary that each member of our organization reflect to the very bottom of the problem. The events will help: every day will bring irrefutable arguments on the necessity of the new international. I do not doubt that the turn, realized together and with discussion, will open up before us a broad historical perspective. July 20, 1933.

British Lord and Ex-War Minister Leads Stalinist Anti-War Junkie in Shanghai

SHANGHAI—

Long heralded by advance press notices, the delegation sent out by the Paris Committee of the World Congress Against Imperialist War to organize and take part in a Far Eastern Anti-War Congress, arrived in Shanghai on August 18.

In all, five delegates arrived. They are Lord Marley, who was under-secretary for war in the MacDonald government in 1930-1931, and who describes himself as the "independent chairman" of the delegation; Paul Vaillant-Couturier, editor of the French Communist Party organ, L'Humanite; Georges Poupy, member of a Left Socialist grouping in France; Dr. Jean Marleux, Belgian social democrat and deputy-mayor of Brussels; Gerald Hamilton, of the British Committee of the World Congress Against Imperialist War.

The delegation was met and welcomed by Soong Ching-ling, widow of the late Dr. Sun Yat-sen, who has blindly followed Moscow leadership and lent her name, efforts and personal prestige to any cause, short of Communism, which possesses a radical tinge. Thus she figures prominently in the League Against Imperialism and was a prominent sponsor of the short-lived and now defunct China League for Civil Rights, through which she thought it would be possible to unite various "liberal" people to fight against the imprisonment, torture and killing of political prisoners in China, including Communists.

Dr. Sun's widow has still to learn, apparently, that just as fighters for the proletariat of China can be saved, if at all, from the Kuo Min Tang hangmen only by sweeping mass actions of the workers through their own defense organizations and that no hedge-podge league of liberals can substitute for such organizations—so war and the war danger, which are concomitants of capitalism in the imperialist stage and as inseparable from it as the spots from a leopard, can be combatted effectively only by the workers, under Communist leadership, and ended solely by a revolutionary overturn of the system which produces them.

Those who proclaim, or imply, as do the sponsors of the congress to which Lord Marley and his confederates have been sent, that imperialist war can be combatted otherwise than by the revolutionary mass action of the workers, whose task is to convert imperialist war into civil war and an armed struggle for power, are sowing illusions and deceiving the masses. True, the members of the delegation may lip service to the necessity for mass working class action. Even Lord Marley does so, though doubtfully and hesitatingly. But mass action cannot be conjured up by phrases and windy congress speeches made by persons of the Marley stamp, who have no connections with the masses, represent nobody but themselves, and who, most likely, will find adequate reasons for flocking to their respective imperialist colors in a real war crisis.

Motley "Sponsors"

Who are the sponsors of the projected anti-war congress in Shanghai? The same people who brought to birth the Anglo-Russian Committee, the Communist-Kuo Min Tang alliance, the League Against Imperialism, the World Congress Against Imperialist War held last year at Amsterdam and, more recently, the Anti-Fascist Congress at Paris—the centrist managers of the Communist International, headed by Stalin. That the tracks lead unmistakably to Moscow is sufficiently indicated by the presence among the delegates of Vaillant-Couturier, editor of L'Humanite, who certainly would not be here without Stalinist approval. To be sure, he is not a representative of the Communist International or even of the French Communist Party (he would doubtless vigorously repudiate any such charge), but as a representative of the ubiquitous Henri Barbusse—that good novelist made up poor politician by the Moscow epigones.

However, we are already acquainted with this old Stalinist trick. By refraining from having any direct, official representation by the mandarin of the Communist International insures itself in advice the widest degree of inner party democracy. The various groups composing the New Party must be given the freedom to present their views to the party membership. There must be freedom of discussion and the most thorough consideration by the Party as a whole of the problems before the movement.

3. The system of discipline can under no circumstances parallel or be similar to that of the official Communist Party today. The right of the bureaucracy to run on top appointing all the functionaries must be abandoned. The election of officials from the lowest to the highest must be instituted. Leadership must come as a result of worth, ability and approval of the membership. Discipline must be built up on the basis of establishing the authority of the leading organs of the Party. Bureaucratic mechanical discipline, characteristic of the official Communist Party cannot be continued in the New Party.

4. The building of new Communist Parties in the various capitalist countries, based upon the conditions of the respective countries and the needs of the masses assures the building up of a genuine international Communist organization.

5. The New Party can under no circumstances support the present Communist International system of organization. It must oppose the right of an international organization to dominate policies and determine the leadership of its sections as destructive of the best interests of building up an international Communist movement.

6. The New Party must recognize the Soviet Union as a workers state and give it its wholehearted support, however not giving up the right to criticize the policies of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union and its leaders.

This article is written in order to arouse discussion of this important question before the Communist movement. All Communists, sympathizers and revolutionary workers are welcomed to freely discuss this question of a New Communist Party in the columns of the Voice of Labor.

1. The new Communist Party cannot be organized on the basis of the acceptance of the program of any one of the Communist Opposition Groups. It must include all the Communist Opposition forces plus the left forces in the Socialist and Labor movement who are ready to accept the fundamental principles of Communism and categorically reject dual unionism, the theory of the united front from below and the theory of social fascism.

2. The New Party must guarantee to permit them to have complete hegemony, over the Communist movement, is to invite when the historical conditions in the other capitalist countries develop, the same catastrophe, and in many respects, a much worse one, than was suffered by the Communist Party of Germany.

The Workers' Communist League early recognized the need of the Communist Opposition forces getting together for joint action and work in order to find a common ground upon which they could begin to positively rebuild the movement. This was involved in the proposals to the various Communist Opposition groups that they form a bloc. They continue to be lured with the idea that by some turn in events or by some subterfuge they will get back into the official Communist Party and into the Third International. They do not realize that fundamentally the whole system of the Communist International and its official sections is wrong and responsible for the Communist crisis. They fail to recognize unless this system is basically changed there is no hope for the Communist movement extricated itself from its present deplorable state.

I favor the organization of a new Communist Party. I maintain it is absolutely necessary that we now begin the preparations for bringing a new Communist Party into being in the United States. I am of the opinion that the official Communist Party can never regain the confidence of the masses sufficiently to become the instrument of proletarian revolution in the United States. The reasons for this can be presented later in the discussion of the question of the need for a New Communist Party. Today I want to present very briefly and sharply the basis upon which a new Communist Party must be organized. They are as follows:

This was involved in the proposals to the various Communist Opposition groups that they form a bloc. They continue to be lured with the idea that by some turn in events or by some subterfuge they will get back into the official Communist Party and into the Third International. They do not realize that fundamentally the whole system of the Communist International and its official sections is wrong and responsible for the Communist crisis. They fail to recognize unless this system is basically changed there is no hope for the Communist movement extricated itself from its present deplorable state.

I favor the organization of a new Communist Party. I maintain it is absolutely necessary that we now begin the preparations for bringing a new Communist Party into being in the United States. I am of the opinion that the official Communist Party can never regain the confidence of the masses sufficiently to become the instrument of proletarian revolution in the United States. The reasons for this can be presented later in the discussion of the question of the need for a New Communist Party. Today I want to present very briefly and sharply the basis upon which a new Communist Party must be organized. They are as follows:

1. The new Communist Party cannot be organized on the basis of the acceptance of the program of any one of the Communist Opposition Groups. It must include all the Communist Opposition forces plus the left forces in the Socialist and Labor movement who are ready to accept the fundamental principles of Communism and categorically reject dual unionism, the theory of the united front from below and the theory of social fascism.

2. The New Party must guarantee to permit them to have complete hegemony, over the Communist movement, is to invite when the historical conditions in the other capitalist countries develop, the same catastrophe, and in many respects, a much worse one, than was suffered by the Communist Party of Germany.

The Workers' Communist League early recognized the need of the Communist Opposition forces getting together for joint action and work in order to find a common ground upon which they could begin to positively rebuild the movement. This was involved in the proposals to the various Communist Opposition groups that they form a bloc. They continue to be lured with the idea that by some turn in events or by some subterfuge they will get back into the official Communist Party and into the Third International. They do not realize that fundamentally the whole system of the Communist International and its official sections is wrong and responsible for the Communist crisis. They fail to recognize unless this system is basically changed there is no hope for the Communist movement extricated itself from its present deplorable state.

The Boycott of Fascist Germany

The resolution of the A. F. of L. convention for the boycott of German goods, following a similar action by the British Trade Union Congress, undoubtedly raises the issue of the boycott to a higher importance and, at the same time, increases the weight of revisionist influence in the international agitation against Hitlerism. A positive position on the question of the boycott, which is now brought into such prominence, is obviously required of all the various tendencies in the labor movement.

What is especially necessary is preciseness as to the aims of the boycott, its terms and its limitations. Otherwise the slogan lends itself to vague generalities, among no one to anything in particular. That is where the agitation on the question stands now, and that is why the opportunists of all countries are having such a happy time with the slogan. The revolutionary wing of the labor movement ought to call for a showdown on the issue of boycotting Hitler's Germany.

As a demonstrative action on an international scale, designed to show working class solidarity with the hard-pressed German workers and stern protest against their latest torturers, a well-organized international boycott—suspending transport and communication for a definite time—could serve a useful purpose. Such an action, concentrating the force of international labor in a single paralyzing blow, could be a means of lifting up the spirits of the German workers and helping them to their feet again. The German workers, disunited and demoralized by the bankruptcy of all their organizations, and overcome with a sense of isolation and despair, need desperately now the concrete and visible proofs of international class solidarity.

A boycott, a real boycott, such as it is within the power of the international labor movement to enforce for a limited time, could serve as such a demonstration. Therein would lie its principal value. And, in addition, such an action would revive and strengthen the international labor movement by the revelation of power inherent in it.

Of course the A. F. of L. resolution was never intended by its sponsors to lead in such a direction. It is a face-saving gesture, calculated to put them "on record" without committing them to any obligations. The real measure of the Washington decision can be seen in the fact that Furuseth, head of the Seamen's union, voted against the boycott resolution. This passed without comment, as a matter of course. They intend no action against German goods—the passive, voluntary abstentionism of unorganized individuals—is not a real weapon of the struggle against fascism. Such a program has many negative aspects. And it is a harmful substitute for an organized action of the working class.

What is needed is an international, organized mass action which brings all its force to bear on one point at one time. The revolutionary elements in the labor movement ought to pick up the slogan of the boycott and drive the agitation in this direction. The A. F. of L. resolution, which gives the issue an official sanction, can be utilized as a springboard for the agitation in the unions. An international strike against the handling or transport of German goods and communication, as an anti-fascist demonstration for a definitely limited short time, should be the aim. The united front of workers' organizations is required. In such an action, which would blow the breath of life into the boycott, against Hitlerism, the railroad and transport unions would necessarily play a major role. Without their participation the agitation for a boycott is nothing but sound and fury.

Making Fun of International Communism

ONCE again proletarian internationalism, the spectre which haunted exploiters since the manifesto of '48, has become an object of their scornful derision. In 1914 the rulers of Europe, plunging into the desperate hazard of the war, breathed with relief when the Socialist parties, one after another, renounced their international obligations and forgot the oft-repeated pledges of international solidarity. Then they began to laugh. The bourgeois press of the world made fun of the contrast between socialist words and deeds. Now they are regaling themselves again. This time the object of their ridicule is the conduct of the Soviet Government and the Comintern regarding the Fascist assassination of the German labor movement.

It is a common thing nowadays for bourgeois correspondents, pointing to the abandonment of the prostrate working class of Germany, to interpret the Stalin policy of socialism in one country as a renunciation of international revolution. The New York Tribune and the New York Times, both authoritative journals of big capital, discoursed on this theme within the same week. The Times (October 12) jibed at the failure of Moscow, which "had proclaimed solidarity with the Communists all over the world," to "concern itself with the annihilation of the Communist Party of Germany."

The shameful record of the Soviet bureaucrats, who are also the leaders of the Comintern, may well evoke the scornful jests of the international class enemy. And the poorest of all answers is the answer of the Daily Worker to the effect that the Times has fallen under the influence of Trotsky. The true ex-

Hoover and Roosevelt

"There is nothing new under the sun," says the old proverb. Hunger-Hoover goes and NRA-Roosevelt comes and the same boss rule stays—the rule of bigotry, deception and brutal force. Roosevelt, however, knows better how to mix all those ingredients in the proper proportions and doesn't forget to add some NRA flavor to it.

The Chief Engineer of the crisis was against unemployment insurance. He called it "dole," a thing un-American, degrading, humiliating, enslaving and so on. If a hungry, ill-clad and ill-shod "buddy" runs after you and ten others asking for a nickel that's "American," Christian, humane, and, if you planation of the sardonic mirth of the capitalist press lies in the bitter facts.

It is a fact that the Comintern remained silent in the fateful days when everything hung in the balance in Germany, giving no clear word of advice and not even hinting at a demonstration action. The Comintern imposed the policy that led to the defeat and reaffirmed it afterwards. Soviet diplomacy—speaking directly for Hitler's benefit—hastened to give assurance that it would never think of interfering in another country in either a revolution or a counter-revolution. And, most shameful of all, the world has yet to learn of a single demonstration organized within the Soviet Union against the Fascist butchery of the German proletariat.

It is not in the least what the Bolshevik-Leninists, in opposition, have said but what the Stalinists, in power, have done that occasions the gloating merriment of bourgeois journalism over the downfall of internationalism.

But, for all that, they are laughing too soon. Internationalism, after its second historic defeat through false leadership, will rise again and become once more the inspiring and unifying force of the proletariat and the dread spectre of its enemies. Facing the bitter truth in shame and humiliation, but steadfast in the old faith, the true internationalists will work to hasten on that day. This is the greatest work of our time. It must be carried forward under the clean banner of a new International.

The Expulsion of Joe Angelo

ANNOUNCEMENT in the latest issue of the Progressive Miner of the expulsion of Joe Angelo demonstrates more graphically than any other single act how closely the leaders of the P.M.A. have come to the basic policy of Lewis and how basely they have betrayed the confidence which the Illinois miners wisely gave them. The expulsion of Angelo is a symbolic act. It is a demonstration by the despicable imitators of Lewis against militancy, against union democracy, against the deepest impulses of the Illinois miners for an honest, fighting union—against everything, in short, that gave rise to the magnificent rebellion of the miners, their break with the Lewis union and the formation of the P. M. A.

With Percy and Keck, as with Lewis and Farrington, the hounding and expulsion of Communist militants is not an isolated policy. It is bound up in every case with the treacherous game of selling out the interests of the miners and is a necessary part of the preparation for it. By getting rid of the union's conscious and incorruptible militants the misleaders always aim to disorganize the rank and file and rob them of the power of organized resistance to their peridious service to the operators. The Illinois miners, who have risen in such heroic revolt and who have been betrayed so often by false leaders, are being maneuvered into another debacle. The expulsion of Joe Angelo is another warning signal, saltpier, clearer and louder. Let the miners of Illinois be on guard and organize to defend themselves before it is too late!

The Socialist Party After Hillquit

MORRIS HILLQUIT, the deceased leader of the Socialist Party, was a unique figure who leaves no successor. A "European" social democrat on American soil, he was especially adept in dressing up the grossest opportunism in the formal garb of "Marxism." He cast the party in the image of its European contemporaries and made it one of the very worst representatives of this discredited school. The American S. P., shaped under Hillquit's hand, had all the vices of European Social Democracy without its strength in the workers' mass movement. Hillquit's Party imitated the Social Democracy in its period of senile decay without ever having experienced its effectiveness as the organizer of the workers' movement in its period of youth and bloom. The American Socialist Party has been a horrible caricature.

The death of Hillquit upsets the balance of forces inside the Socialist Party and will start a new internal ferment. The pseudo-Marxist "old guard," which lost its head with the demise of Hillquit, will be obliged to yield the hegemony in the leadership to Norman Thomas. Under Thomas the S. P. will present a superficially different appearance. It will be more attractive to bright, "forward-looking" people who want to get somewhere quickly. But the content of its policy will not draw the party nearer to the militant workers. It will not express their impulses and aims. Still less will it lead them toward their historic goal. Where Hillquit robbed the Marxian formulae of their breath of revolutionary life, Thomas dispenses with the formulae altogether. Workers in its ranks who aspire toward a revolutionary fight against capitalism, will find the atmosphere suffocating and unbearable.

The insurgent youth and worker elements, who supported Thomas as a "lesser evil" against Hillquit, will be thrown on their own resources and compelled to formulate their standpoint more precisely. Political issues, which have smoldered in the internal conflict without a clear expression, will break through the struggle of persons and cliques. A new left wing, moving toward Communism, will begin to take shape.

These predictions require no clairvoyant gift. Such developments are implicit in the whole situation of present-day Social Democracy, as is verified by the happenings in all the European parties. The American S. P., under the impact of the great events abroad and the class struggle at home will begin to catch up with the European developments at a faster pace.

appeal to the American people on the "Mobilization for Human Needs." Roosevelt is a greater demagogue than Hoover. He doesn't call federal unemployment insurance the "dole" or other names. He simply avoids mentioning it altogether. Instead he glorifies charity. To him this is the "fundamental basis of American civilization," a thing "essential to the whole American scheme of life."

Notes of the Week

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS AS AN EXAMPLE FOR THE NRA

The leading article of the New York Herald Tribune Sunday Magazine, last week, makes an eloquent plea for "No More Strikes".

"One of the ironies of the day in this country," it says, "is that one of our greatest organized efforts, one which has always been the loudest in the denunciation of war between the nations, is insisting on its own right to use force in settling its difficulties."

And then it goes on to quote William Green on the right to strike. (Another of the ironies of the day, by the way.) The argument runs as follows: The nations (sic) have found that force is wasteful, futile. They have set up a Kellogg Pact and a League of Nations to banish war from their midst. Why can't the workers take an example from that?

There is the NRA. The NRA is concerned with the welfare of the workers as the League is with that of the nations (sic). Why not let NRA replace the strike as the League has replaced war?

Still another of the ironies of the day! Even while those words were being printed, the noble example which the American workers were to follow—received such a dislodging shock that there remains very little to follow. Germany split from the League of Nations with a "bombshell." War talk and war preparations are again seizing a feverish world. A most unfortunate example.

While the example is hardly worthy of pursuit, it does no doubt offer a resemblance. It is a resemblance worth a worker's attention.

Both the League of Nations and the NRA were born out of the despair wrought by wasteful destructive capitalist competition. In the first case, among the various capitalist nations. In the second case, among the different capitalists in the United States. They were both meant to serve as a sort of a regulator of this competition.

When the League was formed, the powerful capitalist United States refused to join. It believed it could contribute to the "welfare of the nations" on the outside, without international control.

When NRA went into effect, the richest single capitalist in the United States, Henry Ford, refused to join. He thought he could contribute to "industrial welfare" on the outside, without national control.

Japan and Germany, two of the major powers, have bolted from the League. How soon will it be before the big capitalists will be bolting from NRA?

Why is the League blowing up? Because it is bound by the very laws of capitalism. Capitalism means ruthless competition. Capitalism is war, war of all against all. Capitalism signifies the perpetuation of the use of force. How could the League help blowing up? How can NRA help blowing up?

The argument is really in favor of the use of the strike. As long as capitalism exists, peace among the nations is insecure. As long as capitalism and wage slavery, the demands of competition and the production for profit exist—just so long must hire and fire, unemployment, insecurity exist for workers. What better way has the worker to gain any measure of security, any degree of protection and improvement than by the collective, organized effort with his fellow workers—by the strike?

In spite of the eloquent plea, in spite of the supplications of the NRA boosters, the workers are continuing to strike. They draw their conclusions from past examples. Some day they will draw a final conclusion. They will learn that there is no way of gaining welfare and of banishing war than by sweeping away the whole capitalist system, with all its camouflage, with its League of Nations and NRA's, with all its reign of force and terror. And they will do that by force. That will constitute one of the ironies of another day.

And speaking of ironies, the greatest of all is perhaps the fact that the "No More Strikes" article in the Herald Tribune is signed by none other than Ida M. Tarbell, the author of the "History of the Standard Oil Company," a crusading muckraker and anti-trust-feller campaigner of a past day....

The Food Workers' Industrial Union and the Split from the A. F. W.

A Horrible Example of Stalinist «Third Period» Trade Union Policies

In 1929 the "third period" policy of Stalinism produced a split away from the Amalgamated Food Workers and the formation of the "red" Food Workers Industrial Union. A series of great strikes took place. Following this, within the newly formed "revolutionary" trade union the bureaucracy began to consolidate itself. By the end of 1930, the situation, after over a year of crisis, of inactivity and stagnation in the FWIU was, as follows: The members were becoming dissatisfied with the leadership, and particularly with the bureaucratic methods of the then general secretary, Sam Weissman. He was brought on the carpet before the party control commission, on charges of drunkenness, irresponsibility, misappropriation of funds, etc. The party could not afford to whitewash him, as it had to cover up its own bureaucratic regime in the union. He was therefore removed, without any explanation to the members as to the reasons for the removal. The then leadership of the Cafeteria Department next proceeded to outline a three-months program of activity, no part of which was ever carried out.

Clique Rule in the Union

With the continued inactivity, the union began to lose both in influence and in numbers. Many of the most militant workers left the FWIU to join the AFL. The dissatisfaction of the workers was further expressed in a series of struggles by the rank and file against the cliqueism of the apparatus.

This was shown sharply, for instance, in the question of the cooperative restaurant. The party functionaries used the jobs in the "coop" as a political weapon, maneuvering so as to throw workers out of their jobs if they disagreed with the leadership, under one pretext or another. This of course only served further to discredit the FWIU.

About this time the cooperative again came on the order of the day in the union and in the fraction, resulting in a bitter fight by the comrades against the cast-iron bureaucratic rule of the party leaders in the union. The struggle began with the Allerton Ave. stores. First a tax of 10% was proposed on the wages of party and non-party members working in the "coop," and this step moreover, was taken without consulting the union. For this Zack, secretary of the FWIU, was responsible. At one meeting he demanded the non-party workers without exception as counter-revolutionaries and enemies of the working class because they refused to obey this decision.

Gagging the Workers

Encouraged by this action of the T.U.U., the bureaucracy did not stop at this point. They were determined to gag the workers into submission, and into mechanical acceptance of orders. The question of the party camps was under discussion in the party fraction. It was there proposed to cut wages. After a discussion of several weeks had resulted in the leading fraction's recommendation, by nearly unanimous vote, of a wage cut proposal of 20%, the party proposed a cut of 40 percent. The 20 percent cut proposal was then brought into the general fraction, against a counter-proposal by the District Camp Committee to consider a cut of 40%. After heated discussion within the fraction, the decision was unanimously rejected and turned back to the party committee. For this, the following night the Central Executive Committee proposed another meeting, in the course of which the writer was demagogically attacked as a "counter-revolutionary Trotskyite" for not consenting to the decision of the C. E. C. Finally a vote was taken adopting the ultimatum decision of the C. E. C. for a 10% wage cut with 14 voting against and many abstaining.

Campaign Against "Trotskyites"

They carried out the decisions of the last convention of the union according to their own interpretation for example: Elbermeyer was made national secretary of the FWIU, an organization which outside of New York existed only in his own portfolio; Kramberg was taken out of the union; Bill, the organizer of the Cafeteria Department, was removed by the famous "open letter" of the T.U.U. and denounced as irresponsible, disloyal and intriguing; while twice removed, today this individual is again an organizer for the union, in spite of the public denunciation in the open letter. The result was that the plan actually was dropped from the activities, because the bureaucratic leadership was not really convinced of the necessity of the task. A number of comrades, including the writer, were expelled from the party, and a campaign of terrorization was instituted inside the union against the "Trotskyites".

The Anti-Soviet Front is Forming

Yet the workers did not take the revived activity seriously, because of their ban experiences of the past. Only ten comrades carried the whole burden of the drive. Therefore the results were rather disappointing. The strike is over, without any explanation having been given even to this day as to why it was lost. The workers still cherish certain illusions as to the strike being reopened after comrades come back from the camps. Not only that, but at a recent meeting of the union Kramberg announced that the strike was settled, that twenty workers would go back to their jobs immediately, and that within three months all the workers would be back on their jobs. This only resulted in disappointment; the strike has not been reopened, no workers have gone back, and the leadership has not a single explanation to give the rank and file. The workers have a special additional right to demand an explanation and an accounting because they were making financial sacrifices in preparation for the drive for 27 weeks straight, and nobody knows yet what has happened to the funds, as not even a financial report was given.

Favoritism in Giving Jobs

One of the worst features of the internal life of the FWIU, and one opposed to the principles of a class-struggle union, is the family cliqueism and favoritism in handing out jobs. For example, in one case a worker had been working steadily for two years, quit his job of his own accord and within a few days had another, while other workers of long standing and active in the union who have been unemployed for months and years, have been discriminated against, and received no jobs. New workers are being induced to come into the union, with the promise of a job, so that they come in, not on the basis of trade union convictions, but looking on the union as an employment agency. The "extra" jobs are being used as a club over the heads of the workers to strengthen the power of the cliques.

All these mistakes and many more flow out of the basic fault of the "third period" theory, with its "revolutionary trade-unions," "united front from below," "social fascism" and other misleading slogans.

Unquestionably there is a great revival of trade-union activity going on now. Throughout the country the workers are looking for organization. The conservative unions are growing by leaps and bounds, while the FWIU stands still or shows insignificant gains. Unless the Left wing workers can break through their present isolation from the masses, the labor fakery of the A. F. of L. will be able to mislead the newly-awakening workers and thus further betray the interests of the working class.

The Split A Fundamental Mistake

The fundamental mistake, flowing out of the "third period" theory, which lies at the bottom of all the other mistakes, was the deliberate split from the A. F. W. in 1929. This was one of the most criminal and stupid examples of Stalinist misleadership, because the Amalgamated is a recognized class-struggle industrial union with considerable prestige and a record of militant activity. In this case there was not even the excuse, as in the A. F. of L. unions, that the trade union fakery were threatening to expel Communists.

The experience of the past years has shown us that the splitting policy was false to the core and must be corrected. With the revival of the Hotel and Restaurant Branch of the Amalgamated to a skeleton organization to a rapidly growing one, at present the Left wing cadres and Communists have a wonderful opportunity to influence a growing mass movement, and build it up as a genuine trade-union so that it can become a mighty force for the New York food workers and encouraged a sound united front policy with respect to the A. F. L.

For these reasons we must say openly that the place for the Left wing workers now is in the A. F. W. Those of them who are now in the FWIU must propose that preparations be made immediately for a merger of the two unions as a first step toward one union for the industry, and for a general organizational drive throughout the hotel, restaurant and cafeteria industry.

banks to titillate Germany. In reply to the accusation, the company makes a denial of the specific charge, but not of the general one. More interesting is its reference to relations with the French government:

"The company does not export war material without government authorization. That regulation is still in effect." The statement of the blood-stained war manufacturers then goes on to accuse those campaigning thus against it, of harming the "peace policy of France".

It is common knowledge in Europe that Hitler has been rearming secretly for some time. It is also common knowledge that the Quai d'Orsay is well aware of this fact. Now the munition manufacturers of France itself indirectly confirm shipment of arms to Germany with government knowledge. The new turn has gone far already.

German-Japanese Plans in Anti-Soviet Front

On top of the above, reports have been abundant of a German-Japanese plan of cooperation. The purpose of it is unmistakable. The documents published recently by the Soviet press from the dossiers of Japanese secret diplomacy are enlightening enough. Now comes a report from Mukden of a loan of $60,000,000 to be made by France to Manchukuo, Japan's outpost for anti-Soviet aggression. "Preliminary negotiations," says the report, "have been concluded between President Hattia of the South Manchurian Railway and Andre d'Olivier, a representative of French capitalists."—N. Y. Times, October 18, 1933.

The Anti-Soviet front is forming

In the face of these developments, the utility and the criminal self-deception of the Stalinist "Non-Aggression Pacts" becomes remarkably obvious. A real defense of the Soviet Union is imperatively necessary. The stupid, quasi-practical policy of the Stalin regime in foreign affairs is due for a collapse. A realistic appraisal of the conditions in the Soviet Union, a corresponding raising of the standards of living of the workers and a strengthening of the alliance between the working class and the peasantry is just as necessary as a reversal of the foreign policy. The Soviet bureaucracy is incapable of accomplishing either one of these tasks. It prepares the road for Thermidorian reaction. That has been shown by the entire past.

The International Workers' Front

The preparation for a resistance on the part of the international working class to the imperialist war plans likewise depends upon a rejection of the policy of the Stalinists. No "Anti-War Congresses" composed of pompous intellectuals, without a stable social basis and impotent because of their individual isolation, will ever serve to weld the proletarian front against imperialist war and attack on workers' Russia. The Einsteins, the Dreisers, the Upton Sinclairs and Sherwood Andersons are already deserting the Stalinist Banner. Only the united front of workers' organization, from top to the bottom can accomplish this task. To achieve this, the Communists must go to the masses, entrench themselves in all organizations in which workers gather en masse.

Both the preparation against attack inside of the Soviet Union as well as against imperialist war in all the capitalist countries demands the support of the line of policy of the Bolshevik-Leninists. Time is short and events are moving fast. The Bolshevik-Leninists must live up to their task.

Bronx Butchers Strike

New York.—The Meat Cutters of the Westchester Meat Market are on strike for the 48 hour work and a raise in wages. They are striking against a work day of from 11 to 18 hours a day. Their wages have been reduced from $48 which they were earning a year and a half ago by three wage cuts to $20 today. They are led by the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butchers' Union affiliated to the A. F. of L. The Bronx branch of the Communist League has offered to contribute its services, speakers, etc., to help the strikers in their fight.

Two of the striking meat cutters, Dave Cohen and Sam Klein were arrested on the picket line on charge by the boss of the market of "disorderly conduct". They were tried and released. The judge had to save the face of the boss who is violating the NRA code. The boss came to court and said he would comply with the code by cutting the Saturday workday from 15 to 12 hours.

GENERAL MEMBERSHIP MEETING

A special general membership meeting of the three New York branches will be held this Sunday, October 22, 1933, at 1 P. M. sharp, in our headquarters at 126 East 10th Street New York. Members of all the branches are required to be present, ON TIME. The subject of the meeting will be the position of the trade unions in the United States today and the policy of the Communist League. The discussion will be led off by comrade J. P. Cannon and there will follow comments from the floor.

N.R.A. Ballyhoo and the Facts Behind It

When Roosevelt spoke over the radio on Sunday, October 22, he evidently had not read the last issue of that most respectable business bulletin, the Annalist. In his speech he declared:

"The whole picture however—the average of the whole territory from coast to coast, the average of the whole population of 120,000,000 people—shows to any person, willing to look, facts and action of which you and I can be proud."

What these facts are the Annalist of Oct. 20, makes very clear. It gives the following record for September: Industrial production—down 7.6%; Retail trade—down 5 percent; Real wages—down 4 percent; and last but not least, Retail prices—up 4 percent. Indeed a picture "to be proud of."

After nonchalantly eliminating a few million unemployed "who preferred not to work at all" Roosevelt continues: "It seems, therefore, fair to say that there were about 10,000,000 of our citizens who were seeking work and could not get it. Of these, I am convinced that at least 4,000,000 have been given employment."

Hooesvelt only added some 400,000 to the A. F. L. figures for non-employment which are by far the most inaccurate of all employment figures. At a time when all other estimates of unemployment ranged from 15 to 17 millions the A. F. L. figures were only 13 million. "The A. F. L. reports 871,000 reemployed in September," the Annalist reports. 86% reemployed which amounts to 400,000 people.

But does Roosevelt want to be accurate? The answer is clear—why should he be accurate? Hooesvelt knows very well what is happening. He knows that, as the Annalist states, 40% of the March to July spurt was lost by the end of September, and that by this time more has been lost. He knows that all real indicators of business activity with the exception of zinc production, including steel, pig iron, electric power production, cotton, wool and silk consumption, auto, lumber and cement production, have gone down since the end of July. He knows that the Annalist's index of General Business Activity was 89.5 for July and only 76.9 for August. Roosevelt knows all this. But it is not to his interest to admit that the much-boasted N. R. A. recovery is a flop.

Hail the Movement for a New Party and the Fourth International!

A great event in the history of the revolutionary movement in America will be the banquet to celebrate the fifth year of the Militant, the fifth birthday of the Communist League—and to hail the coming of the Fourth International.

Present at this banquet will be outstanding celebrities in Communist and labor ranks in the United States. Among those attending will be Ben Gitlow, Secretary of the Workers Communist League and one of the founders of the American Communist party; V. F. Calverton, editor of the Modern Monthly; Ernest Sutherland Bates, noted radical publicist; Ed Lindgren, prominent figure in the early days of the Left wing movement in support of the Russian revolution; Diego Rivera, the famous artist; and others. For the first time in years, representatives of different sections of the workers' movement will sit at one banquet table and take part in the festivities. Besides addresses from the comrades mentioned above, it will be an evening of gala entertainment. A new revolutionary skit will be performed for the first time at the banquet, by some of our star revolutionary actors.

Last but not least in mention is the delicious food to be served to the comrades and friends attending. The banquet will take place Saturday, November 4th at 8 P. M. at Stuyvesant Casino, 9th St. and Second Avenue. Make sure to get tickets for yourself and your friends. They are 50 cents a plate. Dirt cheap!

Be on hand for this great gala event to celebrate the anniversary of the Militant, the Communist League of America and to hail the Fourth International!

Terzani Accuser Faces Trial

New York City. — District Attorney Charles S. Cullen of Queens County has failed to keep his promise to conduct a new inquiry into the killing of Anthony Fierro, young anti-Fascist slain at a meeting of the Fascist Khaki Shirts, the Terzani Defense Committee charged today.

Commander Smith of the Khaki Shirts was recently held in $400 bail for the grand jury in Philadelphia, on a charge of fraudulent conversion of furniture. He had fled from his headquarters early on Oct. 12, after members of his general staff had mutinied against him, suddenly announced plan to "take over the city" and seize three armories preliminary to a march on Washington scheduled for that day. For four days Smith was missing. Then he came back, surrendered, got bail, and audaciously announced that he would re-establish his organization and push on with his Fascist program. He asserted that he had been plotted against by the police and the radicals.

Of the thousands employed at Republic Steel, the chippers represent about two hundred. The leaders of the union saw hundreds of thousands of workers on strike throughout the country, steel workers battling valiantly in Ambridge and Weirton, and decided that conditions had been made to order for them. The local leaders immediately called a meeting of the laid-off men, about seventy in number, and this so-called perfect union decided to pull a strike. For the rank and file to make such a mistake was excusable, but the leadership allowed itself to be carried away by the blind enthusiasm of the workers and endorsed the adventure. As some of the employed chippers were even called for a joint meeting with their fellow-workers, the SMWU got precisely what they wanted—a hundred percent strike of the unemployed chippers. It is undoubtedly more than a coincidence that identically this tactic was being repeated at the same time in the Buffalo plant of Republic steel.

Although the overwhelming majority of the Youngstown steel workers have never been in the union, even they could see something wrong. The "strike" was obviously doomed to failure from the start. The union got out leaflets with the hopelessly vague demand. Make the bosses keep their promise to equalize work. The leaflets were so worded that they gave the impression that the employed Buffalo plant had walked out. Workers took the leaflets, laughed at them, tore them up and went back to work. Even the local bosses and their propaganda sheets after the first momentary panic, were able to laugh it off. So it was no wonder that the strikers themselves became aware of the farcical role they were playing and called off the strike the next day.

Stalinist Policy Isolates Militants

The lessons to be drawn from this incident are quite apparent. The class conscious militant workers, forced by the criminal policy of the SMWU to remain isolated from the working class, are further than ever away from the masses. The workers in the mills, insofar as they were organizing, are almost all going into the Amalgamated Association unless a fighting Left wing is speedily formed in the American Federation of Labor union, these workers will be left completely at the mercy of Mike Tighe and his crew of labor skates. Thus the vicious tactic of the Communist party and its false-face, the SMWU, in the long run play directly into the hands of the A. F. of L. bureaucrats.

Silk Dyers Vote for Separate Agreement

Paterosi, N. J.

The great odds fought against by the embattled silk workers have been greatly increased by the split in the ranks occasioned by the vote of the dye house workers under the U. T. W. to accept the agreement and return to work. The fifteen thousand workers in the dye houses are taking up their places at the tubs after a seven weeks strike under a contract offering concessions in wages and union recognition.

Under the separate agreement the dyers have obtained union recognition for their organization, the United Textile Workers, from the powerful Institute of Dyers and Printers, the manufacturers association. They have been granted a minimum wage of $23 which constitutes an increase of from five to seven dollars over what they had been receiving prior to the strike. The closed shop was not obtained but the employers have agreed, according to the contract, to deal with the union shop committees over grievances, hiring, etc.

Vote Not Unanimous

The vote for the agreement was neither unanimous nor did it include the majority of the dye workers, although a decisive section participated. The sentiment of the dye workers cannot be judged accurately by the outcome of the vote because the majority of the dyers did not vote and because of the peculiar ballot they were asked to cast. They were asked to vote on the following questions: "Do you favor acceptance of the settlement terms?" 3,311 voted for acceptance and 1,422 voted against. The second question, which undoubtedly appeared to be a contradiction to the workers was: "Do you want to stay out until the weavers return?" 1,913 declared for staying out with the weavers and 2,339 for returning to the job immediately.

The large size of this minority vote is highly symptomatic of the confusion and doubt in the minds of the dyers, inexperienced in union affairs and taken in by the trick method of posing the question. The dyers were faced with a dilemma. The agreement gave them certain concessions—wages, recognition, etc.—and consequently there was some sentiment for its acceptance. But the question must have no doubt cropped up: "If we have an agreement, and the agreement is favorable, then why not return to work; why wait for the weavers who may be out for a long time yet?"

The Separation of the Dyers

The question of a national strike settlement and of the dependence of one section of the silk industry upon another was never made clear to the dyers. They did not perceive the heavy blow they were dealing the weavers by returning to work. They had not years of experience and a tradition of many strikes to make them aware of this elementary lesson of solidarity. The isolation of the dyers into a separate union had awakened craft consciousness. Only vaguely did they feel themselves part of the strike led by the American Federation of Silk Workers.

On the other hand the dye workers were handicapped by bad leadership. Leading their section of the strike, were two old-line politicians, Vigorito and Pirola, self-seeking, out for votes. The dyers' interests were secondary to their own careerist ambitions. Besides these two shady figures was the cunning and fakery of McMahon through his agent, Pat Quinlan. A conscious Left wing was not present in the dyers' local. Except if one, by a stretch of the imagination could consider Jack Rubenstein of the Lovestonites in that category. But Rubenstein failed to take a clear position on most of the questions facing the dyers. Where he should have been strong and uncompromising he was weak and conciliatory. He took no definite position before the dyers on the question of breaking the ranks of the strike and accepting the separate agreement. The policy of the Lovestonites of pussyfooting before the A. F. of L. skates had disastrous consequences here as it has had in every case.

Disruptive Role of N. T. W.

If the dyers were misguided by the reactionaries they were confused and demoralized by the disruptive policy of the National Textile Workers Union. At the outset the Stalinists divided the dyers into two unions. They continued with baseless recrimination. When they felt the ground was slipping under their feet the Stalinists began to pack the meetings of the U. T. W. dyers with disruption as their aim. They succeeded in winning over two "dyers" on their sincere proposals for united action—the old-line politicians, Vigorito and Pirola.

Gangster Attack on Chicago League Meet

Stalinist Hoodlums Repulsed as Swaback Speaks for New Party and New International

Chicago.—An organized attempt by 150 Stalinists to break up the meeting called by the Chicago branch of the Communist League of America (Left Opposition), for comrade Arne Swaback, last Sunday, on the subject of the new party and the new International, was prevented by the quickly assembled defense of all workers in the audience.

Meeting in response to instructions from the District Committee of Chicago at Folks Haus, a party headquarters, the party members marched en masse to the Opposition meeting with the aim of breaking it up. They entered the Opposition headquarters in a body, leaving a "picket line" outside of the hall to tell workers that the meeting was either called off, or had been removed to another quarter. Even this pitiful tactic did not succeed in keeping workers from the meeting.

Hooligan Tactics Repulsed

No sooner did comrade Grotzer open the meeting, when the hooligan and gangster tactics began. In a rehearsed fashion the Stalinists raised the cry of electing a chairman from the floor. Refusing to recognize the frenzied outburst, the chairman announced that the procedure of the meeting was so planned that representatives of every point of view in the workers movement would be given an opportunity to state their views from the floor. This apparently was unsatisfactory to the Stalinists who were determined either to "take over" the meeting or prevent its continuance. Even after being assured that they would be given sufficient time to present their views they still insisted on electing a chairman from the floor (at a meeting organized and called by the Opposition). They would not permit the meeting to go on and began stamping, shouting, and organizing their own meeting by setting up the petty section bureau, Jack Spiegel, to start speaking from one of the benches in the hall.

In the turmoil and over the protests of the workers in the hall, the Stalinists began to employ their strongarm tactics. Incited by their leaders, the rank and file party members began a struggle to seize the meeting, only to be deserted by their bureaucratic leaders, who, during the course of the fight, had left the hall. The fight subsided after the Stalinists were repulsed and they returned one by one to their seats agreeing to a compromise! They were willing to allow the Left Opposition to run its own meeting provided the Party were given ample opportunity to present its own views to the meeting!

It became quite clear to all the workers at this turn-about face that their real purpose had been to break up the meeting. They failed in this and then agreed to accept the terms announced in the very beginning by the chairman, comrade Grotzer.

Meeting Hears Swaback

Comrade Swaback spoke for over an hour, tracing the events prior to the victory of Hitler in Germany and the situation following the triumph of Fascism. He showed the effects of this horrible defeat of the German working class upon the world movement of the proletariat. The victory of Hitler meant the destruction of the strongest Communist Party in the capitalist world and led to a weakening of the position of the Soviet Union. The victory of Fascism, he showed, only increased the danger of war and this was due entirely to the false policies of the Comintern in Germany.

Swaback pointed out that any hopes for a change in the policies of the C. I., were out of the question, when, after the German events, the Stalinists failed to understand the first lessons of the great defeat of the world proletariat. Instead, they only emphasized the errors made, promising to repeat them again under the same conditions. In such circumstances it was hopeless to think that you could once again push the C. I. onto an internationalist revolutionary path. It was necessary now to reorganize the ranks of the genuine revolutionary internationalists into a fighting revolutionary international as against national socialism, no matter what its form may be.

Stalinist Explains German "Victory"

Swaback was followed by Spiegel of the Party who entered into a lengthy diatribe against the Opposition, and only emphasized how correct Swaback was in his evaluation of the present situation in the world movement of the proletariat. He denied that the workers had suffered a defeat and "proved" that the German Party, under the heel of Fascism was stronger and more active than it was under legality. He denied that it was possible to carry on a struggle prior to Hitler's ascent, but proclaimed that now the revolution was on the order of the day. Following his speech he called upon his followers to leave the hall.

Despite the upheavals of the afternoon and the Party "picket line", over 150 workers remained to the end of the meeting. Hackman, representing the point of view of the Lovestonite group, and Matlick of the United Workers Party also spoke.

The Hooligans Depart

The Stalinist hooligans, after inciting a fight, emptying a collection hat, and urinating in a back room of the hall, felt that they had truly struck death-blows against the capitalist system. After this profound revolutionary activity, following their dastardly gangster attack upon the Opposition meeting, they left the hall singing "Solidarity".

It is quite clear, that this attack upon the meeting of the Opposition was inspired and organized by the Party leadership. This hooligan tactic, the method of gangsterism, is the expression of an alien class influence and must be beaten back in the workers movement. This little attempt at "massacre" by the local Stalinists will not be forgotten by the Chicago workers and can only defeat the aims of the Stalinist bureaucrats.

Bellusi Case Needs the Support of Workers

Philadelphia.—For the past few months Antonio Bellusi, a militant Italian worker, has been held in the Gloucester Immigration Station awaiting deportation.

He has been in the labor movement ever since 1918. He was a member of the Italian Socialist Party and later joined the Italian C. P. In 1924 he took a ship and came to the United States, where he immediately became a member of the C. P. U. S. A. from which he was later expelled for protesting against the expulsion of Bordiga, from the Italian C. P.

Antonio Bellusi was arrested in July of this year in Wilkes-Barre on the charge of distributing the Militant. His home was raided and books were found which gave documentary proof that this worker has been an active fighter, for 15 years, in behalf of the toiling masses.

The only thing that the I. L. D. has done so far is to assign Errol White to defend him (legally). They have not mobilized their membership. As a matter of fact the lawyer had to spend his own money to go to Wilkes-Barre to defend this worker. Although this worker is not a member of any political party his sympathies are with the International Left Opposition. If for no other reason than this the I. L. D. would be "justified" in sabotaging his defense.

A committee against deportation was to be formed, on which Lou Roberts was the representative of the Phila. branch. The committee never met due to no fault of ours. Comrade Roberts time and again, kept on hammering away, but the Stalinist sabotaging machine could not be budged.

Indoor mass meetings were arranged for September 1, 4, 15, but they were all called off. Seeing we could not expect much from the I. L. D. we called an open air meeting at 13th and Reed. We asked for an Italian speaker. Again the sabotaging machine of the Stalinists was in evidence. Had we not gone over the head of Stern (the I. L. D. L. O.) and gone directly to the Sacco and Vanzetti branch of the I. L. D. where we succeeded in getting comrade Neill to address the crowd, the request would have remained on the I. L. D. desk.

On September 29 a mass meeting had been arranged without Roberts being informed. When we learned of this we offered our support. Again the meeting was postponed.

Not knowing that the I. L. D. had already arranged a mass meeting on October 24 (we heard of this indirectly), we arranged one for October 28. At our branch meeting a committee was elected to ask the I. L. D. to participate. When we heard that the I. L. D. had arranged a meeting we agreed to call off our meeting in order to have a joint one. We offered to pay either for the rent of the hall or for the leaflets. Stern (in the name of the I. L. D. District Bureau) rejected this offer.

A committee of three will again approach the I. L. D. District Bureau which meets Friday, October 28. It appears that we will have to carry on the defense of Antonio Bellusi independently of the I. L. D. for they have been a deadweight in so far as organizing any kind of mass defense is concerned.

The Painters General Strike

The debacle of the Brownsville section of the Alternation Painters Union in the strike is a bitter lesson about Stalinist trade union tactics. The strike, which was called in competition with the Brotherhood, Local 102 of the A. F. of L., ended in an ignominious and crushing defeat for the Stalinists, and the loss of whatever influence they had in trade. They refused our proposal (Kitt) for one general strike, and for entry into the A. F. of L. They sought to make capital out of the situation among the painters and build their "revolutionary" union. What is worse, they refused the offer to take them into the Brotherhood.

What were the results? During the first week or so the Union pulled down about 300 workers, and settled a number of shops. Negotiations were carried on with the Bosses' Association and the party leaders managed to keep the painters inspired by constantly reminding them of this and by continually making glowing promises of victory.

However, within a short time the absence of a Left wing within the Brotherhood, coupled with the fact that it controlled the majority of the workers in the trade, made itself felt. Shop after shop that had settled with the A. P. U. was taken over by the Brotherhood. Either the workers were terrorized into joining Local 102 by the A. F. of L. gangsters or coerced into it by the bosses, who signed separate agreements with the Brotherhood. Wherever the painters refused, the A. F. of L. placed pickets outside the building. The Stalinists met this move by beating up the pickets, who were rank and file Brotherhood men and had been ordered to picket by their officials.

The stupid blunder, in the train of countless others, played directly into the hands of the business agent or Local 102, Jake the "Bum". First, they had refused the offer of the Brotherhood to establish one union in the trade, which branded them as splitters so far as the rank and file of the A. F. of L. was concerned. Then they copied a leaf from the reformists and slugged the workers-pickets. To the rank and file of the Brotherhood it was clear that the Alternation Painters Union was out to smash their organization. In alarm they gave Jake the "Bum" a clean bill of health, to do as he pleased; not that he needed it. But the tragedy of it is that the Stalinists by their insane policies appeared to put this gangster in the right.

Within a day or two, flying squads of A. F. of L. gangsters paid "visits" to most of the APU shops they had not as yet succeeded in taking over. And after the "visit" these shops too were in the Brotherhood. Among those that transferred allegiance was the Grossman, one of the key shops in the industry. The Beckenstein and Minkoff shops are about to sign (and by the time this goes to press, will undoubtedly be members of Local 102). When the Bosses Association affixed its signature to an A. F. of L. contract, both the general strike and the Alternation Painters Union were through.

Yet, despite this, the party bureaucrats (Nessin, Kashinsky, Weitz) still maintain they have a union and are trying to inspire the party fraction to continue their futile efforts to build the APU. Were they to do something else than make speeches and sit in the office they might perhaps feel differently about it. As far as the party members are concerned, they received aid from neither the City Council or the rank and file of the union—and they feel quite different about the matter. Most of the party fraction avoid the union headquarters as if a pestilence had swept through there. Jack Krasnits, Reimann, Spielman and Friedlander, the outstanding party militants in the union, have seen their unflagging efforts to build a union go for naught—and they are beginning to question the soundness of the party communiques. Indeed, Spielman, has openly been advocating entrance of the Left wing into the A. F. of L. Experience is a costly teacher—but a good one. Not forever can the Stalinists blind the eyes of the party members.

Statement on N. Y. Elections

The workers of New York are once more confronted with a municipal election. This time the contest takes on particular importance by the fact that it is the first important election to be held in the United States since the promulgation of the National Recovery Act and the rest of the crisis-ridden capitalist structure. It is the first opportunity that any large group sentiments on the parliamentary field towards the "recovery" program. Consequently the local election in this city has a country-wide significance.

Those workers, therefore, who are conscious of their position and their interests, will have to act in the elections with these facts in mind.

The outstanding problem before the workers of New York and the rest of the country, which over shadows all else, remains what it has been now for four years: the unprecedented crisis which has shaken the economic structure of the land to the bottom, which has thrown millions of workers out of their jobs, and stricken the majority of the working class population to one degree or another with misery, hunger, homelessness, and suffering which, under capitalism alone, systematically occurs in the midst of vast wealth and plenty.

The National Recovery Act, and all the extensive machinery asso-

Rousing Swaback Meeting at Toronto Hails New International

Toronto.—The first great stride along the path towards a new Party and a new International was taken in Toronto on Tuesday, October 11th when about 700 workers gathered in the Labor Lyceum to hear comrade Arne Swaback proclaim the new turn. It was not only a large meeting but a historic one. On the platform were three comrades who embody the best traditions of the revolutionary movement in North America. With comrade Swaback were comrades Jack MacDonald and Maurice Spector—three comrades who had been among the original organizers of the Communist parties in the U. S. and Canada, comrades who had been together in Moscow in 1922 at the Fourth Congress of the C. I. They had all passed through the bitter struggles against Trotskyism in the party and later had taken their places under the banner of the International Left Opposition in order to uphold the traditions and principles of Marx, Lenin and Trotsky. On Tuesday night, the three comrades met again on the same platform, this time in a new effort—to proclaim the necessity of creating a new Communist party and a new International.

New Conditions and New Problems
Comrade Swaback prefaced his talk with a few remarks concerning the all-pervasive phenomenon of change and motion. "Nothing in this world stands still," he said, "all matter is ever subject to the processes of change and motion. And so it is in the labor movement. Time creates new conditions and new situations and the working class, must prepare itself, must arm itself with the policies and tactics suitable to each occasion." He then sketched the history of the First and Second Internationals showing how in each instance the abandonment of revolutionary principles had brought disaster to the working class, compelling the true Marxists to begin the building of a new revolutionary front-head. Comrade Swaback stressed the fact that at these great historical milestones, not numbers, but political clarity was decisive. The decision to create the Third International was first propagated by only a handful of revolutionaries but so powerful were their ideas that in 1917, guided by the genius of Lenin, they were able to lead the masses to the victorious October revolution. The Communist International was built upon solid Marxian foundations and, during its first four congresses, it hammered out the strategy and tactics of the world revolution. Revolutionary internationalism was its watch-word. The C. I. existed for the world proletariat and every discussion, whether it was on the internal life of the Soviet Union or the revolutionary movement in the capitalist world, was based upon that concept. Under Lenin and Trotsky, the C. I. was indeed the organizer of the world revolution.

The Work of the Stalin Clique
"But now," said comrade Swaback, "that is no longer true. The past ten years have witnessed the growth in the Soviet Union of a bureaucratic clique under the leadership of Josef Stalin, a clique which has stamped out every vestige of party democracy, which has turned the party into the lifeless and passive instrument of the top leaders. Marxism and Leninism have been replaced by the necessity of building up the personal prestige of Stalin. Revolutionary internationalism has been replaced by the pernicious theory of socialism in one country. In the face of world shaking events, the Com-

Anti-Fascist United Front in Montreal

Montreal.—A few weeks ago a series of attacks of the fascists upon workers' organizations aroused the working class of Montreal to a high pitch of excitement and alarm. Following upon an attack against a synagogue a most unique committee was formed for defense against Fascism. On the one side of the table and on the other side there sat... Reichel, a leader of the Revisionist Zionists, the Jewish fascists. (These Revisionists in Palestine are organized in strike-breaking bands, carrying on a terrorism against the Jewish labour movement quite after the fashion of the Nazis).

The writer had the pleasure of being present at the touching scene that took place. Comrade Reichel (so Baker and Rose addressed him) conferred with com. Baker. ("Mr. Trotsky you see—but com. Reichel). Far be it from us to hide the fact Reichel was against organizing an Anti-Fascist Conference in principle—his heart was set on Jewish self-defence corps. This United Front with the Jewish Fascists against Fascism was shattered on the rocks of the principled crusade... of the Revisionists. Even before the beginning of the burlesque just recounted the Montreal branch of the Left Opposition had proceeded with the formation of a provisional committee for the calling of a working-class united front against Fascism. When we learned that the Verdun Workers' Association had already issued an appeal for a United Front Conference against Fascism, we exerted our influence to bring workers' organizations to it. Even before the first meeting of the latter our comrades visited trade unions and obtained their support for the Anti-Fascist United Front.

At the same time we issued a leaflet in English and in French addressed to the delegates of the conference outlining our proposals for the program and basis of the Conference. We stressed the necessity of forming a proletarian United Front and not one with the Jewish bourgeoisie or fascists, the necessity of broadening it out to include all workers' organizations, the freedom of criticism, the organization of city wide centralized defence corps to defend all workers' meetings, the organization of mass meetings and mass demonstrations in order to draw in the whole working-class organized and unorganized and weld it into one mighty front against Fascism, the issuing of elementary literature in French to clarify the backward workers in the Chateaufort organizations on the true nature of Fascism.

We came to the conference with a carefully elaborated list of constructive proposals for acceptance by the delegates. The Stalinists appeared on the scene with either word of guidance. It remains criminally silent. Of the Communist International that was formed under Lenin and Trotsky, nothing remains today but a hollow shell.

"For ten years," said comrade Swaback, "the Left Opposition has existed as a faction of the C. I., hoping to reform the Comintern, striving to bring it back to Leninism. Through our efforts have not been without effect, the Stalinized Comintern has gone from bad to worse, has been responsible for one international defeat after another. You will ask, 'Why did we not proclaim the new international long ago?' Before that could be done, events themselves had to prove to the workers that the Comintern was bankrupt. These events have taken place, events that may be indicated by a single word—Germany, Fascism."

Comrade Swaback then described the tragic defeat of the German working class, the causes of the defeat—the treacherous role of the Social Democracy, the failure and refusal of the C. P. G. to rally the workers in a united front against the fascists, the absence of revolutionary leadership. "We do not expect revolutionary leadership from the reformists," said Arne Swaback, "but we expect it and have the right to demand it of the Communist Party. And that is why we lay the chief responsibility for the German defeat at its door. Stalinism is dead, the Comintern does not exist. A new International must be built to lead the workers of the world to emancipation."

Toward the New International
Comrade Swaback was careful to point out that we are not proclaiming the new International now. We are merely urging the necessity of creating it. For the immediate future, the Left Opposition is inviting Left wing groups to engage in an open discussion of programs and perspectives. The Left Opposition, standing on the shoulders of Marx, Engels and Lenin appears before the world proletariat with a program of revolutionary internationalism, a program which looks toward the establishment of the proletarian dictatorship on a world scale as the necessary transitional step to socialism.

When comrade Swaback finished his talk, he was greeted with loud applause, an indication that his message had fallen on responsive ears. In the question period which followed, he entered into a discussion of how the new International was to be created and answered several questions concerning the trade union policy of the Left Opposition.

Speech of MacDonald
Before the meeting ended, comrade MacDonald and Spector addressed the large gathering. Comrade MacDonald, speaking with the dignity of a tried revolutionary, polemized against the Stalinist abandonment of Marxism, against the exile of Trotsky and Rakovsky national socialism of Stalin. Comintern and against the reactionary national socialism of Stalin. "Let us not forget, he said, that not one of those who signed the call to the first congress of the C. I. is in a leading position in the Comintern today. Lenin and Platten are dead, Trotsky is in exile, Rakovsky (as far as we know) is in Siberia and Zinoviev, after several disgraceful capitulations, now licks the heels of Stalin. Let us not forget the German defeat of 1923, let us not forget the disgraceful role of the Stalinist regime in the Anglo-Russian Trade Union Committee in 1926, let us not forget the tragic blunder of Stalinism in the Chinese revolution, let us not forget the overwhelming defeat of the German proletariat in 1933, and let us not forget, that despite everything that has happened in the past five years, there has not been a congress of the Comintern since 1928. These are facts that have burned a deep impression in the minds of the working class, these are facts we cannot forget."

Speech of Spector
Comrade Spector then took the floor. If there had been any doubts up to that moment, they now vanished into thin air. In that short space of 15 minutes, comrade Spector, putting forth a great agitational effort, recalled the highlights of the earlier speeches, branded Stalinism the greatest international organizer of defeat, exoriated Stalinism for its failure to create an organized resistance against Fascism in Germany and hailed the new turn as the rebirth of the revolutionary working class movement. "If the Stalinist bureaucracy has been able to learn nothing from the German events it is capable of learning nothing."

In Canada, faced with a growing social democratic movement, the C. C. F., the Stalinists were politically impotent. "But we will go forward to the creation of a new Party. The workers will learn who are the slanderers and who are their true leaders. MacDonald and Spector are the same revolutionaries who helped to create the C. P. of Canada almost 15 years ago. We have revised nothing, we have changed nothing. It is the Stalinists who have revised Marx and Lenin, it is they who have moved away from the path of revolutionary Marxism. We appeal to every honest worker, to every honest rank and file among the Stalinists to consider carefully the message we have delivered tonight, to join with us in the creation of a revolutionary party, that when the revolutionary crisis arrives, in Canada we'll be able to rally the majority of the working class on the side of the proletarian revolution."

The applause which marked the close of comrade Spector's speech was an indication of the sympathy with which the workers received the declaration for a new International. The absence of criticism from the many members of Stalinist and other political organizations gave evidence that before long the Left Opposition will receive under its banners many who find themselves in other organizations.

San Francisco.—For 14 years the San Francisco Longshoremen have been dominated by a company union of the most open form under which the rank and file have had no voice in the formation of wage and working agreements. Our conditions in all these years have continually grown worse. Wage cuts were imposed and larger tasks were added to our life, until we are worked into complete exhaustion in performing our daily work. Even those working rules formed by the shipowners and stevedore companies were never lived up to when the interest of these companies was involved. So that the longshoremen were the only ones to lose at all times. Any member attempting to voice a protest against any of these injustices was thrown out of his job. Here, as in other parts of the country, there was a large percentage of unemployed; the union officials used this as a club over our heads with great success.

The C. P. On the Waterfront
This situation was finally sized up by the Communist Party a year or so ago, and they attempted with their best forces to organize the waterfront workers. The first appearance of these so-called labor organizers was the attempt to sell the Western Worker, the writer of this article, having always owned a very keen interest in labor organizations, watched every move, hoping, against his better judgment, for a success. The Western Worker did not appeal to the waterfront workers and very few copies were sold.

The second attempt was made with street speakers. In course of time we had several of those speakers appearing early in the mornings. But to my total disappointment none of those speakers was familiar with our miserable conditions; not one of them could speak the language of a longshoreman. Most of these speakers, perhaps in a side line, mentioned the company union and the destruction of the workers' life. The main subject always drifted toward China, Soviet Russia or such other distant subjects. Participation in these meetings was very scant at all times, and no progress whatsoever was made toward organization.

Marine Workers' Industrial Union
The Marine Workers' Industrial Union had a hall across the street from the company union hall for several years. Perhaps a few individuals dropped in some days, I visited there sometimes, but failed to see any longshoremen there at any time. Also in the hunger and unemployed parades and anti-war and mooning demonstrations on the waterfront no longshoremen participated. The writer knows almost every one of the three to four thousand workers on 'Frisco waterfront, so no mistake in this statement is made.

The third attempt of the Party was the issuance of a monthly publication called the Waterfront Worker, dealing directly with our situation on the waterfront and exposing some of the foremen and individuals. This was the most successful attempt made by the C. P. and every one bought a copy of this paper every month. This paper also contained articles of instructions for the formation of a real union.

Formation of A. F. of L. Union
In the existence of about eight months no progress was made for organization. Finally the doors of the MWIU were closed on account of no support and funds for rent. Around June of this year a couple of longshoremen, both ex-I. W. W. members, started collecting names for the formation of an A. F. of L. union. Neither of these men owned any organizational or oratorical gifts, but they could speak the language of the waterfront. They also took advantage of the NRA labor code. In a very short period they succeeded in signing up about 90% of the workers on the waterfront. This threw the C. P. organizers into complete confusion. Every one of the C. P. comrades made some snark talk now, after we, the C. P. members have prepared the ground already for organizing the workers with the publication of this Waterfront Worker for several months, these A. F. of L. men are stealing the show away from us. We must act at once in order to convince the workers that this same A. F. of L. is a fake labor organization. And that the MWIU is the only revolutionary union that knows how to organize and conduct a real workers' organization.

Revolt Against Stalinism in California Party
A revolt in the ranks of the Stalinist party in Oakland has been signaled by the expulsion of comrade Stanley D. Laycock and the statement protesting against his expulsion by six additional party members. That the revolt against the strangulating bureaucracy and stupid policies of the party bosses has a positive side is shown in the fact that two new branches of the Communist League have been formed recently in the bay section.

The statements of the expelled comrades follow:
STATEMENT OF A. ROBBINS
To All Party Members
In District 13
Dear Comrades:

Disregarding the questions which I have asked, and neglecting to reply to the views I have expressed pertaining to the developments in the Communist International and in the world situation, comrade Lambert, section organizer, demanded from me a categorical repudiation of these utterances by demanding a statement of allegiance to the C. I. or else the forfeiture of my right to membership in the Communist Party. Such a procedure is a flagrant violation of Bolshevik-Leninist democratic centralism and stifles all criticism, which is indispensable to the existence and growth of a Communist Party. By not allowing me to attend my unit meeting and depriving me of all rights as a party member, the bureaucrats are trying to conceal my actual expulsion from the party. Not a word has been expressed or written by the party regarding my status and now I ask, "Why this silence?"

The following reasons which I have expressed explain my secret expulsion from the party:
1. I opposed the expulsion of the best, true, tried and sincere proletarian elements in the party and condemn their framed-up expulsion on false charges.

2. Comrade Gordon was sent to Monterey as section organizer when his disruptive work in Oakland had discredited him there in the eyes of the membership and this did not warrant his continuance in the role of a functionary in the party.

3. That at the convention of district No. 13, held June 1932, false reports were made of the work in the East Bay area.

4. The absurd charges printed in the "Western Worker" in which it is stated that I reported comrade Laycock was negotiating for some machine guns is absolutely false and I wish to be faced with any proof to substantiate this abominable lie.

5. The open letter of the Central Committee of the party pointed out our failure to hold the masses yet it failed to show that the reason for it was the wrong policy which the party is following, and its deviation from the correct Bolshevik-Leninist line.

6. The party has never explained to the membership the false policy of the C. I. in China, England, Germany, etc. The party disand attempts to explain these things to the crowd one morning on the waterfront. A number of workers told the speakers to get out, and stay out, at least until we, the longshoremen, have had the opportunity to organize and destroy the company union.

Stalinists in a Predicament
A few days later a leaflet appears on the waterfront urging longshoremen to attend a mass meeting to be held in Eagles Hall to discuss and form a real longshoremen's union. I did not have an opportunity to attend this meeting but had reliable information that about 200 attended this meeting, including party members who were not longshoremen. I urged several longshoremen to attend this meeting, hoping to have at this mass meeting a large audience. A little while later the A. F. of L. had its first meeting with about 1500 to 2000 participating. Now we find the C. P. in a real predicament. This paper, the Waterfront Worker could not appear, because, in order to be true to the T. U. U. L. program, they could not write any organizational articles without attacking the A. F. of L. union as well as the company union.

Left Wing in the A. F. of L. Union
We formed a Left wing in this newly organized union. Only a few C. P. members and sympathizers were actual longshoremen. Therefore our slate of candidates for office was composed of mixed elements who to our estimation were the most progressive of those available. The reactionaries had their own slate. We had a hard struggle.

Just before the election of officials in the union, the C. P. had an idea to publish the Waterfront Worker again. And if this paper had appeared, they would be obliged—to carry out the Party policy—to attack both the Right and Left wing candidates. Therefore they thought it best not to publish it. The rank and file carried all our by-laws, and most of the executive board members were elected.

I am feeling sorry for those young honest C. P. comrades who did many useful deeds along the waterfront, trying to organize this body of men. And I am participating in their disappointment. The higher-ups in the Party told these lesser lights to go and organize but gave them such instructions and policy that prevented any success and made them waste their efforts. Now that they see the movement growing up without them, it is to be hoped that they will learn from the experience what their leaders could not teach them. —NOIX.

One of the several slanders in this article requiring an answer is the allegation of my having been secretly negotiating to obtain machine guns some time ago. Were it not for the seriousness of such a charge, tending as it does to invite police persecution, it would be unworthy of recognition. However, since this was supposed to have occurred during the time when I was still in the party, why wasn't this brought up against me before now? Comrade Anna Robbins has not only denied ever having made such a report but demands proof from the party to back up this piece of "provocateur exposure"! I also demand proof!

This article in the "Western Worker" is the only reply that the party can make to the growing number of expulsions of comrades who are demanding a discussion of the German situation, the right of union line, removal of all bureaucratic in the party. The growth of the Left Opposition in the East Bay area is making the party bureaucrats panicky. We can expect in the future similar personal attacks on our comrades as this is the party's method of meeting political arguments.

Signed:
STANLEY D. LAYCOCK.

New York School Starts Off with a Bang

The first two sessions of classes conducted by the International Workers School opened Monday with excellent attendance for both of them. The first lecture of the course on "The Fundamentals of Marxism," by John Wright, was attended by 23 students, 28 having registered. The introductory lecture dealt with Socialism, Utopian and Scientific. The next lecture will be given on Monday, October 23, with "The Marxian Analysis of a Commodity" as the theme.

The first lecture of the course on "The State and Revolution" given by Jack Weber was equally successful. About thirty comrades were present. The first lecture dealt with Primitive Society. There were questions and discussion. The second lecture which was held Monday, October 23rd at 8 P. M. sharp dealt with the Origin of the State and the First Slave States.

There is still time to register. Readers are advised that registration for these two classes, as well as for the two which are given on Wednesday (Organizational Principles by Abert, and Applied Marxian Economics by Field), is still open. Registrants should see the course secretary before 8:30 P. M. either Monday or Wednesday, according to the class desired. Literature for each course can be obtained at any time of the day from the local office, 126 East 16th Street. Classes begin on time!

STATEMENT OF S. O. LAYCOCK
To All Party Members
In District No. 13
Dear Comrades:

In the "Western Worker" there appeared a statement of the disciplinary committee which contained the news of my expulsion along with that of several other comrades. The others mentioned, who

Open Letter to the Joe Derry Defense Committee

Montreal.—Joe Derry was arrested while addressing an anti-war meeting and charged with being a member of an allegedly unlawful organization, the Young Communist League of Canada in violation of Section 98 of the Criminal Code. This infamous anti-labor law has already been used in order to interdict Communist leaders in the Kingston penitentiary for a total of 37 years, and to declare the Communist Party illegal in Ontario and semi-illegal in the rest of Canada. If Joe Derry is convicted the Y. C. L. will automatically find itself in the same position as the Communist Party. That section 98 will be extended to include other workers' organizations all over the country is more than probable.

Section 98 was put on the statute books of Canada for the immediate purpose of legalizing the crushing of the Winnipeg general strike of 1919. It constitutes a powerful weapon in the hands of the ruling class to keep the whole working class in subjection. Only a broad and powerful united front movement of the organizations of the working class, particularly youth organizations, irrespective of their affiliation and views, can free Joe Derry. This achievement would be a step towards the abolition of Section 98 and towards an unprecedented struggle for the definite guaranteeing of free speech, assembly and organization to the working class.

An effective common struggle can be set in motion only by a democratic and centralized conference of the representatives of workers organizations. The method adopted, however, of merely setting up committees in various organizations, while postponing the calling of a conference to the remote and indefinite future, constitutes a retreat from the course of a centralized united front. The effectiveness of a united front, the effectiveness of its experience, consists precisely in the fact that workers of different affiliations fight together for a common aim. Actually, moreover, the committees are being established, if at all, only in Left wing organizations—an inevitable result of the whole course pursued.

Instead of a united front the campaigning of the Left wing organizations, which would in any case take place, is being conducted under the label of setting up committees. This is but an expression of sectarianism, and unwarranted pessimism in the possibility of mobilizing the workers' organizations by means of a democratic and allied conference.

No matter how strenuously the course adopted is pursued as a "preparatory" course to the creation of a broad united front movement, the desired end cannot be attained. The preparatory work must be carried on precisely with the perspective in mind of a date immediately fixed for the convening of a representative conference. As it is, however, the old "united front from below", i. e., no united front at all, is being revived with the addition of the ornament of committees in the Left wing organizations.

United front conferences have been failures in the last year because, for one thing, abstract slogans were put forward, not fitting in with a concrete situation. The very campaign on the Joe Derry case has up to now not centered around the question of freedom of organization and the abolition of Section 98. Due to the pressure of our delegates the committee outlined the tendency to make the issue a struggle against war. No one would think of calling a united front for the overthrow of capitalism because someone has been arrested for advocating this overthrow. A correct program of action is necessary for every particular united front. Such a program, however, without the means of carrying it through—a representative conference—is meaningless.

United front conferences have been wrecked by the putting forward of ultimatums to reformist organizations, condemning reformism as a political method and even dubbing it "social fascism". The united front for the defense of Joe Derry demands agreement on only one concrete issue. Each organization maintains its independence and its freedom of criticism.

The mistakes of the past are no justification for a return to the "united front from below". They rather point to the necessity of a correct united front policy today.

The Left Opposition and Spartacus Youth Club refuse to share the responsibility for this false prospect of a powerful movement. In the interests of the struggle for freedom of organization for the working class we uphold the banner of the Leninist united front.

There is a sentiment afoot in Stalinist circles that since Joe Derry is about to be sentenced, it is too late to initiate a broad united front movement in his defense. Joe Derry has already been in jail for some time, but section 98 is still on the statute books of Canada, a useful weapon in the hands of the ruling class against the workers' struggle. The leaders of the Canadian Labor Defense League considered it too late to set on foot a united front for the release of the five charged with sedition in Montreal precisely because the five had already been sentenced. The Joe Derry case must not suffer the same fate.

The Joe Derry Committee must declare itself a Provisional Committee and transfer its powers to a duly convened united front conference of all workers' organizations for the defense of Joe Derry. To make such a united front a success we are ready to do our utmost.

Situation in Hotels and Restaurants

Alone among the three trade unions in the food industry in and around New York, the Hotel and Restaurant Workers Branch of the Amalgamated Food Workers is carrying on a vigorous and successful organization drive among the hotel and restaurant workers. This drive is the response to years of effort on the part of the hotel and restaurant owners to lower the conditions of the workers, cutting wages, lengthening hours and speeding-up the work, culminating in their present attempt to stabilize conditions on their lowest level by means of a code under the NRA. At the same time, although much of the work is highly skilled, they want to reduce it to "domestic" labor.

The economic background of the bosses' campaign is, first, the concentration of capital in this industry and second, the excessive investment of capital during the boom times which has lowered the level of profits and induced the bosses to try to put additional pressure on the workers in order to raise profits in spite of this.

The hotel industry itself ranks as the seventh largest in the United States, with a capital investment of over five billion dollars. Altogether there are over 26,800 hotels in the United States, but about half of them are small (less than 25 rooms) or are operated only seasonally.

Investments and Wages

The following data, taken from the 1929 report of the U. S. Census Bureau, show the high concentration of capital, the large number of workers per establishment, and the low average wage level. Comparing New York City with the country as a whole, the average size of the establishment is still larger, and the wage level takes insufficient account of the higher cost of living in New York compared with the rest of the country. These figures refer only to hotels of 25 rooms or more which are operated all year round:

	New York City	Country
Number of hotels	13,328	509
Number of rooms	1,184,967	126,632
Average rooms per hotel	85	249
Total employees	921,250	41,386
Total wages and salaries	$267,034,000	$14,085,000
Dining, lunch room and kitchen employees	100,140	13,356
Wages and salaries	$84,428,000	$12,911,000
Average annual wages for such workers	$844	$988
All other workers	191,119	28,705
Wages and salaries for all other workers	$172,606,000	$31,174,000
Average annual wages for all other workers	$904	$1,081

The average investment per hotel in the United States may be estimated at about $250,000. From the foregoing it appears that there are 22 workers in the average hotel in the United States, and about 33 in New York City. But the concentration of capital has gone much further than these figures show. In a single one of the largest hotels in New York, over 3,000 workers are employed; in the kitchen alone, over a hundred. "Chain-store" operation of hotels now embraces a total of 80,000 rooms, and is growing rapidly.

"War Chest" to Fight Unions

The concentrated power represented by the American Hotel Men's Association, the bosses' trade organization, is indicated further by the generally accepted fact that they have raised a "war chest" of $600,000 for the specific purpose of fighting the workers' efforts at organization for better conditions.

Under these circumstances it is not surprising that the A. F. of L., which always tried to avoid open conflict with large and concentrated aggregates of capital, has done very little in this field, and particularly among the key workers in the hotel and restaurant industry, the cooks and the kitchen department in general.

As a profit-making machine, the hotel industry is suffering not only from the crisis in general, but specifically from the consequences of its own folly in engaging in a boom of overbuilding and overexpansion. This has resulted in a huge burden of interest, amortization and taxes. Now that the consequences of this orgy of overexpansion have shown themselves in lower profits, they are attempting to raise profits at the expense of the workers. Yet the conditions of the work, the seasonal character, and the amount of training and ability required are such that the worker in this industry is entitled to a relatively higher wage scale—if he can get it through organization in a powerful and militant trade union.

Overbuilding in the Hotel Industry

As to the fact that the bosses had sufficient warning, even before the boom burst, that they were overbuilding, there is sufficient evidence. Between 1920 and 1928, a full year before the general crisis struck the country, the overbuilding which had already taken place resulted in the following situation:

	1920	1928
Number of rooms	1,070,000	1,521,000
Per cent occupancy	85.5%	67.6%
Number of rooms occupied	914,850	1,028,196
Number of guests	1,007,820	1,237,835

While the number of rooms available increased 50%, the number of rooms actually occupied increased less than 13%, and the number of guests by about the same percentage. As a result, the percentage of occupancy declined to 67.6%, while throughout the trade it is understood that 70% occupancy is the minimum at which a hotel can operate and make money.

Conditions of Workers in Large N.Y. Industry

Hotel Failures During Boom

While the building boom was going on, another warning signal was given by the steadily mounting totals of hotel failures, as shown by the following figures:

Year	Number of Failures	Liabilities Involved in Failures
1921	59	$2,625,000
1922	70	2,234,000
1923	82	7,129,000
1924	64	3,183,000
1925	82	3,323,000
1926	82	5,506,000
1927	112	10,982,000
1928	112	13,154,000

All this was taking place supposedly in a period of prosperity. So obvious had the danger become that W. I. Hamilton, manager of the Florida Associated Hotels, in a book on "Promoting New Hotels," written in October 1929, that is, at the height of the boom psychology of the "new era," warns the industry, "Since 1926 the spread between the number of hotel rooms and the number of guests has been steadily widening. While both have been increasing, the increase in rooms has been the more rapid. The hotel industry... of late has grown too rapidly."

Yet money continued to pour into the industry, seeking investment in an already overcrowded field. Such structures as the Hotel New Yorker and the new Waldorf-Astoria were opened long after the crash in general business had come.

Making the Workers Pay

How did the bosses meet this situation? By cutting wages, lengthening hours, and speeding-up the work. According to the U. S. Department of Labor, the following situation prevailed in August 1933, compared with the last previous rates of wages and hours:

Wages Rates Per Week
	Present	Previous
Union I: Waiters, waitresses	$15	$20
Union II: Waiters, waitresses	15	20
Union III: Cooks	$5.50	$6.45

Hours per Week
	Present	Previous
Union I: 9 a day	48	48
Union II: 54 a day	48	48
Union III: 9-10 a day	48	48

In the case of Union II, we see how conditions have deteriorated in the industry, wages being cut 25% while hours were increased 12-12 percent.

Problems of the Cuban Revolution

In the face of the monstrous odds, the workers of Cuba today must assume their historical task. They, and they alone, can achieve the liberation of Cuba. Only the workers can set up an efficient form of government in Cuba, defeat the intervention of American imperialism, and solve the disastrous contradictions that have plunged and kept the Cuban masses in degradation. Successful American intervention will mean a disastrous defeat for the Cuban proletariat. The tragedy of the Cuban proletariat must be prevented!

The Cuban masses are militant. Seizures of plantations have already occurred. Embryonic revolutionary Soviets are in the process of formation. But unless the movement is led into the proper channels, the Soviets will become only a parody; American imperialism will restore its rapacious hegemony.

Revolutionary Party Needed

The Cuban workers cannot succeed unless a genuine revolutionary party is immediately formed, and takes the initiative, unless the international revolutionary proletariat, particularly of Latin America, the United States and Canada is mobilized in defense of the Cuban revolution. The criminal policies of Stalinism, the collapse of the Comintern have left the Cuban workers without their most necessary, essential and important weapons of struggle; they have no revolutionary party to lead them in battle; under the leadership of Stalin the international proletariat cannot come to their support. These weapons can and must be forged. In Cuba, the Left Oppositionists must immediately call for the formation of a true Communist party. Internationally, the Left Opposition must inaugurate a united front in defense of the Cuban workers.

Time is precious now. Every day is equal to a decade. In the very heat of the struggle, the proletariat of Cuba can and must gain the time necessary to consolidate its ranks, and form its vanguard. Upon its success or failure rests the Data accumulated by the writer in the course of his work in this union show that a group of skilled cooks was making an average of $40.88 a week when they took their present jobs; now they are averaging $30.04 a week.

In the meantime, staffs have been reduced, hours have become longer, the amount of work to be done or supervised has become greater. In one of the big hotel kitchens, 140 men were employed two years ago; now there are six.

The bosses themselves are fully aware of the connection that exists between the overcapitalization of the industry and the wage-cutting, longer hours and speed-up by which they hope to increase profits.

In the Bankers Magazine for August 1932, the following figures are given, as to division of expenses for each dollar of gross sales:

	Cents
Bondholders' interest	12
Taxes and insurance	9
Depreciation	6
Payroll	31
Merchandise (food, etc.)	19
Sundries, supplies, etc.	23
Total	$1.00

The conclusion which this paper draws from these facts for the benefit of the capitalists is, "If a saving great enough to protect the bondholders' interests, endangered by decreased sales, is to be effected, it must necessarily come out of the last three items through more efficient operation."

"More Efficient Operation"

This so-called "more efficient operation" means, first and foremost, wage-cuts. This is amply proven by an article in the same issue of the Bankers Magazine by Ralph Hiltz, president of the National Hotel Management chain, which operates a total of 4500 rooms in New York, Cleveland and Detroit. He is trying to prove to the bankers that his chain methods are better for cutting wages than the individual managements, and cites the following facts:

In June 1932, under chain management, 25 cents out of each dollar of sales was kept for gross profit; in the same month of the previous year, under the old management, only 15% had been kept for gross profit.

How was this result obtained? He explains: In June 1931, under the old management, out of each dollar of room sales 27% had been paid out in wages; in June 1932, under chain management, only 16% had been paid out in wages; in June 1932, only 33 cents was being paid out in wages.

Juggling the Profit Figures

On top of this, the bosses are deliberately making a poorer showing of profit than they need to, in order to have a further excuse for wage-cutting. In the alleged costs of doing business, tabulated above, we notice that depreciation amounts to 9% of the total. This means that 9% of the gross intake of the business has to go to replace the wearing-out of the building each year. If 9% of the value of the building were to wear out each year, the whole building would last 11 years. This is ridiculous, since we know that a hotel property can stand forty years or more, in spite of changes in public taste and in location values, and still retain its value.

Another item which is used to pad the accounts is the cost of financing, which may run as high as 5% of the value of the property. On a hotel costing 5 million dollars, say a thousand-room hotel in a large city, this charge might be $250,000. If all this is loaded on to the expense account in one year or a few years, the profits will be that much less, and the management has a better excuse for cutting wages than if it spread such charges over the life of the mortgages at least.

Demands on Hotel Workers

Against these pretensions of the bosses, the workers in this industry can present indisputable facts to show how much is demanded of them as workers. A survey made by the writer among members of his union shows that the average first-class cook, capable of taking charge of the kitchen of a first-class hotel or restaurant, has had to train himself for his work for some eighteen years, going through the various stages of his training as follows:

Apprentice	2 years
Commis (from sixth to first)	6 years
First Commis	2 years
Chief de partie, working chef, sous-chef, chef	8 years

As apprentice he earns either nothing or a nominal sum; besides, the apprenticeship is usually served on the Continent, particularly in France, as the American hotels have no real apprenticeship in the European sense of all-around training from the bottom up, but begin specialization in the various departments as soon as a worker enters the trade. As the worker acquires experience, he becomes responsible for the management of part of all of the kitchen staff and for the expenditure of thousands of dollars of food and supplies. If a waiter, he is directly and personally responsible for the handling of checks.

Moreover, the work is definitely of a seasonal character. Even in a boom year like 1929, the difference in employment between the highest and the lowest months of the year was 1.2%, compared with 0.89 per cent for industry as a whole, or seasonal fluctuations eight times as wide as in general industry.

The Bosses' Codes and the Workers' Code

In the face of this, the bosses proposed one of the worst codes ever to be presented under the NRA: a 34-hour week, a minimum wage of 28 cents an hour which could be reduced in many cases to 20 cents an hour, a "merit clause" which gave the boss unlimited right to hire and fire, and an amazing collection of tricky provisions which would have served to stabilize the workers' conditions at intolerably low levels.

The code proposed by the A. F. W. calls for a 40-hour week, a minimum of $15 a week, no split shifts, decent wages for the higher-paid workers, abolition of the spy system, and a workers' committee to propose increases in wages scales where made necessary by rising costs of living.

As a class-struggle union, organizing all the workers in its industry without distinction of race, sex or grade, on an industrial as opposed to craft lines, the A. F. W. is rapidly making headway in recovering membership back toward the mark of 18,000 at which it stood in 1919. It has a right to ask the support of all workers, and first of all those in the food industry, in its aim to strengthen itself by building up its organization, so as to withstand the attacks of the bosses and be in position to enforce the workers' demands for decent living standards.

Defeat American Intervention

Before there can even be talk of passing to the offensive, the Cuban workers must ward off and defeat the immediate threat of American intervention.

Only the Cuban workers can prevent the formation of another puppet regime, a replica of the Machado dictatorship, this time with Fascist trappings.

The vanguard must lead in demanding the immediate convocation of the Constituent Assembly. The masses must be mobilized under the banner of transitional demands. At the same time, with these democratic slogans (Free speech! Free press! Freedom of assembly, etc.) must be widely agitated the slogan of nationalization (banks and industries—particularly sugar and tobacco plantations).

But first and foremost, the vanguard must organize the united front against American imperialism; and in this united front must be included not only all workers' organizations but any and all sections of the petty bourgeoisie that are willing and ready to struggle against the common enemy.

Only in this way can the tragedy of the Cuban proletariat be averted.

—J. O. W.

year. If 9% of the value of the building were to wear out each year, the whole building would last 11 years. This is ridiculous, since we know that a hotel property can stand forty years or more, in spite of changes in public taste and in location values, and still retain its value.

Chief de partie, working chef, sous-chef, chef	8 years

As apprentice he earns either nothing or a nominal sum; besides, the apprenticeship is usually served on the Continent, particularly in France, as the American hotels have no real apprenticeship in the European sense of all-around training from the bottom up, but begin specialization in the various departments as soon as a worker enters the trade. As the worker acquires experience, he becomes responsible for the management of part of all of the kitchen staff and for the expenditure of thousands of dollars of food and supplies. If a waiter, he is directly and personally responsible for the handling of checks.

Moreover, the work is definitely of a seasonal character. Even in a boom year like 1929, the difference in employment between the highest and the lowest months of the year was 1.2%, compared with 0.89 per cent for industry as a whole, or seasonal fluctuations eight times as wide as in general industry.

The Bosses' Codes and the Workers' Code

In the face of this, the bosses proposed one of the worst codes ever to be presented under the NRA: a 34-hour week, a minimum wage of 28 cents an hour which could be reduced in many cases to 20 cents an hour, a "merit clause" which gave the boss unlimited right to hire and fire, and an amazing collection of tricky provisions which would have served to stabilize the workers' conditions at intolerably low levels.

The code proposed by the A. F. W. calls for a 40-hour week, a minimum of $15 a week, no split shifts, decent wages for the higher-paid workers, abolition of the spy system, and a workers' committee to propose increases in wages scales where made necessary by rising costs of living.

As a class-struggle union, organizing all the workers in its industry without distinction of race, sex or grade, on an industrial as opposed to craft lines, the A. F. W. is rapidly making headway in recovering membership back toward the mark of 18,000 at which it stood in 1919. It has a right to ask the support of all workers, and first of all those in the food industry, in its aim to strengthen itself by building up its organization, so as to withstand the attacks of the bosses and be in position to enforce the workers' demands for decent living standards.

Defeat American Intervention

Before there can even be talk of passing to the offensive, the Cuban workers must ward off and defeat the immediate threat of American intervention.

Only the Cuban workers can prevent the formation of another puppet regime, a replica of the Machado dictatorship, this time with Fascist trappings.

The vanguard must lead in demanding the immediate convocation of the Constituent Assembly. The masses must be mobilized under the banner of transitional demands. At the same time, with these democratic slogans (Free speech! Free press! Freedom of assembly, etc.) must be widely agitated the slogan of nationalization (banks and industries—particularly sugar and tobacco plantations).

But first and foremost, the vanguard must organize the united front against American imperialism; and in this united front must be included not only all workers' organizations but any and all sections of the petty bourgeoisie that are willing and ready to struggle against the common enemy.

Only in this way can the tragedy of the Cuban proletariat be averted.

year. If 9% of the value of the building were to wear out each year, the whole building would last 11 years. This is ridiculous, since we know that a hotel property can stand forty years or more, in spite of changes in public taste and in location values, and still retain its value.

Another item which is used to pad the accounts is the cost of financing, which may run as high as 5% of the value of the property. On a hotel costing 5 million dollars, say a thousand-room hotel in a large city, this charge might be $250,000. If all this is loaded on to the expense account in one year or a few years, the profits will be that much less, and the management has a better excuse for cutting wages than if it spread such charges over the life of the mortgages at least.

Demands on Hotel Workers

The Anti-War Junket in Shanghai

The day after their arrival the delegates issued a statement:

"The delegation thanks the English and French press of Shanghai for the interest shown in their mission to the Far East. The French government has never placed any obstacles in the way of the United Front Anti-War Committee, and meetings have lately been held in Paris in crowded halls such as the Salle Bullier in the presence of many thousands of enthusiastic supporters and sympathizers. All the more unfortunate and incongruous is the attitude of the present Chinese government which, according to the English press, has forbidden any mention of the delegation in Chinese newspapers. This usage, if really issued, has been decided on after the receipt of false information about the delegation's intentions, which are not today, and never have been, other than the furtherance of China's national independence and liberty."

The British and French imperialist press of Shanghai is thanked by the delegation, including the Communist Vaillant-Couturier, for its "interest," which, by the way, has manifested itself in attempts to persuade both the imperialist and Chinese authorities not to allow the congress to be held. Pained surprise is expressed that the Chinese government should have clamped down a censorship on the delegation's doings "which are not today, and never have been, other than the furtherance of China's national independence and liberty." Surely the editor of L'Humanite should know that the government at Nanking is engaged in selling China's national independence and liberty to the imperialists, with a view to securing the latter's aid in keeping the Chinese masses in subjection. Or does he perhaps believe that a little factory administration in the best Stalinist fashion, may induce Nanking to smile benignly on the congress project?

Futile Mission to Japan

Lord Marley and Dr. Martenau went to Japan to try and scratch up a Japanese delegation. They were not permitted ashore for the purpose and had to take the next boat back to Shanghai, their mission unaccomplished. Lord Marley's next step was to address a meeting of the Shanghai Rotary Club, at which, before big businessmen, Chinese and foreign, he expounded his opposition to war with a view (in his own words) to dissipating the "prejudice" that exists against the congress. The anti-path of big business to the anti-war movement is—prejudice! Apart from his pacifist remarks Lord Marley told the Rotarians that "in Russia good government depends on constructive criticism of the government by the people. This self-criticism is freely expressed in both public and private, and is encouraged as an essential part of government by the people." The hard-working Tass correspondent doubtless made this statement available to Moscow by wire, for use in the work of "answering" the Left Opposition. Even a Lord Marley has his uses.

When it became clear that both the imperialist and Chinese authorities, notwithstanding Lord Marley's presence, viewed the delegates' activities as being in some way connected with the Communist movement, moves were made to remove this "prejudice." Lord Marley categorically denied in the press "that the United Front Anti-War Congress scheduled to be held in Shanghai is called under the auspices of the Third International," although, he added, Communist representation would be welcomed.

Next, he called on Mayor Wu Tsh-chen in order to break down that gentleman's prejudices. He assured Mayor Wu that "as long as he is the president of the congress there shall be no possibility of the congress being exploited by the Communists as a jumping-overboard for their own purposes."

"Prejudices" of Imperialist Agents

The British delegate Gerald Hamilton, paid a visit to Nanking to remove some of the "prejudices" of Stalin's old friend, Wang Ching-wei, whose "Leftism" last year finally precipitated him into the arms of Chiang Kai-Shek, where he remains. Hamilton was politely informed by Wang's secretary that he could have an interview provided he did not speak about the projected congress. Evidently there was no interview. Elementary political wisdom dictated the fullest exploitation of Wang's refusal to discuss the congress for an exposure of the Kuo Min Tang government's role as alibi-de-camp to the imperialist war makers. But instead, Mr. Hamilton, with truly statesmanlike adroitness, blindly told the press that he was "highly satisfied with the results of his visit." Which is not surprising since the delegation and its precious congress is "non-political," that is, not of any party, and therefore hardly capable of displaying any political wisdom.

Some shrewd comments on the projected congress and the delegation sent to organize it have appeared in the imperialist press of Shanghai. The North-China Daily News, while considering the congress has "great potentialities for mischief," declares: "In spite of the distinguished figures in the delegation and art who, for some inscrutable reason, seem to have blindly given this precious organization their countenance, it is necessary to place on record the view that it is entirely unrepresentative and of no real weight. Is it unreasonable to maintain that an organization which its chief sponsor here cannot be more specific in describing has but slender claim to the hospitality of a world-city like Shanghai?"

Exactly! Lord Marley and his associates represent nothing but his own self-interest and his own war committees in the countries from which they come. The imperialist organ quoted them thus:

Swaback at Cleveland

Cleveland.—Comrade Arne Swaback spent two days in Cleveland—the 19th and 20th of October. The 18th we had a private meeting and October 20th a lecture at the City Club Auditorium on the theme: "The Youngstown Branch."

A number of comrades sent in single subs. They are too numerous to mention. But we are keeping an accurate record and if these comrades send in additional subs we will be able to list them in this column.

The Youngstown Branch

A note of explanation is due about the Youngstown Branch. When we began to report the drive we listed M. K. from Youngstown. The Youngstown branch informed us that they wanted all subs credited not to individual comrades but to the branch. To date the branch has accounted for 22 subs. But by this arrangement the branch as such is ineligible for the History. The prizes are offered to the individual comrades making the best showing in the campaign—first, three volumes of Trotsky's History of the Russian Revolution; second, two volumes; third, one volume;

Led by British Lord and Ex-War Minister representative chiefly because they have no "official backing," unless from Moscow. But our charge is based on the fact that they represent not a single organization that is rooted in the proletarian masses.

Score of Bourgeois Press

The China Press pertinently asked: "What real good can such a conference do? The explanation is given that there is such a danger of war in the Pacific that it was logical to hold an anti-war conference in the threatened region. The assumption is made that the conference would in some way remove the threat of war. There appears to be no assumption whatever for such an unwarranted doubt Lord Marley and some of his associates are genuinely anxious to help the cause of peace. But they can think of no more original method of accomplishing their aim than by holding a conference!"

These scornful words might well be taken to heart by the Chinese Communists. But it is a sad commentary on the current state of affairs in the international that Communists must seek even the alphabet of political wisdom in the columns of the bourgeois press.

Lord Marley and his companions have now been in Shanghai three weeks and have accomplished just nothing, unless what is recorded above can be deemed accomplishment. A date for the projected congress is still not fixed. It is doubtful, indeed, whether it will take place at all. The British, French and Chinese authorities have already made it clear that they will not permit the congress to be held in their respective jurisdictions, and it is expected that when formal applications are submitted they will be refused. There was no preparation for the congress, either political or organizational, prior to the delegation's arrival in Shanghai. There has been very little since, and that only of very dubious value.

Lord Marley and company are comfortably ensconced in their hotels, waiting for things to happen. They have announced that they will stay there six months if necessary in order to get a congress together. But all the blarney of Stalinist trumpets will be unable to give the congress—if, indeed, it is ever able to meet—that purposive character of which, because of its unrepresentative character and the failure to carry out any serious preparatory work, it must be deprived. Shanghai, Sept. 8, 1933.

New Castle Meeting

About seventy-five workers heard comrade Swaback speak here on the live issues confronting the working class at home, abroad, and internationally, as the result of the NRA and the international situation created by Germany, calling for the creation of a new revolutionary international. Since this audience came through a driving downpour of rain which commenced just before the meeting started and kept up a steady bombardment till almost midnight, we had a group of listeners deeply interested in these questions. In the audience were many militants of years standing in the labor movement and young workers and students of diverging views. The meeting was held in the Socialist Hall, in an atmosphere of concentrated attention.

In the discussion period questions were asked about the Five Year Plan, the Soviet Union and its defense, Germany, and the N. R. A. Quite interesting were the remarks of a well-known and outstanding personality who had been the main instrument of the Application of the Stalinist "General Line" as the leading comrade of the Communist Party here. He complimented the local branch of the Left Opposition, saying that the Communist Party no longer existed and that he was no longer a member of it.

Our meeting adjourned after which a group gathered about comrade Swaback for further discussion. A substantial collection had been received, testifying to the sympathy evoked in the audience. Everyone looks forward to more meetings, like this, which was favorably weathered in spite of unfavorable weather.

EDITORIAL

Russian Recognition

RECOGNITION of the Soviet Union by the United States Government, facilitating trade relations between the two countries, can offer certain advantages to the Russian workers' state in its struggle for survival as well as to the American regime of Wall Street brigands in its competition with other imperialist powers. Under conditions of retarded world revolution the internationalists have always understood the necessity for the one existing Soviet power to establish diplomatic and trade relations with capitalist countries, to exploit the rivalries and antagonisms between them, to make compromises, and to pay for the "concession" of diplomatic recognition and advantageous trade agreements with other concessions, strictly weighed and measured according to the value received.

Thus, under Lenin and Trotsky, the Soviet Union never refused to bargain with the imperialist robbers and even offered, in return for certain credits and other considerations, to agree to the payment of the Czarist debts, etc. Bolshevik diplomacy never balked at compromise but was willing, under the compulsion of necessity, to pay for the right to buy and sell in the capitalist market. But it always asked how much and what kind of payments were demanded. Any demands for political concessions in regard to the Third International were waved aside. Under the authentic leaders of the revolution Bolshevik diplomacy was inseparably united with a revolutionary internationalist policy. The breaking of the economic blockade against the Soviet Union and the establishment of diplomatic and trade relations with the capitalist countries went hand in hand with the greatest advances of the Comintern throughout the world.

Today we see a different picture. Soviet diplomacy, under Stalin, based on the theory of "socialism in one country", has separated itself from revolutionary internationalism. The diplomatic victories of Litvinoff coincide with a steady succession of defeats for the Comintern. The concessions involved in Soviet relations with capitalist powers acquire a one-sided and, still worse, a political character. The organizers of defeat in the field of revolutionary policies are achieving some very dubious successes in the field of diplomacy. They are being saluted a little bit too enthusiastically by the capitalist press.

At the present moment—with American recognition pending—we have to look the Roosevelt gift horse in the mouth. What is he really offering the Soviet Union and more important, what is Stalinist diplomacy offering in return? The appearance of things is none too reassuring. The first and most outstanding feature of the business is the political offensive of American imperialism and the retreat of Soviet diplomacy before it.

The preliminaries do not appear as a relationship between equals talking business. The Wall Street scoundrels act with the insolence of a conqueror laying down the law. The demand for guarantees against activity of the Communist International, presented by other countries in the past as a formality and lightly brushed aside, is put forward in real earnest by the American imperialists. More than that, they talk as though the "concession" is already in the bag. That is the way they interpret the theory of national socialism, and not without good reason. Not one of the journalists boasting recognition from the standpoint of American interest fails to shower Litvinoff with bouquets and, at the same time, to attribute his virtues as a diplomat to the theory of socialism in one country. There has been such a flood of this propaganda—all in the same strain—that one could select a characteristic quotations from any one of the leading organs of capitalist opinion. Take the three leading New York papers, for example.

The New York Times for October 22: "Certainly," writes Edwin L. James, "one of the first things Roosevelt will make clear to Litvinoff will be that the United States Government will not stand for Communist propaganda in this country financed by the Third International of Moscow. It may be expected that the Commissioner for Foreign Affairs will be ready to promise the change will become even more complete."

If that is not enough, here is more from the same article:

"One has only to compare the efforts made abroad by the Third International ten years ago and those made now to see that there has been a change. Doubtless Litvinoff will be ready to promise the change will become even more complete."

Precisely the same opinion, with a clearer explanation, is expressed in the New York Tribune for October 25th by Walter Lippman:

"President Roosevelt is dealing with a different Russian government from the Russian Government that President Wilson refused to recognize. The decisive difference has been brought about by the victory of Stalin and his doctrine of 'socialism in a single country' over Trotsky and those who hold the doctrine that Communism cannot succeed in Russia unless there is a world revolution."

Again from Lippman's article:

"It is the change in Russian policy, now apparently established and consolidated that removes the only real obstacle there has ever been to the recognition of Russia."

On top of that read the opinion of the Scripps-Howard foreign editor William Philip Simms, in the New York World Telegram for October 21:

"Time has vastly modified these objections (to the Third International), so much so, in fact, that there is every indication that when Foreign Minister Litvinoff and the President draw up before the wood-fire in the White House study they will have little difficulty in reaching an accord."

These devastating expressions of the leading interpreters of bourgeois opinion, so identical in every note, so brutal in their frankness, leave little to be added. They strip the issues bare. American capitalism, haunted by the memory of Lenin's Comintern, wanted guarantees against its activities. Its keenest representatives explain: "Things are different now; the Comintern is a fiction; the 'obstacle' is removed. There is nothing to fear from it." In this conclusion, it must be said without qualification, the bourgeois journalists are absolutely right. They understand the situation perfectly.

But there is a slight error in the calculation in spite of all. There is no room to doubt that Litvinoff will "be ready with complete assurance"—this "assurance" has already been given in fact by the strangulation of the Comintern. But the living movement of Communism is beyond the power of anyone to destroy. Driven out of the Comintern by the Stalins and Litvinoffs, it is already making its way again. A new Communist International will abrogate the perfidious "agreements" of Stalinism and the world bourgeoisie and dispose of both of them.

United Front Against Hooliganism

CONGRATULATIONS to the Chicago Communists whose activity called forth the attempt, organized by the publicist-bureaucrats of the Stalin party, to break up the Swaback meeting. And double congratulations on the fact that the gangster attack was repulsed, firmly and not too gently. Next time, we trust, it will be done better—and more expeditiously.

Other workers not members of the Communist League, some of them representing different opinions and tendencies, took part in the defense of the Chicago meeting. This is an especially gratifying feature of the affair. In the midst of the general disintegration that has been brought into the movement of the workers' vanguard one positive impulse is beginning to assert itself. That is the sentiment for workers' democracy—for the free exchange of opinion and the clarifying discussion of differences in a comradely atmosphere, undisturbed by hooligans and rowdies who arrogantly seek to take away this right and prohibit the consideration of any viewpoint but their own.

Such a sentiment, becoming predominant among the uncorrupted militants in all the radical organizations and groups, is a sound and progressive one. It can and will become a mighty force for the regeneration of the movement. What is needed right now is a practical expression of this sentiment—the united action of those who stand for workers' democracy against those who dare to infringe on it.

We speak for this solidarity of action and are ready, for our part, to join in a fight for the democratic rights of other working class groups, just as we welcome their aid in defending our own right to be heard. A united front to protect workers' meetings from the interference of degenerate hooligan elements would serve the interests of the working class movement as a whole. The tasks of such a united front are not in the least complicated. The job is to form a workers' guard to defend the right of free speech in the labor movement and teach a lesson to those who interfere with it. The sooner such a workers' guard is organized and gets into action the sooner the movement will be liberated from the scourge of hooliganism.

ment. And when the workers' negotiations committee was demoralized with fatigue they set the stage for a last act of intimidation. All the cops were called off their regular beats for "duty" at the mills, rumors were spread that a large gang of strike breakers and thugs had been imported into Paterson, the bosses made a public statement that the mills would open and the mayor backed them up by saying that he would see to it that "any man who wanted to return to work would not be prevented from doing so." It was under these circumstances that the agreement was made.

One can say with some certainty that this split in the strike was prepared even before the outbreak of the strike. The outcome might have been different if the dyers had been affiliated with the A. F. S. W. Before the strike, Schweitzer, the cautious, week-kneed organizer of the A. S. W. turned down an offer to organize the dyers into the Associated so that the organizer of the dyers, Yannerelli, made a deal with McMahon and the dye house workers went directly into the U. T. W.

Evil Result of Separate Organization

In the U. T. W. the mass of the strikers, the more experienced and tested militants in the A. F. S. W., had no control over the actions of the dyers. It is true that there was some sort of reciprocal representation of the two unions on the respective strike committees. The lack of forces prevented the working of this committee. Given these circumstances the appeal of Schweitzer calling upon the dyers to remain out until the weavers got a settlement was only a futile gesture.

By the separate agreement with the dyers, the bosses surely have obtained a moral advantage. Already 3,000 jacquard workers want to stampeo back to work. The bosses have given them certain concessions and they have also voted to go back to the job following the lead of the dyers. Further disorganization is to be seen in the action of the jacquard workers in withdrawing from the strike committee of the A. F. S. W. and forming a strike committee of their own.

The defection of the dyers has unquestionably made the road of the silk workers to victory more difficult and more tortuous. But a great mass remains on strike and a great power is still in their hands, and if they hold their ranks solid they can yet force a favorable settlement.

Notes of the Week

ERADICATING UNEMPLOYMENT

Every week in this hectic period brings new social thunderstorms. Last week rickety capitalist Europe threw a fit over Hitler's bolt from Geneva.

It's the turn of younger, crafty, cunning American capitalism this week. The farmers out in the Middle West are threatening to upset Mr. Roosevelt's New Deal apple-cart.

Besides the farmers, there are the steadily enduring, industrial strikes, growing and broadening out. The compliance boards of the NRA are overwhelmed with complaints of code violators. The first snowfall promises to bring the unemployment tension to a high pitch.

A veritable bag of ill-winds are being let loose on the heads of the North American colossus.

Along comes a new and hardly heartening admonition. The well-known economic publicist, Mr. Stuart Chase, writing in the November Current History, presents some startling facts.

Given a 40 hour week work, says Mr. Chase, the year 1934, in spite of all the government and NRA optimism, will still find 12,200,000 men out of jobs.

Given a highly exaggerated figure of 10% increase in production, the number of jobless would still amount to 9,400,000.

Granting more than that, allowing for a decrease in working hours to 35 per week, 9,000,000 men would still have to crowd the streets in futile search for a livelihood.

Mr. Chase's statistics are carefully considered, weighed very cautiously. The farm laborers, the miners, the professional classes are not taken into reckoning, although the same fate is in store for them. His figures are computed on the basis of established facts, hunted up and correlated by numerous and reliable economists and statisticians.

What is behind this realistic picture of a miserable working class future? Mr. Chase and his fellow economists will tell you: "technological unemployment." Seventy men in 1933 can do the work of 100 in 1926. The machine is replacing the workers.

What is this horrible monster, the machine, in reality? It is and was always meant to be an aid to man. Born out of the unique ingenuity of man in the animal kingdom, the tool and the machine were produced to help him overcome the obstacles of nature in his struggle for a happy existence.

The thinking worker who knows this will not be fooled. No, it is not the machine that is the monster. The private exploitation of the machine, its utilization for the heaping up of profits for the few—capitalism—that is the threat to a decent human existence.

"Technological unemployment" will exist as long as the capitalist system exists. Replace the system of production for profit by the system of production for social use and "technological unemployment" becomes transformed into: greater leisure, better health, higher intelligence and happier, fuller life for the vast mass of humanity.

The workers of America have not yet fully grasped this idea in their great majority. They are just nibbling at it. They want to hang on to life, merely.

They are striking in great number now for a somewhat shorter work-day, for a somewhat higher living wage.

Yet that monstrosity, the class of the bosses who possess all under capitalism, mobilize police, government and press against them. Yet the rulers will not order an inch to the workers.

It is inevitable that the American workman will, with ever growing speed and strength, organize en masse to fight not only for a higher wage and a shorter workday, but against the looming prospect of permanent unemployment for millions in their ranks.

Wage strikes are not enough. Unemployment insurance must come next.

Organizing the Steel Workers

orate preparations for the Steel Trust made for this tempest in a teacup. The day before the strike 150 deputy sheriffs were sworn in. The police forgot all about the NRA and labor's right to picket peacefully. The curtain was lifted from the benevolent smile of capital, and the bosses showed their fangs for a moment. The workers must draw the necessary conclusions from this. They must come to the realization that, NRA or no NRA, the cop is the tool of the boss.

Swaback's Meeting

It was just at the close of this burlesque episode that Arne Swaback arrived in Youngstown. A small but rather advanced crowd of seventy workers attended his meeting on October 17th. The crowd showed a keen interest in the issues presented, and a lively discussion took place.

Agrarian Question in Mexico

The Problem of the Coming Revolt and the Peasantry

The period of governmental reaction initiated under Portes Gil in 1928, also marked the cutting short of the agrarian reform. Only a small section of the peasantry was satisfied with the manner in which this reform, based on Article 27 of the 1917 constitution, had been carried out. Of those lands expropriated from the feudal landholders, the best were generally seized by the politicians and generals of the revolution. Most of the remaining arable tracts remained in the hands of their old owners on some pretext or other. The barren hillsides, rocky, dry, streambeds, and otherwise undesirable lands were left for the peasants. Every hectare of this land has been paid for with peasants' blood and even when they have received it, all kind and color of shirings are tied to it.

In some cases, those villages which have shown greatest militancy during the early period of the revolution, were given satisfactory grants or ratified in the possession of lands they had forcibly seized, in order to silence them and set them up as a barrier to hold back the great mass of landless peasantry who were being "fed" on promises and government surveys.

Ending the Land Reforms

The newly rich, having themselves acquired great landed wealth in the course of the revolution, now found it necessary to seek alliances with the remaining, politically crippled, feudal holders and wealthy ranchers in order to preserve their own booty. A new policy was then instituted by degrees in one state after another, to wind up all pending agrarian matters and declare land reforms at an end. Not only was this done but the breaking up of the "ejidos" (communal land grants) was also ordered. This constituted a still greater betrayal of the interests of the peasant masses without the aid of whom the democratic revolution of 1910-1917 would have been impossible.

From time immemorial and antedating the coming of the Spaniards the peasant villagers owned their land in common. In some cases the soil was tilled in common also and in others by the individual families but without any private land tenure. These commons, called gime, were the direct forerunners of the ejidos of more recent times.

Many of these village commons remained intact until comparatively recent times although the tendency in the colonial period was for the Spanish hacendados to absorb and destroy the primitive village economy, converting the peasants into peons or serfs of the haciendas. There were a number of peasant uprisings but prior to 1810 these did not acquire great strength. The Mexican war for independence was, especially in its first stage, the revolt of a land-starved peasantry fighting for the restitution of its communal holdings. Other revolutions since that time have had the same objective, culminating in the Zapatista movement of 1910-1919. Another such uprising is now in the offing.

Communal Aspirations of Peasants

Traditionally, the bulk of Mexico's peasants aspire to communal holdings. Left to themselves they seldom abandon common ownership for individual tenure, although the land is almost always subdivided by the village council for cultivation in small lots by individual heads of families. Primitive methods of cultivation, however, make collective farming impractical excepting in rare instances.

Realizing the danger to their communal unity and the consequent strengthening of their enemies, if the village commons are broken up, the peasants prefer collective ownership. Most of them realize that individual tenure at this time would weaken their position as a class and would only serve the hacendados by playing the individual small and middle peasants against each other.

Two short years ago, the high priests of the National Revolutionary Party, to which at that time the major portion of the peasantry nominally adhered, launched a campaign for the subdivision of the "ejidos". The peasants were told that their dignity as human beings, their duty to their families and their individual interests required the breaking up of these communal grants into individual parcels. Many of the peasants succumbed to the arguments of the politicians, especially when the leaders of their own organizations, many of them middic-class ranchers themselves, counselled support of the new government policy.

In several regions however, the peasants revolted on a local scale and the government linked its attack on the ejidos to a campaign to disarm the peasants, thousands of whom still held arms loaned them by the government during the reactionary revolts. In 1932, there were numerous sporadic outbreaks in the states of Michoacan, Jalisco, Satecas and Guanajuato. These local uprisings were easily suppressed and the military reports appearing in the press, usually referred to them as bandit or Catholic outbreaks. All news was, of course strictly censored.

In the state of Veracruz, the hostility of the peasants to the government assumed such an alarming aspect that the whole state was placed under military rule in order to forestall a general uprising. The Tejada political faction dominant in that state, being unprepared to undertake a genuine armed insurrection at that time, although it was itself more or less closely identified with the defiant peasantry, was willing to compromise with the federal authorities. Large sections of the peasantry were disarmed although many of them offered resistance locally. At present the strictest watch is kept by the federal authorities to prevent the rearmament of these elements. It is known that many have secret arms caches. Arrests are being reported of peasants being caught with arms in their possession. A letter just received by the writer of these lines, from a peasant living near the port of Vera Cruz, says in part, "The government has taken our arms away, and even now a few days ago in Villa Jose Cardel if you entered on horseback carrying the machete (game knife) you use to work with, the federal soldiers would take it from you. So you see we must be careful and keep our eyes wide open."

Statement on N. Y. Elections

the interests of capitalist profit and the assurance of its uninterrupted flow into coffers of the bosses, to wipe out every vestige of militancy shown by the workers in their strikes, to resort to despotism, court injunctions and police violence against those workers who refuse to remain docile under the lash of the crisis.

At the same time, the bulk of the hundreds of thousands of workers who have been subjected to the curse of unemployment in New York City, have not had their lot improved by a hair's breadth. The miserable substitute for genuine unemployment relief which the Tammany administration passes off under that name, far from being increased, has been diminished.

Even those insignificant few who have been given the scanty crumbs of relief, are being squeezed down still further. The "skipping" of alternate weeks is being made the general practice now. The appropriations for relief in general, never adequate even for that handful to whom it was to be allocated, are now being cut down. The most discriminated against section of the working class population—the third of a million Negroes in the city—are suffering such intense misery as to make their lot indescribable.

The deep wounds cut into the body of the working class by the crisis in general, have been rendered more painful yet by the regime fostered in New York City by the abominable Tammany administration and its Republican twin. Not since the days of the Tweed Ring has corruption, speculation, bribery, pilfering and plundering in public office been so widespread, so flagrant as it is at the present time. So outrageous and brazen has been the almost recently uncovered record of the Tammany bandits in office, that it is being confronted by an almost universal antagonism, powerful enough to compel scores of eager office-seekers to switch their allegiance to the other candidates of capitalism who seek to preserve it and themselves by somewhat less painful displays of the flagrant assaults upon the spoils than those of Tammany Hall.

For the worker to vote for the parties of capitalism he they Tammany Hall, Fusion, of McKee "Recovery"—is to give his written endorsement to his enemy, to his exploiters, and their political agents. To vote for O'Brien, La Guardia or McKee is to throw away a vote into the wastebasket of the capitalist parties. To vote for any of these tickets is to strike a blow at the working class, at every member of it, and at their class interests.

Nor can the worker conscious of his interests cast a vote of endorsement for the Socialist party and its candidates. The Socialist party represents the movement for the reformation, the patching-up of the decadent, outlived, reactionary capitalist system. The Socialist party does not set itself the aim of overthrowing the present society of exploitation, war and misery; it seeks only to "reform" it. The Socialist party is not the party of the class struggle, and consequently cannot represent the interests of the working class in that struggle. It is the party of class reconciliation, of collaboration with the "progressive" wing of the capitalist class, and consequently it represents essentially the interests of the latter in the ranks of the workers. Like its brother-under-the-skin, the bureaucracy in the trade union movement, the Socialist party constitutes the association of the labor lieutenants of capitalism on the political field.

The Communist party today is dominated by a bureaucracy representing the Stalinist faction. Once a revolutionary and progressive force, rallying the workers on the field of the international class struggle for their emancipation from wage slavery, the Communist party has been systematically reduced by its present leaders and their policies to the caricature of the revolutionary organization which it now constitutes. The official Communist party has been debased to the role of the American apparatus of the Stalinist bureaucracy. Strangled by this bureaucracy, creating a situation in its own ranks where the militant and more conscious members are not permitted to speak their minds or have a critical and independent attitude towards problems, the official Communist party has steadily declined to the position where it advances its own interests separate and apart from the interests of the working class as a whole. In the elementary organizations of the working class—the trade unions—it pursues only the aim of accumulating factional and sectarian advantage, regardless of the painful price the workers are compelled to pay. It sets up tiny sectarian unions; under the guise of "independence", it sets itself in the path of the advancement of the workers' movement. It sabotages the united front of workers' organizations and rejects it in principle. Together with the social democracy, the official Communist party of the United States, together with the Stalinists in Germany and the rest of the world, bear the common responsibility for the greatest catastrophe suffered by the working class anywhere in the world since the world war—that is, the defeat of the German working class at the hands of the Hitlerist barbarians. Instead of acting as the accelerator of the workers' movement and of the revolution, it has become a retarding force, a brake on the workers' movement.

Because of the fact that the Stalinists have forced the official Communist parties off the revolutionary path beyond the possibility of restoration, the Communist League of America (Opposition) together with its brother organizations of the Left Opposition throughout the world, has called upon the class conscious workers to join together to reconstruct the revolutionary movement outside the ranks of Stalinism, to strive to build up a new Communist international and new Communist parties in every country. In the United States, our League is now in the forefront of the movement for a new Communist party. We have been impelled to this gigantic task by the collapse of the official Communist International after the German debacle and the events succeeding it, as well as by the increasingly dangerous situation in which the workers' republic, the Soviet Union, finds itself as a result of the policies of the Stalinist leadership. The Soviet republic cannot be defended, its great historic achievements cannot be carried on to final success in the international arena, the workers' cause cannot be brought to fruition and triumph in this or any other country, without the reconstruction of Communist parties which inscribe upon their banner and carry out in the reality of the class struggle the unassailable ideas of Marx, Engels, Lenin and Trotsky.

The Communist League of America (Opposition) has come to this momentous decision at a time which makes it impossible for it to put forth, in the present election, a set of candidates of its own. The League does not lay any pretensions claims to a strength which it does not yet enjoy. It aims to acquire this strength and the confidence of the workers by carrying its ideas into effect in the daily struggles of the workers against their class opponent. The League rejects the pernicious illusion that the workers can attain their emancipation by means of papers thrown into the ballot box. Elections are a means whereby the class conscious workers record their solidarity, their opposition to the capitalist class and all its parties, the stage of development of their own class maturity. The League holds that the workers can and will liberate themselves from the horrors of capitalism only by the unceasing, militant struggles against the capitalist class and all its institutions, by utilizing all the means at their disposal, by breaking through the confining fetters of parliamentary activity into which the enemy seeks to limit our expression.

Under the circumstances of our inability to put forward our own ticket in this election, the Communist League of America calls upon the workers of this city to cast their votes, at this time, for the candidates of the official Communist party as a protest vote against the capitalist parties, not as an endorsement of the blunders and crimes of the Stalinist leadership, of its policies.

Silk Dyers Vote for Agreement

repudiated Vigorito and Pirola who thought, judging by the "organized" applause, that more votes could be obtained by this unity business. It will be remembered that not so long ago the N. T. W. had levelled shafts of attack at Vigorito and Pirola as agents of the bosses. The disruption of the N. T. W. made calm deliberative meetings of the dye workers impossible; they gave an excuse for the voting of the dyers on the agreement to be conducted secretly and by shops instead of in open strike meeting.

And now, as a last fit of desperation, as a last seed of confusion, the N. T. W. makes a complete change of policy but hardly in the right direction. This is the latest proposal of the N. T. W.:

"The National Textile Workers Union stands ready to merge with the members of the U. T. W. and unorganized workers, into One Dye Workers Union." Not unity but a new union. (There are not enough unions now!)

Tactics of the Bosses

The canny dye bosses were well aware of the inexperience of the dye workers, and their lack of effective leadership. For ten days they wore out a rank and file negotiations committee by incessant meetings, flattering these gullible workers with back-slapping and honeyed words but fighting like tigers for every point of the agree-

Sixteen Years of the Russian Revolution!

THE CREATION OF A FOURTH INTERNATIONAL IS THE BEST DEFENSE OF THE SOVIET UNION

The Rebirth of Revolutionary Internationalism Alone Can Save the First Workers' Fatherland

Sixteen years after that glorious October which witnessed the rise of the Soviet Union, the workers' republic stands in graver danger of attack and aggression than ever before.

Soviet Russia arose as the workers' fatherland through a revolution which aroused the working class of the whole world, which rallied to its banner an international proletariat that knew how to aid in its defense by effective solidarity action throughout the years of the civil war and the innumerable foreign invasions.

International Defense of Soviet Russia

The revolt of the French fleet in the Black Sea, the fraternization at the front of German soldiers, the Shop Stewards' defense movement of England, the strike of the Seattle transport workers against the shipment of munitions to Kolchak—the stirring first years of the Russian revolution are replete with flaming examples of international solidarity and heroism like these.

The international social democracy, the treacherous Second International, acting in the best interests of the bosses of all countries, showed itself worthy of the those years. Taking the helm of government for their national ruling classes, in Germany, in Finland and elsewhere, they succeeded at that time in preventing the glowing international solidarity which came to the fore in the defense of the first labor state from transforming itself into a further, sweeping extension of the Russian revolution, from achieving new victories on the road to the world Soviet.

The Russian Revolution and the Comintern

It was in the struggle for the extension of the Russian revolution, in the five of struggle against capitalist intervention and social reformist treachery that the Communist International was founded in 1919. From the first, the great Marxists taught the Russian workers that their ultimate fate was bound up with that of the international proletariat, that the very existence of the government which they had established with their blood and their lives depended in the first place upon its active support by their fellow workers in Western Europe, in America, in Asia. Soviet diplomacy was used by the authentic Bolsheviks as a weapon of revolutionary internationalism.

The years following the death of Lenin and the temporary relapse of the Western European revolution brought forth a spirit of pessimism in regard to the international perspectives and a utopian optimism in regard to the possibility of building an isolated socialist society in Russia. This national-socialist disease infiltrated even into the ranks of the world vanguard—the Communist International—allied to its principles and purpose. The carriers of this disease were the Stalinist bureaucracy which grew up and nurtured itself like a parasite on the body of the Russian revolution and the Soviet Republic.

The Soviet bureaucracy, the parasites of the revolution interested in the maintenance of their own existence and position at all costs—with the least possible disturbance—was a bulwark of support for Stalin's revisionist theory of "building up socialism in one country."

The New Revisionism

It was with this revisionist idea, born out of the bureaucracy's lack of faith in international solidarity that Stalinism replaced the fighting internationalism of Lenin in the vanguard of the world working class. Stalinism thus began a long process of undermining the Russian revolution and the Soviet state.

With the purpose in view of withdrawing into its own shell and preventing all possible shocks from without, the Stalinized Communist International subordinated the vanguard of the Chinese working class, its Communist party to Chiang Kai-Shek's bourgeois Kuo Min Tung. Lacking conviction in the power of the Chinese workers to lead and to enforce the struggle of the exploited colonial masses in the earth-shaking rebellion against imperialism, they placed their hopes in the Chinese bourgeoisie. The latter accepted this Stalinist gift and then proceeded promptly not only to wipe out the organizations of the Chinese proletariat, but to conspire with the imperialist states against the Soviet Union itself. The Sino-Russian crisis of August 1929 was Chiang Kai-Shek's payment for Stalin's policy.

Opportunism on the International Field

With the same national-socialist purpose in view, the Stalinist leadership united with the British trade union fakers—Purcell, Hicks and Co.—in the Anglo-Russian Committee. In return for a worthless promise to help forestall British military intervention against the Soviet Union, Stalinism subordinated to the English trade union bureaucracy a budding, militant Minority Movement led by the Communist party, Purcell, Hicks and Co. utilized the Comintern support and authority to sell out the general strike of 1926—the greatest revolutionary action in the history of the British working class. The labor lieutenants of English capitalism paid for this by absolute passivity at the time of Austin Chamberlain's raid on ARCOS—the Soviet trade representation—which threatened to be a prelude to a war against the Soviet Union.

The Swing to Adventurism

The period of 1925 to 1929 was full of such policies and practices of the Stalinist bureaucracy. When in 1929, the course of opportunism, agreements with colonial bourgeois politicians and metropolitan labor fakers had suffered shipwreck, Stalinism reversed its tactic, but not its aim. After the ultra-Left reaction of 1928-1929, the Stalinist bureaucracy, having helped to wreck the international revolutionary movement, having helped to sell it out to the fakers and betrayers, lost all interest in it. They allied the leading posts of the Communist International with notorious incompetents who unleashed a reign of irresponsible adventurism in the ranks of the revolutionary vanguard. For the practical purposes of preserving their national-socialist utopia they began to set their hopes of Soviet defense directly on agreements with the diplomats of the foreign bourgeoisies.

On the other hand—the policy of the combination at the top with the social reformists was replaced by an ultra-Left refusal to get together with them on the most minimal questions of common action. The allies of yesterday had suddenly become "social fascists," social reformism the "twin" of Fascism. "United Front from below only," ultimatum demands of "United Front only under the leadership of the Communist party"—these were the slogans put forward by irresponsible Stalinist adventurers to split the working class in times when unity was most urgent. This was the line of policy that was combined by a national-communism—"People's revolution," "national and social liberation"—which grew directly out of the Stalinism national-socialism in Soviet Russia and which was to serve the German Communist party as an item of competition with Hitler's Fascists.

"Non-Aggression Pacts"

On the other hand, "non-aggression pacts" with various bourgeois powers, raising false hopes in the workers of peace by "scraps of paper" and supplemented by "anti-war congresses"—comedies with all kinds of individual stars: novelists, artists, free lancers who represented no one but themselves. That has been the course of Stalinism from 1929 up to the present.

The balance sheet of Comintern must be drawn today, Stalinist opportunism destroyed the great defense of the Soviet Union latent in the Chinese revolution and in Stalinist adventurism aided the German social democracy to maintain its positions of influence in the labor movement and split the working class hopelessly on the eve of Hitler's coming into power. With the Fascist destruction of the German working class vanguard, the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics loses its strongest pillar of defense in the capitalist world. The Fascist butchers now directly threaten Workers' Russia!

The Downfall of the Comintern

The defense of the Soviet Union is the most urgent task of the moment for the revolutionary workers. The Communist International, created by Lenin and Trotsky for its defense by the one realistic policy of the extension of the October revolution, has been strangled by Stalinism. For over five years congresses of the Communist International have been held. While the policies of the Soviet bureaucracy have helped to raise Hitler into power, to bring about the annihilation of the organized German working class and to isolate the Soviet Union, workers' democracy within the Communist International has been completely stifled. The greatest of crimes are committed with impunity. The internationalist fighters—Trotsky, Rakovsky and their comrades—are expelled from the ranks of the parties. The bona fide leaders of the Russian revolution, the founders of the Communist International till the Stalinist deportation camps and the places of exile.

Who will prevent the oncoming attack of the world bourgeoisie, with German Fascism in the West and Japanese militarism in the East? Who will lead in the defense of the Soviet Union ever more isolated by a ring of reactionary governments?

The Communist International of the Stalin cannot and will not do the job. National-Communism has reduced the Comintern to a hollow shell of its former self. An organization which has been poisoned by a discrediting bureaucracy, which has left a trail of frightful defeats in its wake—in China, in Germany, in Great Britain, in every country—an organization which even at this late date when danger threatens immediately, shows no signs of organizational life, whose representatives no longer gather in congresses to consider the serious questions—such an organization is hopelessly lost.

The Communist International was killed by the disease of Stalinist national-socialism. The national-socialist bureaucracy of the Soviet Union is leading the Soviet Union to catastrophe. While it has replaced revolutionary internationalism with "non-aggression pacts," the "non-aggression" French bourgeoisie is making loans to Japanese militarism and selling arms to German Fascism. The Communist International is lost. But the Soviet Union must not be lost!

Reconstitute the International Vanguard!

There is only one power in the world that can save it. That is a reconstituted vanguard of international Communist. That is a new, a Fourth International, grouping around it all those revolutionary workers who have learned the lesson of the past ten years, who genuinely want to defend the Soviet Union and who know that the only way to do it is by the extension of the October revolution. Those who were foremost in the battle lines of the Russian Revolution are today foremost in the struggle for its revolutionary defense against the impending attack. With a firm conviction, the Bolshevik-Leninists, on this day of the commemoration of the sixteenth anniversary of October revolution, proceed to the order of the day—the foundation of the new International and the new Communist parties.

The Bolshevik Heritage Must Be Preserved in the Struggle Against The Stalinist Revisionists

The end is everything. The means are nothing. With this conception Edward Bernstein led the attack of revisionism against the revolutionary doctrine of Marx and Engels. But Marxism determined that this conception of tactics and strategy of the reformists was the source of the opportunism and betrayal of the interests of the working class by its alleged leaders. This theory is reactionary, poisonous Marx. For, he said, the means determine the end. Without revolutionary tactics and strategy for the movement, the goal of socialism or communism is never reached. The crisis of the Second International, or the German social democracy at the outbreak of the World War in 1914 proved to be a catastrophic manner the views of Marx. Opportunism brought destruction and death in the wake of the masses.

Today, sixteen years after the establishment of the proletarian dictatorship and the Soviet power, the revolutionary movement is confronted once again, in another form, with the ravages and menace of the new revisionism espoused by the school of Stalin and which is properly labeled Stalinism. With the theory of socialism in one country against the theory of permanent revolution, Stalinism, in the epoch of modern monopolistic imperialism, revises fundamentally the principles and revolutionary strategy and tactic of the working class and particularly the Communists. Stalinism, professes the world revolution, but it begins by limiting its revolutionary goal to the establishment of a complete social society within the confines of the Soviet Union, and relegates the spread of the proletarian revolution to other countries as a pious and hoped-for consummation.

After the fact of a completely established socialism, Leninism, on the other hand, as taught today by its expounders, the International Left Opposition and based on decades of struggles now concretized in Bolshevik theory, says: Base the strategy of the revolutionary movement on the interests of the working class on a world scale as the best and surest means for the preservation and building of socialism in the Soviet Union. The theory of socialism in one country, therefore, is not merely an incidental polemical cry of the Left Opposition against Stalinism. It must be regarded as the root of all evils wrought in the past decade by Stalinism. It is the modern revisionism. This theory makes working class victory on either a national and international scale ever impossible.

Since the First Comintern Congress

In 1919, the Communist International was formed. It declared in its manifesto to the international proletariat: We live in an epoch of wars and social revolutions. The proletarian path is toward the speedy consummation of the latter. Fourteen years have passed since then, yet the estimation of Lenin and Trotsky, of the first Congress of the Comintern remains valid today, despite the tragic defeats of the workers in many countries. Despite all, the crisis of world capitalism exists. The situation objectively is revolutionary. What is missing are the subjective factors, genuine Communist parties, such as were being built in those early years, and a revolutionary Communist International. But these can be built again.

Revolutions, said Marx, are the locomotives of history. Locomotives sometimes are sidetracked, as Stalinism has done, but they can be placed on the rails again. That is our task.

At this day, on the occasion of the anniversary of the Russian Revolution, one need only record the manner in which Stalinism has been responsible, criminally so, for the rolling backwards of the proletarian revolution in the Soviet Union and throughout the world.

Stalinism, with its basically false social theory and consequently radically false strategy and tactics, necessarily bowed before the blue flag of the Kuo Min Tung in China. Inevitably it capitulated before the swastika of German fascism. Deliberately, in the narrow interests of Soviet diplomacy, it restrained the rising revolutionary wave in Spain. The Stalinized "Communists" ran to cover before the verbal charge of Dollfus in Austria. Stalinism surrendered to the trade union fakers in Great Britain. Everywhere it gives up the banner of Communism and drags it in the mud.

And in each case in the past decade, beginning with the formation of the Bolshevik-Leninist Opposition in the Soviet Union under Trotsky and Rakovsky, the international Left Opposition exposed Stalinism before the working class and fought for the revolutionary position.

Why Bolshevism Will Be Victorious

It is true that the Left Opposition formally has not been victorious. Stalinism had its way—organizationally. It has achieved many pyrrhic victories. For ten years now, the international Left Opposition with small forces, too few almost to mention, has stood by its principles, and like Lenin in earlier days has carried on against the stream. The international Left Opposition has demonstrated to ever increasing numbers that it has quality; its revolutionary viewpoint gave it that. Now the dialectics of the class struggle are about to transform quality into quantity. That growth and the problems arising therefrom, stand before us as the tasks of today and tomorrow. Time has verified once again our theories. These are now to be demonstrated to an ever increasing degree in the daily struggles of the working class. We are starting anew in the building of new Communist parties and a new Communist International; but we are building on an old and tested foundation and therein lies our strength. We are building on the first four Congresses of the Comintern and upon that which we have learned since in our struggles against Stalinist depredations and practices. We are passing from the stage of propaganda to the stage of agitation and organization in all fields of struggle of the working class. They lie and are wrong who say that Communism is dead. It is Stalinism that is passing. It is Communism that will rise once again.

On this, the sixteenth anniversary of the Russian Bolshevik revolution, the Communist League of America and the International Left

Leon Trotsky on the Saar Question

The stand of the official party as well as the C. P. O. (Brandenburg) in the Saar Question appears to me as the cowardice of pseudo-radicalism, as by no means rare species of cowardice. Naturally we must come out for a Soviet Saar, that is, make propaganda in the sense of the conquest of power. The date of this conquest has not, however, been fixed anywhere, while the date of the Referendum has been quite precisely in the Versailles treaty. That means that the party which fights for a Soviet Saar owes the workers an answer to the question: how they should vote in the year 1935.

To rally to Hitlerite Germany in practice, i. e., through the Referendum, means, theoretically speaking, to put national mysticism above the class interest and psychologically—to conduct a really car-like policy.

Naturally, only traitors can demand annexation at present, for that means to sacrifice the most concrete and vital question of the German workers in the Saar territory to the abstract national factor.

ADMISSION 25 CENTS

Save Dimitroff and Torgler!

A Call to Action for the Leipzig Victims of Hitlerism —Issued by the International Secretariat

The most reactionary travesty of justice of all time is coming to an end. There can be no doubt concerning the verdict. The prostitute scientists of German justice sell themselves to the devil to find objective proofs. The acquittal of Torgler means the condemnation of the real incendiaries, Hitler and Goering. Let us have no illusions, these prostitutes clad in togas will do their duty. The false legend of the Communist arson has become the ideological basis for the installation of the fascist regime of terror. The conclusions have, as a matter of fact, already been prepared. They require only the premises to tally with the conclusions. That is why Torgler, Dimitroff, Popoff and Tanef must be condemned for setting fire to the Reichstag.

In London a counter court of famous international jurists exposed the genuine scoundrels on the basis of conclusive evidence. "The Brown Book" has compiled all the material necessary to prove the innocence of Torgler and the guilt of Goering.

But the mere establishment of the true facts will not suffice unless it serves as an impulse to action. Only powerful and resolute mass action can make the truth prevail. The powerful protest of the international proletariat was galvanized by the electrocution with which American reaction executed Sacco and Vanzetti. Today Hitler rules in Central Europe with the methods of medieval tyrants. His judges pronounce and his hangmen execute one sentence of terror after another. Still the international proletariat remains silent, seems to have fallen into lethargy.

Action, immediate and effective action is necessary to stop the crazed and enraged bandits of Hitler. Torgler, Dimitroff, Popoff and Tanef must be saved. But how? In all bourgeois democratic countries and in the Soviet Union the workers must demonstrate in powerful masses, in a solid united front, besiege the German consulates and embassies and demand the liberation of the Leipzig victims. The struggle should take on even higher forms.

From all sides there has been launched the slogan of a boycott of German goods. But the results obtained up till now have been insignificant. A mere refusal to buy German goods will be nothing but a pin prick on the body of German Fascism. The boycott slogan issued by the Second International and the Amsterdam Federation of Trade Unions does not go beyond this. Even in the question of the boycott, they are concerned, in the first place, not to arouse any conflict with their own national bourgeoisie. This kind of a boycott serves very well the reactionary tendency toward autarchy in the various European bourgeoisies. The reactionary policy of "Socialism in one country" of the Stalinists has led the Third International which has become the instrument of opportunist Soviet diplomacy, to propagate the utopian "economic non-aggression pacts" instead of a resolute struggle against Fascism.

To serve as a means of support to the German proletariat, frightened by German Fascism, it is absolutely necessary to arouse the will to struggle of the international proletariat. The transport workers, by their refusal to service German boats, have already shown how the struggle should be carried on. Such actions should be organized and extended by a united front. The railroad workers and the maritime workers should be rallied around it. To save the innocent victims of the Leipzig trial, the international proletariat must become the prosecutor of Fascism which is a thousand times gullier!

"If my signature is of any value by way of protest or demand I am ready to append same, and I count it my duty to continue to develop opinion till it shall be equal to demanding and securing the release of our comrades."

(Signed TOM MANN)

Tom Mann for the Defense of Chen Du Sin

On Sept. 7th, 1933, the organ of our British comrades, the Red Flag, addressed an open letter to Tom Mann, old trade union militant and veteran of many labor struggles in the British Empire, asking him his stand on the imprisonment of comrade Chen Du Sin, founder of the Chinese Communist Party and secretary of the Chinese section of the Left Opposition until his incarceration. The Stalinists have cynically ignored comrade Chen Du Sin, criminally abandoning him to the hangmen of the Kuo Min Tung and covering this stalwart revolutionary with abuse and infamy. The following letter speaks for the class loyalty of Tom Mann, his undivided devotion to the proletariat as a whole and not in the interests of any faction in it.—Ed.

"Dear Comrade, I have read the letter addressed to me which appears in the Red Flag. When in China in 1927 I attended the opening of the Chinese Communist Party Congress at Hankow, and I considered comrade Chen Du Sin and his colleagues a capable and courageous body of comrades. When the arrests and imprisonments followed I have on many occasions at public gatherings emphatically protested against the imprisonment and demanded the release of all class war prisoners.

When the bus taking Shachtman from New York to his first meeting in Montreal rolled up in front of the Canadian customs building in Phillipsburg, it was mounted by the official who examined the passengers and their papers. Shachtman produced his passport. As soon as the examiner was finished with all the passengers, not one of whom was in any way detained, he requested Shachtman without a word of explanation, to accompany him to his office in the customs building. There the cross-examination began. It was evident right from the outset that the questions were part of a purely perfunctory procedure, for the decision to prohibit Shachtman from entering Canada and obviously been arrived at long before the bus came to Canada.

While the questioning was being commenced, the officer was already writing out the deportation order!

Bar Shachtman from Canada

League Organizer, on Speaking Tour, Refused Admittance by Border Authorities

Carrying their drive against the revolutionary movement to the point of surveillance at ports of entry for the purpose of keeping out speakers scheduled for meetings in the country, the Canadian authorities at the border town of Phillipsburg, Province of Quebec, ordered the deportation of Max Shachtman from Canada last Wednesday with an injunction against any attempt he might make to enter the country at any other point.

Shachtman had been scheduled to speak at meetings arranged in Montreal and Toronto by the local branches of the Communist League of America on the occasion of the sixteenth anniversary of the Russian revolution. Every indication—particularly the huge meeting recently held in Toronto with Arne Swabeck as the speaker—pointed to a large turnout of the local militants to listen to the views of the Opposition. As appeared later, the Canadian authorities were not unaware of these indications.

When the bus taking Shachtman from New York to his first meeting in Montreal rolled up in front of the Canadian customs building in Phillipsburg, it was mounted by the official who examined the passengers and their papers. Shachtman produced his passport. As soon as the examiner was finished with all the passengers, not one of whom was in any way detained, he requested Shachtman without a word of explanation, to accompany him to his office in the customs building. There the cross-examination began. It was evident right from the outset that the questions were part of a purely perfunctory procedure, for the decision to prohibit Shachtman from entering Canada and obviously been arrived at long before the bus came to Canada.

Shachtman's coat, hat and bag were meanwhile being removed from the bus. After a few vague, formal questions, the officer adopted a tack which showed that he was exceptionally well informed about everything connected with the trip. He first took a heavy folder from a filing cabinet, turned to a page which he kept concealed from Shachtman and asked his questions and heard the answers with his eyes fixed upon what was unmistakably a police report.

When Shachtman declared that he was going to lecture in Canada, the official asked if he knew a Mr. So-and-so, naming one of the comrades in charge of the Montreal meeting? He showed the same intimate knowledge with regard to the meeting scheduled in Toronto. His whole bearing, and the replies he made to the pointed questions by Shachtman, left no doubt whatsoever about his intentions to execute the order he had received from authorities higher up.

Shachtman's request to know the reasons for his summary deportation was answered by passing to him a copy of the "Order for Deportation", which had already been given to the bus driver together with the confiscated ticket. It read in its main part:

"This is to certify that the rejected person above named, a person seeking to enter Canada at this Port ex Bus from New York, N. Y. which arrived at this Port on November 1st, 1933 at 9:30 o'clock A. M. has this day been examined by the Board of Inquiry (or officer in charge) at this Port and has been rejected for the following reasons: Sec. 2 H (4), Can. Immig. Act and Regulations. And the said rejected person is hereby ordered to be deported to the place from whence he

THE WORKERS' FRONT

N.Y. Optical Workers Out on Strike

Five hundred optical workers in New York City went on strike October 23, 1933, under the guidance of the International Jewelry Workers' Union with which they are affiliating. A cut in wages of from 24 to 27% having accompanied a shortening of hours provided by the N.Y. code together with the dismissal of active union men precipitated the tie-up of eighteen of the largest shops in Greater New York.

Organizational activities in both the metal frame and celluloid sections of the trade were begun the middle of August this year, neither section knowing of the activities of the other at the time. Optical workers being highly skilled, this is an exception to the general rule in the present wave of organization of the unorganized, as unskilled are primarily the ones affected. The two sections of the trade have been united and the plans are to spread the strike.

Their demands are for the 1929 wage level which ranges from $18 per week for glass fitters' helpers to $70 per week for sample makers with $40 to $50 for the majority of workers, for recognition of the union, and for reinstatement of the dismissed union men. Their wage demand being above the specifications of the code and their present wages being below the code level the strike is directed against both the N.Y. and the bosses.

Stalinist Unionism in Philadelphia

Philadelphia.—The T. U. U. L. has just completed two of their light-hearted adventures in trade unionism here in the northeast section of Philadelphia.

They were successful in organizing and taking out on strike for 6 weeks the Fetter Rope Co., a shop with several hundred workers, and the Iellwig Silk Dyeing Co., a shop with over 400 workers. After "successfully" combating the "red scare" and holding the workers together through six grueling weeks of struggle and deprivation, both shops are back at work now for several weeks, under settlements reached through "independent unions". These are apparently company unions, started by the bosses to break up the National Textile Workers' Union, unions which the bosses intend to control through their henchmen, the foremen. T. U. U. L. has vanished into thin air.

When the so-called independent unions were starting to win over the workers on the basis that they could get them the same increases the N. T. W. was fighting for, the N. T. W. did nothing—worse still, they told the workers to sign over one by one into the other unions, and today the bosses' men have full sway in those two "independent unions".

The organization of these two shops was loudly hailed by the T. U. U. L. as a vindication of their absurd policy of "new revolutionary unions" in this third period of post-war capitalism. "Of course," the workers are ready for revolutionary unions—they know we are Communists", at least so they said in the "inner circles" of the Party. But among the workers in the daily struggle, they combated the Communist issue by going on the hunt with these masses of prejudiced workers for Communists.

"You don't know any Communists in this union," they said. One party member was instructed to deny he was a Communist. By every twist and turn they try to fly in the face of reality and prove that the workers are ready for revolutionary unions. And the dead weight of the workers' unemployment in the class struggle gives lie, time and again, to their absurd policies. They learn nothing from defeat and continue, light-heartedly and carefree, to discredit the Communist movement.

To sum up briefly the blunders of the N. T. W. U. on the Hellig strike particularly: (1) Calling the strike adventuristically, after only a couple of weeks of organization with only about 150 to prior to going on strike, leaving the women workers to negotiate for themselves and then cutting the strike solely over the question of a 5c raise for the women workers. (2) Opportunism in hunting for Communists as though they were criminals. Also fostering illusions about the N.Y. giving the workers the "right to organize". (4) Giving the workers grandiose promises of assistance from their paper organization the W. I. R. prior to going on strike. (5) Deserting the workers when the majority were won away from their leadership.

Striking Cotton Pickers Murdered in Cold Blood

Deliberate cold-blooded murder is the description given by attorney A. L. Wirin of the Civil Liberties Union after a four-days' investigation of the shootings in the San Joaquin Valley, Calif., during the cotton pickers' strike. Two Mexican strikers were shot and killed at Pixley and one at Arvin, a score have been injured, many seriously.

Violence was carefully planned before the strike was called, according to attorney Wirin. Itanachers, anticipating trouble organized vigilante groups, "committees of protection", which had for their object the breaking of the threatened strike. Cotton growers, so-called ranchers, were armed. It was agreed, according to the Union's report, that the workers who participated in the strike were to be threatened and terrorized into returning to work, that those who refused were to be driven wholesale out of the cotton area. All this in a program which called for the starving of the strikers and their families, and for the lynching of all "outside agitators".

JUST RECEIVED! OCTOBER RUSSIAN BULLETIN

The October issue of the BULLETIN OF THE RUSSIAN OPPOSITION has just arrived. It contains a very important article on THE CLASS NATURE OF THE SOVIET UNION. There are articles by comrade Trotsky and letters from the U. S. S. R. Subscriptions are $2.50 a year; $1.25 for 6 months, 25c single issues. There are only a few copies of this issue and comrades wishing to obtain copies should immediately write for same. Money must be sent with order.

Comrades out of town are asked to get in touch with bookstores and newsstands selling papers in the Russian language and see whether they can get them to sell the Bulletin. Please get in touch with comrade Spiegel. —K. S.

Swaback Tour Itinerary

Successful and rousing meetings have greeted comrade Arne Swaback on his national tour. Reports from Springfield, Staunton, Ill., St. Louis, Kansas City and Minneapolis will appear in subsequent issues of the Militant. The tour is now drawing to a close with the following remaining dates:

Thurs., Nov. 7th...Chicago 11l.

Fri., Nov. 9th...Dayton, Pa.

Fri., Nov. 10th...Dayton, Pa.

Militant Builders

As we approach the close of the week twenty-two more went to swell our list. That is less than the week before. But it is to be hoped that it is only the brief slackening of pace that runners take before the final sprint down the home stretch. We expect that in next week's issue we will be able to report a much larger figure. As it stands now the total number of subs since the drive opened is 102. The race is getting interesting. It is by no means a one-sided affair. The standing shows that.

The Standing:
S. Jourard	Toronto 8
S. Hardy	Philadelphia 7
M. Abern	Bronx 6
V. R. Dunne	Minneapolis 5
G. Hedlund	Minneapolis 4
L. Goodman	Philadelphia 3
W. Konikow	Boston 3
J. Carter	Brooklyn 3
J. Fruitman	Toronto 3
C. Sheehy	Boston 3
L. Furman	San Francisco 3
L. Furman	San Francisco 2
M. Schlenoff	Bronx 2
J. Chikolovitz	Boston 2
F. Eikelberger	New Castle 2
M. Kent	Brooklyn 2
H. Capells	Manhattan 2
N. Sahr	Chicago 2

In addition to the comrades listed above who have sent in two subs there are nine listed in previous reports. And there are thirteen comrades who have sent in one sub. And there are twenty-two sent in by the Youngstown comrades.

Double the Record

In the time remaining we want to double the record made so far in the drive. A hundred subs are not much for our membership and sympathizers. As a matter of fact it is a modest goal. If we go to it with a will it should be easy. Let us prove it.

There is still opportunity to overtake the leaders and win one of the prizes: for first place—Three volumes of the History of the Russian Revolution by comrade Trotsky; second place—two volumes; third place—one volume.

"A Century of Progress"

The mental poison of the propaganda that the last 100 years has been a century of steady, visible improvement in the lot of humanity is paralleled only by the real poison that has killed workers in industry 100 years ago and today. Under the headline "22nd Worker Dies of Industrial Poison", the New York Times of Oct. 28 carries the following news item:

"East Orange, N. J., Miss Grace Fryer, 35 years old, the twenty-second victim of radium poisoning in the old Orange plant of the United States Radium Corporation, died this morning in Homeopathic Hospital here...."

"Miss Fryer, along with the other victims of the poisoning, was employed in the watch dial painting department, where many of the workers contracted the poisoning by painting luminous paint brushes with their tongues."

"Miss Fryer contracted the poison about fourteen years ago. However, until five years ago she was able to continue working, but she had to wear a brace on her back because the poison affected her bones...."

For those workers who believe, in spite of this, that we have really witnessed a century of progress we turn the scene back 100 years, change the place from New Jersey to England, the women to children and the watch factory to a match factory.

"The manufacture of lucifer matches dates from 1833, from the discovery of the method of applying phosphorus to the match itself. Since 1845 this manufacture has rapidly developed in England, and has extended especially amongst the thickly populated parts of London as well as in Manchester, Liverpool, Bristol, Norwich, Newcastle and Glasgow. With it has spread the form of lockjaw, which a Vienna physician in 1845 discovered to be a disease peculiar to lucifer matchmakers. Half the workers are children under eighteen. The manufacture is, on account of its unhealthiness and unpleasantness, in such bad odour that only the most miserable part of the labouring class, half-starved widows and so forth, deliver up their children to it, the ragged, half-starved, untalented children."

"Of the witnesses that Commissioner White examined (1893), 270 were under 18, 50 under 10 only 8, and 5 only 6 years old. A range of the working day from 12 to 14 or 15 hours, night-labour, irregular meal times, meals for the most part taken in the very workrooms that are pestilent with phosphorus. Dante would have found the worst horrors of his Inferno surpasses in this manufacture."

An Open Letter to Browder: On Hooliganism

HOOIGANISM IN CHICAGO

To the Central Committee
Communist Party of the U.S.A.
Earl Browder, Secretary

Dear Sir:

Last Sunday afternoon, October 22, I attended a meeting of the Left Opposition in their own headquarters, called under their own auspices, at which comrade Arne Swaback was scheduled to speak on Germany. Before the meeting could start, a horde of some 250 "Communists"—members of Section 5, District 8—invaded the hall under the leadership of their Section Organizer, Jack Spiegel, and of a member of the District Committee, David Pindexter. On their own admission, they had come fresh from mobilization caucuses for the express purpose of breaking up the meeting. They precipitated a riot in which literature and furniture were destroyed, workers were beaten up and trampled upon, and such a commotion developed that the police came into the hall from the street.

I have been in the revolutionary movement all my life and have participated in many demonstrations, some of them bloody and brutal, but I have never felt that I was facing so vicious and irresponsible and anti-social a mob as the one which came last Sunday under the banner of the Communist party.

I wonder if you as a leader of the Communist Party realize all that such a thing means? A party which conducts itself in the manner of the most degraded section of the very lumpen-proletariat—plus from the decayed and degenerate body of a rotting social system—can neither win healthy elements to its ranks nor lead the revolution when the moment arrives; on the contrary, it must become a feeder of Fascist forces. A party which cannot raise the intellectual and moral level of the proletariat but on the contrary trains fine elements down to the depth of gangsters has no right to use the name Communist.

Is it too much for you and your party to learn that a meeting of workers, come together to hear anyone at all, must not under any circumstances be physically attacked and broken up? Or is the anticipation that you can only hope to impress the American proletariat this way since you have so signally failed to impress them ideologically?

Several months ago, I severed my connection with the Communist party (after twelve years of membership) over occurrences in Germany. At that time I stated that the excuse offered by the C. P. that the German party was not rooted in the factories needed further explanation because a party can only be a really functioning Communist party when its composition is mainly of the working proletariat. Maybe last Sunday's event throws some light on the question. If the leadership of the German party trained its members not to win other workers by ideological conviction but by destroying the meetings they organized and hoped to conduct, then a revolutionist knows why the Communist party of Germany was not "rooted in the masses."

Sincerely,
LYDIA BEIDEL.

Militant Resentment Against Fakers in the Pocketbook Union

In October 14 issue of the Militant the writer gave an analysis about the present situation in the Pocketbook Makers Union. Now I will describe what took place for the last two weeks in our union. As I have stated in the Militant, our "Fraternal Club" administration did not call a membership meeting for about four months. On October 19 they called a meeting at Stuyvesant High School, about two thousand workers were present to this meeting. The purpose of this meeting was to force a $10 tax on the workers to the ten percent tax dues they already took for months from the members without their approval.

When our manager Stein, gave his report and tried his best to show what wonders he and his gang are doing for the workers in one town after another. The workers did pay any attention to his report. He finished his report with an appeal for a $10 tax in order to enlarge the staff of organizers. The membership accepted his appeal very coldly. The administration felt they will have a hard job to put over the tax, so they became desperate. Then another star came forward and gave a report, this was Louis Waldman, of the S. P. and lawyer of the union. His report dealt with the Code. He showed how the Industrial Council, with whom the union has an agreement refused to draw up a joint code with the union to present at Washington. After he, and the union officials maneuvered for months with the bosses. The employers support the open shop code for $12-$18 a week, and refused to raise wages, or reduce hours. In spite of the fact we are working 40 hours a week, and over 2,000 workers are idle in New York. He concluded that the code will have to be fought out in Washington, instead of mobilizing the workers for a fight with the employers.

As soon as Waldman finished his speech, one of the organizers Harry Kestine, who was one to keep order in the hall started a fight with a worker. The worker later he was beaten up because he refused at a shop meeting of Morris White shop to vote for the ten dollar tax. This shows the kind of organizers we have and for whom the "Fraternal Club" gang wants a $10 tax. When the fight started a riot call was given by the superintendent of the hall. Within a few minutes, about 25 police came into the meeting place. If the police had not come in people would have been injured and trampled to death. Then the workers refused to meet with the slugs and demanded those who started the fight should leave the hall. Under such circumstances it was impossible to continue the meeting. All realized that including Waldman. The "Fraternal Club" chairman adjourned the meeting. Waldman had a chance to see how organizers in a socialist union behave, and what democracy means in a socialist union.

The next day the "Yellow Forward", which defends all labor racketeers came out with a three column headline "Communists Break Up Pocketbook Workers Meeting." The "Fraternal Club" gang knew the workers would not vote for the tax so they provoked a fight in order to break up the meeting. The underworld will be better organized for the next meeting. If our manager Stein, could break up a section meeting, why can not one of his organizers make a better job and break up a membership meeting?

It is significant for the Pocketbook Workers to know that 3 weeks ago the so-called fake progressives called a symposium and David Myer, in his speech said the "Fraternal Club" administration are crooks, and traitors, and must be ousted from the union. David Myer, and the other fakers declared themselves in love to the "Rank and File", and talked about united front with the "Rank and File" to oust the administration. Two weeks later the same fake progressives who divided the union with the "Fraternal Club" a few months ago again voted at the Joint Council meeting for a $10 tax not as delegates of the council, but as paid officials which they could not vote. Moreover, Brok, one of their fakers signed a statement in the Day, that the Communists broke up the meeting. Let this be a warning to the rank and file that these fakers must be severely attacked till they will be forced to break with the administration.

On October 26, another meeting of the Pocketbook Makers Union took place at Stuyvesant High School. The manager of the union, Stein, reported that the administration was not able to proceed with his work unless it got another $10 tax added to the ten percent tax it already collected from the workers.

A heated discussion on the $10 tax followed. Rank and file speakers, one after another, attacked the administration. They showed that the administration is not doing anything to improve the conditions of the workers in New York and out of town. They also pointed out that the administration did not make any attempt to relieve the unemployment situation in our industry. The Left wing urged the workers to vote down the ten dollar tax.

After a two hour battle on the floor a vote was taken. The teller's count was as follows: for the tax, 572 votes; against the tax, 428 votes. The fake progressives, as usual voted with the administration.

The rank and file must concentrate all its energies on ousting the "Fraternal Club" administration.

"Five Cents a Bar..."

The next time you stop to buy a bar of Hershey's chocolate stop to think a minute about the Cuban workers slaving on Hershey's plantations, railroads and mills. Here is some information you want find on the wrapper.

"The Hershey sugar refinery is the largest on the island (of Cuba) and is one of the most modern and best equipped in the world."

"Its melting capacity is one million pounds of sugar per day. Its output is a very superior grade of granulated sugar, put up in bags of five, one hundred and three hundred and twenty-five pounds which are sold for export as well as for local consumption." (The dock workers in Cuba went on strike last summer against the unbearable weights of these bags.)

"The development of the Hershey holdings in Cuba and the rapid increase in them are remarkable. Beginning in 1916 with the purchase of ten thousand acres and the leasing of another ten thousand acres—the total acreage owned and controlled (today) is one hundred and thirteen thousand acres."

"In addition to the sugar properties, the Hershey interests in Cuba include the Hershey Cuban Railway and the Hershey Terminal Railroad."

"The Hershey Cuban Railway is a modern public service line between the cities of Havana and Matanzas. It is electrified throughout, power being supplied from a large and modern electric plant at Central Hershey (Central means plantation. Incidentally this power plant supplies all of the current for the city of Matanzas and the numerous small towns in the vicinity of Central Hershey." (The Cuban Review, February 1927.)

Compared to some of the American railroads "interested" in Cuba, like the Chase National Bank, the Hershey company is a piker. The same capitalists grind the Cuban and American workers down to a coolie level of existence. Together they can put an end to it.

Rousing Meeting Aids Drive to Organize Restaurant Workers

New York.—The Hotel and Restaurant Workers Union, Branch of the Amalgamated Food Workers of America, has intensified its organizational drive during the last two weeks.

As we reported in the Militant for October 21, the bosses are eager to defeat this drive by resorting to the well-known scabbing machinery—that is, the formation of a company union. Besides the Geneva Club, they have attempted, quite unsuccessfully, to line up through their agents, the chefs, the Vatel Club. At a meeting of this club held on October 19, the executive committee attempted to pass a motion concerning the formation of a Federation.

This Federation scheme is an attempt of the Hotel Men's Ass'n. to amalgamate the various language fraternities of cooks and waiters into one body, in order to establish a company union. Eighty-nine percent of the Vatel Club members voted down this motion and every other motion of the executive committee because it was plain to all members that these motions were aimed toward the formation of a company union.

Our union immediately issued a leaflet to the International Cooks Association (German Cooks) informing its members what took place in the Vatel Club and warned them that a similar attempt will be made by their Executive Committee. A minority committee of the Geneva Club is busy explaining to the members the scabbing role of their leaders.

In view of these developments the Executive Board, the Organization Committee and the Officers of the Union are working in full speed in educating the members of the Union and activating them in order to bring to its ranks every worker employed in the Hotels. Already a good beginning towards a real industrial union has been made. Many housemen, chambermaids, laundrywomen, etc., have entered the organization.

For the benefit of those Hotel and Restaurant Workers who were unable to attend the three afternoon mass meetings the Union held an Evening Meeting last Friday, October 20th at Bryant Hall. The hall was packed. Organizers Constant and Lyons spoke about the activities of the Union and Delegates from the Waldorf and Lincoln Hotels spoke about the kitchen and dining room infernos. Comrades Cannon and Gitlow spoke for the necessity of unionism. Their speeches were frequently interrupted by stormy applause.

The Union is planning to acquire a large new headquarters where mass meetings and shop meetings will be held.

Due to lack of space we have been forced to withhold several important articles. One by Albert Gitlow on the "Two Internationals", a communication from comrade Harry Strang on the "Boycott of Hitler Germany", as well as a story by comrade Kogan of L. A. on Soviet diplomacy.

CANNON SPEAKS AT NEWARK

Newark.—On Thursday, Oct. 26, comrade Cannon spoke in Newark on the need for a new party and international.

Early in the day one of our comrades reported that party members were ordered to boycott our meeting. Comrade Cannon's talk was unusually well received and the numerous questions kept the alert and attentive until 11:45.

STATEMENT ON THE UNITED FRONT ANTI-FASCIST DEMONSTRATION

At a time when Fascism is commencing its brazen recruiting campaign in America, when the degenerate elements of a capitalist system torn by four years of crisis talk of instituting here the same bloody regime that has conquered in Italy and in Germany, it is extremely urgent that every working class organization learn the importance of participating in force in every single anti-Fascist action or demonstration. Such demonstrations form the preliminary groundwork for the establishment of a broad anti-fascist working class united front against Fascism. Precisely because of the importance of this movement toward united action of the workers, through their organizations, against a threat that may gather impetus at tremendous speed, it is necessary to condemn those organizations that give perfunctory lip-service to the cause but actually sabotage it.

The call of the Italian Unitarian Anti-Fascist Committee for the demonstration before the Italian Consulate on Saturday, October 28th was answered by the Communist Party, the I. W. O., the C.P.A., the J. W. O., the Socialist party and the Communist League of America (Left Opposition). All agreed to participate. Nevertheless, aside from a large banner of the I. W. O. and one or two delegates from each of the organizations, none of them took any part in the "mass" meeting and parade, outside of the L. A. (O.). Meager as are our present forces, we nevertheless formed the bulk of the demonstration.

The sabotage of the official Communist party must be vigorously denounced. It is in line with the Stalinist tactic of ignoring any working class action not under its direct and immediate control. The sabotage of this demonstration is also in line with the official party's quiescence motivated by the desire not to embarrass the recognition negotiations between the U. S. and the Soviet Union.

The Socialist party follows its usual conduct of avoiding any militant intervention in this or any other phase of the class struggle. It is too busy at this moment seeking municipal offices in the elections. No doubt if a few socialist aldermen are elected, they will see to it that Fascism is interdicted in America....

We cannot over-emphasize the gravity of the situation unfolding in the C. S. It has every potentiality of danger for the working class in the rise of Fascism. There will be further occasions in the profound and increasing struggles ahead for the establishing of a real united front against Fascism. We appeal to the workers in all working class organizations to give their whole-hearted support to this movement. At no distant period it may become a matter of life and death.

—New York City Committee Communist League of America (Left Opposition).

YOUNG SPARTACUS SUB DRIVE

The subscription campaign for the YOUNG SPARTACUS is on! Our goal is the doubling of our subscription list, the stabilization of the paper and a semi-monthly YOUNG SPARTACUS in the near future. The closing date of the drive is December 1st.

The YOUNG SPARTACUS has proven to be our best organizer. We must save the paper so that we can go ahead with our work. Up to now we have been compelled to function with very little funds. The paper was unable to appear regularly and this was a great shortcoming in our work. Unless we can raise the necessary funds for the paper, it will remain in danger. Let us seriously take up the task and make the drive a success so that our YOUNG SPARTACUS may continue its existence as the propagandist and organizer of a youth Communist movement in this country.

YOUNG SPARTACUS lays down the challenge to the Spartacus Youth Clubs. It is up to you! You can decide whether we are going to expand our paper or not. Get after expired subs! Get new subs! Every member of the Spartacus Youth Club a subscriber! Every member to get at least one sub! To the club getting the highest average in this campaign will be given a bronze relief of Lenin.

The drive is under way. So far the score stands as follows:

New York $1.00
Chicago 3.00
St. Louis .75

This is only the beginning. Let's go! Send subs to:

The Growing Dissatisfaction of the Middle Classes

Only the fanatics of the Nazi movement are satisfied with the government. There are a few others, but they are the ones who lounge in the chairs of ejected trade union bureaucrats, those who make the streets unsafe every day in their capacity as Fascist factory cell directors, as bonzes (swivel chair bureaucrats) of the Consumers' Cooperatives, walking about in natty uniforms. They have much to do. They must speak at factory meetings, threaten the unorganized with firing if they don't join the Brown Trade unions, see to it that membership dues are paid regularly, because the Third Reich needs a lot of money.

That can also be seen on the Sunday collection tours. There is the Beggar for the Adolf Hitler Fund, for the Work Creation Fund, the Party Convention Fund and many others. At the same time a press campaign is in full swing against the mendicants. The ordinary citizen pays for the first fund rather generously, but when the second and third come along, he begins to grumble. Of course, he is not alone. That is too dangerous and means prison in the Third Reich. Not to give is also very dangerous. He is a foe of the government who does not drop a coin into its alms-bag. One has to give. The press reports that this or that factory has made a voluntary contribution. But woe to the worker who fails to contribute. On the next morning he will be pounding the pavements. There are plenty of Storm Troopers and their friends to take his place.

Often some person from North Germany comes down our way in search of work. In most cases, such a person has seen in some paper, which he draws out from his pocket, that the region here is cleared of unemployment. He is soon enlightened. The swindle of the "Successful Battle to Provide Work" is easily exposed before every worker. In the factories there is a great deal of underground grumbling, especially on pay day, when the Nazi "coordinators" make all kinds of deductions from the pay envelope.

The middle layers of the population are also beginning to sober up. The great and almost unlimited faith in Hitler among these people received its first blow through the behavior of the government with regard to the department stores and the consumers' cooperatives. The feigned struggle of Hitler against both of these institutions had brought him the sympathies of all the small storekeepers. But after all their independent fighting organizations have been dissolved and reorganized into professional troops, many of these good little men, storekeepers and artisans, have seen the light. Then, of course, there is the failure of the boastfully promised economic upturn. The daily business turnover does not increase when the workers' wages remain stable, and especially when the wages are reduced by all kinds of "fund" rackets. In the meantime prices keep mounting. Certain local catastrophes also contribute their part to the sentiment. There is the case of the big Stuttgart Gymnasium Field Day, or that of the huge demonstration at the border, near Konstanz. The subconsciously ordered all kinds of extra stock, but the Reichswehr moved on with field kitchens and served participants and tourists with 10 pfennig means and thus nearly bankrupted the former. Naturally the sentiment of the middle classes is becoming more unsympathetic every day.

The tax situation has also remained the same. All sorts of new taxes and imposts have been fixed on the peasants and the middle classes. Municipal taxes have been imposed with which to pay for the newly ordered steel helmets which the Storm Troopers are wearing. Soon, no doubt, new taxes will be thought up with which to buy them guns and cannon from the hard-earned pennies of workers and small bourgeois.

We have succeeded, in a whole series of localities, in forming groups of former social democrats and Communists. Our material meets with spontaneous applause and approval. The will to learn from the mistakes of the two old parties who brought about the present heavy defeat, and, in spite of all the great difficulties, to proceed with the building of new, genuine Communist party—exists among all the comrades. The comrades are also agreed among themselves that the same road will have to be taken internationally. The Paris Conference is regarded by all as a hopeful beginning for a new era of the revolutionary labor movement.

Since we only attract reliable people and go about our work as cautiously as possible we have not had up to now any losses whatever. We know that the process of the disintegration of the mass basis of Fascism can last for a long time. Even the most die-hard Stalinist no longer believes in revolution for October. But the fact remains that the process of Fascist disintegration is making progress in all the cities. But the immense pressure of the terroristic regime will yet prolong the existence of the Hitler government. We therefore have plenty of time to build up and to entrench our young organization. Parallel with the decline in the mass influence of Fascism, the influence and the strength of our organization must grow. If this process continues at the present rate, then Fascism will become within a relatively short time, a pure police-bureaucratic regime, divorced from the working population and the middle classes and regarded as such by the latter. After that stage, when the sentiments of the masses become transformed into direct hostility to the Hitler regime, we will have to succeed in giving the mass struggle direction and objective, in removing from it every disorienting influence.

From Westphalia

The C. P. G.—Its activity restricts itself in the main to dues collection. At rare intervals mimeographed leaflets or a paper are issued. If these publications did not contain a slogan near the end calling for affiliation to the C. P. G., one would think they were issued by indifferent workers. So devoid are they of political guidance. Less than 10 percent of the party nuclei meet at all. There is no party member now who will claim that the party's policy at the time of Hitler's coming into power was correct. They recognize the guilt of the bureaucracy, but are not yet clear wherein the error lay. We hope to clear up this confusion about the "general line" with our propaganda material. Most of the party members are convinced that a new leadership is necessary. Functionaries often refuse to distribute the literature that comes from the center—not out of cowardice, but because of the "non-sense" and the "bull" which is "handed out" in it. There are some however, who say: better rotten stuff than nothing at all, they distribute material which they themselves will not take seriously.

The C. P. O. (Brandenburg)—Their local group have directed a written protest to their national leadership against the "general line" methods contained in the article "Against Trotskyite Liquidationism" (which appeared in June issue of their central organ (Gegen den Strom). In this protest they say that with such stupid remarks as in the article one cannot and should not carry on politically against the Trotskyists. If Trotsky represents a false point of view, it is necessary to criticize objectively, without sinking in the level of "line loyalty" (Stalinism).

British Labour Party Masks Support to Capitalism at Annual Conference

Edinburgh.—Six hundred delegates, representing Divisional Labour Parties, trade unions and Socialist bodies, were in attendance at the annual conference of the British Labour Party held at Haddington in the first week of October. Since the General Election disaster of 1931, when the masses expressed their disgust at the treachery of the Labour Government by swinging over to the Conservatives, the Executive of the Party have been busy upon the production of a new programme calculated to give the impression that the passing of Ramsay MacDonald has opened up a new era in the history of the Labour Party and that it has passed from its Liberal-Labour stage to one of complete Socialism. In this task, the Executive has been embarrassed by the cautious trade unions on the one hand and by the somewhat careless statements of the Socialist League upon the other.

The trade unions dislike "left" phrases which tend to endanger their craft interests while the leaders of the Socialist League, composed of lawyers, journalists and middle-class intellectuals, glory in the use of words which have been culled from the text-books of their Austrian "Marxist" friends. As previously reported in the Militant, the Labour Party Executive has warned the Socialist League against the too dangerous play with the dictatorship question, and the League was now bringing its proposals to the floor of the Conference, a battle royal was expected. But as will be revealed below, the Executive held their hand in the interests of unity.

Fritz Adler Speaks

Before the opening of the Conference the assembled delegates were addressed by Doctor Fritz Adler, who declared on behalf of the Austrian Social Democrats that "concentration camps are being prepared for Socialists in Austria, but we will call for a general strike if the trade unions are banned or if the Social Democratic Party is made illegal." This statement was loudly cheered by the delegates who later passed a resolution pledging support to the Austrian Socialists in their struggle against Fascism. In opening the Conference, the chairman, Mr. Compston, also warned the delegates against the danger of Fascism but apart from vague statements upon the desire of the workers' movement to maintain democracy, there was no mention of any policy calculated to defeat Fascism. Having aired their views upon Fascism, the Conference then got down to business and first ruled out an emergency resolution upon the Leipzig trial and then banned a list of Communist organizations such as the Anti-War Council upon the grounds that they were being used to disrupt the Labour Party.

A Record of Progress on the Road Towards the Reconstitution of the Revolutionary Vanguard of the World Proletariat

The Revolutionary Socialist Party of Holland joins the International Left Opposition.

On September 21, the Plenum of the International Left Opposition decided to accept the request of the R. S. P. (Revolutionary Socialist Party of Holland) for affiliation with the I. L. O. The R. S. P. was founded in 1929. Its fundamental line of policy coincides in the main with its declaration of principles in 1932, which bears a distinctly Communist character.

There are 950 members on its rolls who are grouped together in some 30 local organizations. The party stands in closest contact with the N. A. S., a trade union center with 25,000 enrolled members. Both organizations are headed by comrade H. Sneevliet.

H. Sneevliet is not an unknown figure in the international Communist movement, particularly because of the revolutionary activity he displayed even before the war, and during the war, in the Far East. The R. S. P. has been publishing a weekly paper, Baanbrecker, ever since its inception. It has a circulation of 3,000.

It is interesting to observe the development of the party as reflected in the parliamentary elections. In 1929 the party received 21,000 votes and no mandate. In 1931, in the provincial elections covering 3 provinces, it received 20,000 votes and 2 mandates. In the same year, during the municipal elections in 50 localities, it received 31,000 votes and 12 representatives. In the parliamentary elections of 1933, H. Sneevliet, who at the time was imprisoned for his energetic defense of the martyrs of "Seven Provinces" (The reference is to the revolutionary sailors who participated in the "mutiny" of one of the vessels of the Dutch merchant marine—Ed.), was elected to parliament with 48,000 votes.

Since the summer of 1932, the R. S. P. has been working together in united front action with the O. S. P. (the Independent Socialist Party of Holland). The development within the O. S. P. which led to their signing the common declaration of the Four Organizations (I. L. O., S. A. P.—German Socialist Workers Party—R. S. P. and O. S. P.) at the Paris Conference, presage a unification of R. S. P. and O. S. P. in the immediate future.

The I. L. O. extends warm greetings to the R. S. P. entering its ranks. It means the addition of a large corps of tested proletarian fighters to our cause and makes possible the further extension and penetration of the ideas of the Bolshevik-Leninists.

THOUSANDS OF DUTCH WORKERS HAIL THE NEW INTER- NATIONAL

In the Independent Socialist Party of Holland (O. S. P.) which had 7,000 members on its rolls, the participation in the building of the new international has been unanimously accepted by the Executive.

All of the discussion on the Paris Conference and the alliance with Trotsky has raised a deep interest outside the ranks of the party.

The joint meeting of the Executive Committees of the O. S. P. and the Revolutionary Socialist Party (Sneevliet) has yielded as its first result, the decision for close collaboration in all phases of working class policy. Moreover, the joint meeting accepted the principle of the necessity of fusing the two organizations into one revolutionary party. At the next congress, which is to convene in the Christmas interval, definite proposals for fusion will be voted on. It is the first attempt in many years to create real revolutionary unity. It has already aroused great enthusiasm, as is apparent from the many successful mass meetings held all over the country.

The Baanbrecker, organ of the R. S. P., carries an account of the joint meeting of the two organizations held in Amsterdam as a reply to the Fascist demonstration. The hall taken was much too small. Two meetings had to be held and hundreds of workers had to be turned away. An exceptional acclaim greeted the speeches of Sneevliet, Schmidt, Schip and Pikhshorn, who traced the course of the proposed new international.

In Belgium Our Belgian comrades have entered negotiations with the League of Communist Internationalists for the fusion of the two organizations as basis for the creation of a new Communist party.

FOR A NEW REVOLUTIONARY YOUTH INTERNATIONAL

A call for an international congress of all revolutionary youth organizations to consider the problems of the formation of an international vanguard of the working class youth has been sent out by the youth organization of the Revolutionary Socialist Party of Holland, to be held in Amsterdam on December 9 and 10.

Most of the youth organizations invited to this conference are connected in some way to the Paris Conference of last August. These organizations are either revolutionary socialist or independent Communist.

The youth sections of the International Left Opposition have been invited to participate in this Conference and will send delegates to it.

The bankruptcy of the Comintern and the treachery of the Social Democracy has brought in its train a frightful degeneration of the Young Communist International and the Young Socialist International. They are incapable to organize and educate the proletarian youth in the world. A new revolutionary youth international must be organized. The Amsterdam Conference will be the first step.

Beginning with this issue, the department "Towards the Creation of a Fourth International" will be a regular feature of The Militant. It will help to keep American workers adequately informed about every step taken in the redressing of revolutionary internationalism.—Ed.

Dollfuss and Hitler

Recent Changes in the Austrian Government

The article below is an extract from the Bulletin published illegally by our Austrian comrades, and bearing the date, October 1st. Since then, the attempt against Dollfuss has clearly proved that the Nazis are not thinking of relaxing their offensive, but on the contrary of intensifying it in order as quickly as possible—before the winter—to get a decision in their favor.

At this time Austria is passing through a stage analogous to the Brüning-Paen-Schlicher period in Germany or the Held period in Bavaria, that is to say, a semi-Bonapartist dictatorship, which maintains itself by the reciprocal neutralization of the proletarian camp and the Fascist camp. . . . "However, Austrian 'Bonapartism' today, like German 'Bonapartism' yesterday can have only an episodic character, by filling the short interval that separates the democratic regime from the Fascist regime."

These words were written by comrade Trotsky in March of this year, in his article "Austria is Next in Order". Many left social democrats thought then that it was incorrect to consider the Dollfuss regime as a Bonapartist regime. However, the development that has taken place during the last six months has confirmed our Marxist-Leninist analysis word for word. This statement is not made by us because we want to appear as having been correct, but by the necessity of clearly understanding the present turn in Austrian politics, a turn which has been undertaken by the new formation of the Dollfuss cabinet.

Let us express ourselves clearly: the shifts in the Dollfuss cabinet signifies the end of Austrian Bonapartism and the beginning of decisive convulsions.

The "Catholic day" and the demonstration of the "patriotic front" sought to show the "strength" of the Dollfuss government to the external world and to support the former. This attempt to deceive the foreign world on the weakness of the government and to save the latter, has miscarried in face of the internal contradictions of the Bonapartist governmental combination and it has only strengthened the discussion on its fate. The entire world has been able to see the real weakness of the Dollfuss government by viewing the struggles that have taken place within its own ranks after the "Catholic Day", which led to the counter-demonstration of the Heimwehr and the Landbund which refused to liquidate themselves in the "patriotic front". By that, the attempt to save the Dollfuss government has miscarried, the governmental combination has fallen.

Instead of leading to a rapprochement, Dollfuss brought about the strengthening of the contradictions, especially between the Heimwehr and the Landbund. What is still more important is the fact the split also cuts into the Christian-social party, which is the strongest governmental party and in which a Fascist and a reactionary-democratic wing are struggling. It is in that that the internal weakness of the Dollfuss regime consists.

But in the course of recent weeks, the general weakness of the Dollfuss government becomes more and more apparent. All the governmental measures have not helped in subduing the Nazis; on the contrary, the Nazi danger has grown. (The social democratic councillor Schmitt was quite correct in stating this fact.) The state apparatus, even the Executive power, up to the highest ranks, is completely infested with Nazis; it has become very shaky for Dollfuss.

From this point of view the foundations of the Dollfuss government are completely undermined. But on the other side, there is still the working class. Although its strength has been weakened it is not yet broken. The most important proletarian organizations are still intact. The government is directly threatened from this side to the degree that the situation becomes more intense.

The ground shakes under Dollfuss' feet. What maintains the homogeneity of his camp is the common fear of the Nazis and the lure of the social democracy, that is the working class, through the impoverishment of which Austrian capitalism like German capitalism tries to improve its situation. The attitude of the Dollfuss government is dictated by the dependence of Austrian finance capital on France especially, and on England. The severity of the crisis pushes it in rage against the working class.

At present, the governmental bases which is being undermined in favor of the Nazi camp, forces Dollfuss to take decisive measures. If he wants to maintain himself, then he is forced by all means to modify, to change the present relationship of forces.

His attempt to suppress the Nazi movement has miscarried. Therefore there remains only one means to save himself: the destruction of the proletarian organizations, that is to say, especially the social democracy and the trade unions. If Dollfuss takes this path—and no other remains for him—then the period of Bonapartism is terminated and the final, decisive struggle begins.

That is where we stand now. The new Dollfuss cabinet means that the Fascist wing of the Christian-Socialists has stripped itself of pretenses. Their party leader, the reactionary Vaughan, had to leave, like Winkler, the Landbund man, because while being for a reactionary reform of the constitution, they were not in favor of the proscription of the social democracy, fearing the eventualities that it would cause even in their own parties.

This fear is quite justified. But the Heimwehrs, who are in favor of the "perfect Fascist state, on the Italian model", have remained. That means that the proscription of the social democracy and the trade unions is not far off. This is no longer a question of weeks (or even of days). The dynamics of development presses the new Dollfuss cabinet not to unravel the knot but to cut it.

Will it succeed in striding down the working class? In order that they do not succeed, the proletariat must detach itself from their cowardly, treacherous leadership. Can Dollfuss drive off the Fascist danger? We do not believe so. All the conditions of development indicate that their time will come and that in the last analysis they will triumph over Stahrenberg, Fey and Dollfuss.

One thing is certain: Bonapartism has served its time. For the working class, the hour has come when it is a matter of daring everything in order not to lose everything.

The Agrarian Question in Mexico in the Light of the Coming Revolt

Every effort will be made by the Calles-Rodriguez regime to prevent the Mexican peasants from rearming themselves, and to disarm those still in possession of rifles. During the last four uprisings the peasants participated on the side of the government against the counter revolution. The next uprising will find them aligned against the government which has gone over bag and baggage to the counter revolution. During the past revolts the armed peasant guerrillas proved themselves more than a match for the troops of the regular army many of which supported the rebellions. They are therefore a factor to be reckoned with in the coming events.

For many years the Mexican peasants and their organizations have played an important role in the country's politics, always however as tools of the different bourgeois and petty-bourgeois political groups which paid them off with broken promises or a few rusty guns. The very nature and composition of the peasantry and its organizations naturally prevented them from at any time, playing a really independent role.

In 1926 most of the scattered local, regional, and state organizations were federated into the National Peasants League, at which all tendencies were represented. This congress did much to cement the relations between the Communists, the peasants and the bourgeois government. The Communist Party dissolved itself into the peasant movement, and rather than building an opposition within it, served as a bridge to keep the more radical elements among the poor ejidatarios and peons from resisting the policies of the rancheros and petty politicians in the leadership. These same leading functionaries of the National Peasants League (Galvan and Co.) were mostly all members of the Communist party. They did very much as they pleased; Tejada, then Minister of the Interior, supported the organization with Calvan on the payroll; and the party dragged along in their trail, boasting in its reports to the Comintern of "our peasant organization of 300,000 members". But this was only one episode in the opportunist history of the Mexican C. P. Party publications were maintained by government officials and the party's principal footholds in the labor unions (Jalisco, Tampulipas) were owed primarily to the support of the local politicians who used the Communists as a counter-weight to the reformists of the CROM who were at that time very powerful in national politics through the Partido Laborista.

In 1929, with the inauguration of the "Third Period", and after the failure of the march days (discussion in the party on armed insurrection which terminated in support to the government) the splits commenced. Galvan finally broke away, and denounced the party. Thereafter there was a series of splits and counter-splits, expulsions and counter-expulsions in the peasant organizations. Galvan meanwhile has gone to his just reward, but his tradition remains in the main current of the peasant movement which, under the name "National Peasants League" (Unión Nacional de Campesinos), serves today as the mainstay of Tejada's political apparatus. Another section is dominated by the National Revolutionary Party or local politicians affiliated to it, while still other fragments are affiliated in the Workers' and Peasants' Bloc, and a Left wing peasant movement dominated by the Communist party.

It has been seen that Colonel Adalberto Tejada, has for many years exercised great influence over large sections of the Mexican peasantry. With the approaching 1934 presidential elections in sight, Tejada is making a play for power. As principal instigator of the split within the P. N. R. out of which the "Left Socialist Party" was born, he appears as sponsor of a radical "proletarian-agrarian" program. At the same time, he is seeking unprincipled alliances with other political groups (Soto y Gama, "Partido Laborista", "Partido Antifascista", etc.) which are if anything farther to the right than the P. N. R.

There is every probability that large sections of the peasantry and even of the proletariat will support Tejada because of his "radicalism". Meanwhile the Communist Party considers Tejada as the "main danger" in much the same manner that "Social-fascism" was considered before the advent of Hitler.

This is the second of a series of articles on political developments in Mexico. In the next issue, we shall attempt an analysis of Tejada's "Left Socialist Party".

TERZAN'S RELEASE

New York City, Nov. 1.—Demand for the release of Athos Terzan, young anti-Fascist accused of killing his comrade Anthony Fierro, and prosecution of the "real and known perpetrators of the crime," was made on District Attorney Charles S. Golden of Queens County today in a letter sent to him by Edmund J. Phillips of Philadelphia, Spanish-American War veteran and former organizer for the Khaki Shirts of America.

Mr. Phillips' letter was made public through the Terzan Defense Committee. The Committee contends that Fierro actually was killed by a member of the Fascist Khaki Shirts while defecating a friend who was being ejected from a meeting of that organization in Astoria, L. I., on July 14.

It was Mr. Phillips to whom the committee referred October 25, when it charged that Mr. Golden had failed to make a promised new inquiry into the Fierro killing, and declared that "one man in Philadelphia who has vital information about the case, and whose name has long been known to the District Attorney's office has never been visited by any one representing Mr. Golden."

The Illinois Miners

THINGS are happening very rapidly in the Illinois mine fields and the fate of the Progressive Miners' organization will not long remain undecided. The magnificent movement of the Illinois miners, which arose with such bright promise out of the fires of struggle, has been caught in a net of internal contradictions which directly threaten to strangle it. The enemies from without could not break the union; the greatest danger comes from within.

Percy and Keck are leading the union on the path of Lewisism, and their pace becomes faster every day. They joined in the ballyhoo for the NIA and went, hats in hand, to beg crumbs from the capitalist politicians. They are stifling every sentiment of militancy in the ranks. They have invoked the aid of state authorities to suppress radical meetings and now they are expelling Communists and other militants from the union in Lewis style. In every respect they are trying to demonstrate that the P. M. A. is different from the organization of Lewis only in name. Percy and Keck are preparing the way to repeat the sell-out of Walker—i.e., indeed, the actual deal has not already been made behind the scenes.

But they have a long way to go before they can succeed in destroying the movement against Lewisism that has been hardened in such desperate struggle and sealed by so much martyr blood. Powerful forces for resistance are latent in the rank and file of the P. M. A. The next developments of the class struggle will work to strengthen them. What is lacking is an organization of the class conscious and militant elements and a leadership worthy of the task. From the very beginning of the new movement we pointed out the necessity of a firmly organized Left wing in the union. The delay has been costly for the miners and for the union. Now the dangers of another debacle have accumulated and press on every side. There is not much time left.

The signal of a rising reactionary current in the union was flashed months ago when the officials of the P. M. A. started a "red scare" in the organization. That was the time for the militants to awaken to the internal danger, to recognize the unalloyed sign of the employers' class influence at work and to organize their struggle to preserve the union against it. Unfortunately they lacked the leaders for such a fight.

Those who were expected to speak out clearly, kept silent. Instead of fighting they retreated. Instead of denouncing the bosses' agents in the officialdom and defending the policy of class struggle militancy—which was the real point of the attack—Allard and others responded with shame-faced denials of the reactionary "accusations" on their own part, and the expression of mealy-mouthed liberal sentiments about the rights of others.

By the miserable capitulatory attitude before the reactionary offensive they paved the way for all that has followed. The fact that Allard himself was promptly removed as editor of the Progressive Miner, and thus became the first victim of the treacherous bargain of Percy and Keck with the coal operators, does not alter or mitigate the responsibility he bears for the success of their treacherous policy. And there is no reason to conceal it. The most necessary thing now is to see clearly what has happened and what made it possible, and to tell the truth about it.

Half-and-half radicalism, the policy and practice of pseudo-progressivism, played here once again its characteristic role as an aid to reaction. Allard personified this policy and practice and, from all appearances, has not learned anything from the evil results it has brought. People who lack principle suffer from a disease that is very hard to cure. The fact that Allard at one time passed as a supporter of the Communist League makes it incumbent on us, in the interest of truth and clarity, to mention him specifically in this connection and to say that the course he followed had nothing in common with the policy of the League.

We shall take occasion to return again to the Illinois mining question and to set forth again in greater detail the Communist opinion in regard to it. But it can be said at the outset that the miners have no more important problem than the just and accurate appraisal of the leaders who have played a part in the struggle and the course they have followed. They will not be able to cope with the Percy-Keck treason machine until they have secured an accounting from those who had their confidence and who failed in their duty to put them on guard and organize their counter-struggle in time.

American Communism and the Russian Revolution

IN the internationalist concept of their authentic representatives, the Russian revolution and the movement of American Communism are inseparably bound together and, in the final analysis, dependent on each other. This inter-relationship, expressed primarily at first in the influence which the Russian revolution exerted in bringing Communism to life in America, is manifested again today in the international struggle to safeguard the beleaguered fortress of the Soviet Union and to defend the conquests of the October revolution.

The unity of the liberation struggle of the proletariat in a single world process is strikingly illustrated in this intimate connection between Russia and America and their inter-acting influence on each other. The advanced workers in a backward country inspired, by their example, the formation of a revolutionary Communist nucleus in the most highly developed capitalist nation. Now it is our turn.

At the present juncture of the international class struggle the American revolutionists are called upon to play a decisive role in support of the Russian revolution. Our importance in this task is derived from the singularly dominant position of the United States in world affairs and the extraordinary susceptibility of America to the influence of a clear-sighted Communist current at the present time.

We can aid the Russian revolution to its feet again by contributing our efforts and our energy toward the revival of that revolutionary internationalism which first gave birth to it. The distortion of this original and basic idea and its piecemeal elimination from the Communist International by the Stalinists in favor of a utopian national-socialism has year by year undermined the illuminating strength of the first workers state. Only the rebirth of revolutionary internationalism, its embodiment into a new dynamic international organization, can preserve Soviet Russia and bolster up the great work of world emancipation begun by its founders. By sharing in this task, by rooting the new organization in the American soil, the revolutionists of America will begin to repay the great debt they owe to the Russian workers' vanguard.

These internationalist conceptions, which are the heritage of the great Marxist teachers embodied in the October revolution, hold the central place in our minds today as we commemorate its 16th anniversary. On this line the revolution arose in Russia and inspired a whole world. On the same line the re-awakening international movement will gather the scattered forces again and lead to the final security of the U. S. S. R. by the extension of the world revolution.

came to Canada. Such conveyance shall be by the first available ship or train of the Transportation Company which brought the said rejected person to Canada. Dated at Philadelphia this 1st day of November 1933. (Signed) S. P. Poissant, per C. B. O.

In handing Schachtman the deportation order, the officer pointed a significant finger to the reverse side on which was printed: "It is unlawful for persons rejected or deported to return to Canada without the consent of the Minister and persons entering or remaining in or returning to Canada after such rejection or deportation are subject to arrest and detention and on summary conviction to a fine or imprisonment or both, and to deportation." By this, the customs agent was as much as saying: "You need not try to enter by any other Port because the information about you has been very effectively distributed. They'll be watching for you."

Protests were of no avail. Even the demand for an appeal was answered by giving Schachtman a triplicate form to sign, but not to fill out. The official informed him that the signature was the appeal to Ottawa, and that the official himself makes out the appeal proper.

Apparently unaware that he was dealing with the "vanguard of the counter-revolution," the officer had Schachtman packed into an automobile and conveyed under escort to the building of the American customs authorities on the other side of the border, in Swanton, Vermont. There, after another examination of his passport, which was found to be in regular order, Schachtman was released and obliged to return to New York.

immigration and Colonization at Ottawa, particularly as the deportation order, until reversed, constitutes a permanent ban against Schachtman's ever entering Canada again. This is not the first time the Canadian authorities have struck a blow at the activities of the Left Opposition. Prior to this, we have encountered difficulties with the mails, and at least one of Leon Trotsky's works printed by us in New York has been denied admission into Canada.

As we go to press, we have as yet no report on the manner in which the Montreal and Toronto meetings took place. A full report will be given about them in the coming issue of The Militant.

Save Torgler!

The Internationalist Communist League (Bolshevik-Leninists) proposes to all the workers organizations in the world to organize a boycott of German goods, to formulate a program of common action, to build fighting labor organizations.

There is no time to lose in setting the workers into motion. If the terroristic sentences of Leipzig are pronounced, as they no doubt will be, a powerful protest of the international proletariat must be unleashed.

Workers of the world, force your organizations to take a position, organize with us the struggle against Fascism. Halt the hand of the hangman! Show that internationalist proletarian action still lives!

In reply to the shameful verdict of Leipzig, not a single German product must be bought, no German raw material worked on. All the cities of the world should organize Fascism under the sign of powerful mass demonstrations! Fight for the liberation of Torgler, Dimitroff, Popov and Taneff! For the freedom of the tens of thousands of imprisoned workers, demand the suppression of the barbarian concentration camps.

—International Secretariat.

The Bolshevik Heritage

Opposition rededicate themselves to those basic tasks which the Communist International originally set for itself. Our aim as before remains the international proletarian revolution. That is, for the struggle for workers State power—the transfer of power from one class to another. It is the order of the day in this epoch. In the Soviet Union the problems of economic and political administration on behalf of the toiling masses are as heavy and decisive as at no other time perhaps in its history. The Russian Bolshevik-Leninists, despite the extreme conditions of their existence, will assist the Soviet power in the correct direction—As before, the dictatorship of the proletariat through the medium of Soviets on a world scale remains our goal. The theory of permanent revolution is the basic conception which guides the International Left Opposition toward that goal. We are small; we need more cadres, more leading forces. These must be gathered. Old revolutionaries are beginning once again to return to the revolutionary struggle. They are welcome. But above all we must win the new forces of workers never before active in the labor or revolutionary movement—those who are just beginning to take the first steps toward a revolutionary position.

The Third Congress of the Communist International raised as its major slogan: "To the masses." This, and more, is our slogan today. Into the unions! Organize the unorganized! Develop class consciousness. Widen the foundations for the new Communist Party of the United States and a new, Fourth Communist International. In this way we can best honor the Bolshevik revolution of the Russian October and extend it.

The Boycott of Fascist Germany

A Sympathizer Writes on the Strategy of the Anti-Hitler Struggle

Dear Comrades:

There is some noise in bourgeois circles about refusing to buy German goods as a protest against Hitler's persecution of Jews. There is, of course, very little action. For example, R. H. Macy & Co., owned by a Jewish family which includes the U. S. Ambassador to France, declines to join the boycott movement. Even if there were consumers' action, a decline in the sale of German eye-glasses and cameras, or even a complete stoppage of the sale of German crockery, would be put a pin-prick in the leathery side of the Nazi monster.

And, look at the demands of the Jewish boycott! Dr. Fritz Schlegel, a leader on the liberal side in the recent row in the German-American societies in New York, has made the position of bourgeois Jewry clear. "We have not rejected the Nazi flag," he said; "the flag has rejected us." So what? Accept us and we'll accept Hitler. A nice piece of petty-bourgeois hypocrisy! Let the Jewish consumers' boycott be effective and Hitler will compromise with bourgeois Jewry. He will not only protect Jewish bankers and department store owners, which he does already, but he will come to an understanding with the whole Jewish upper crust as to just what share they may have in Fascist Germany. And at that moment "liberal" Jewry will grow silent and the boycott will be over from the labor's viewpoint, and even from a genuinely democratic viewpoint, the whole thing is a joke. Nothing better can be said of the similar consumers' boycott called for by the Second International, A. F. of L., and other reformist organizations.

Your editorial advocating "a well-organized international boycott—suspending transport and communication for a definite time" is the most sensible proposal I have seen for immediate mass struggle against Hitler, world Fascism and the war they are preparing. The idea is rooted in spontaneous mass action. The press has published only a few of the instances of such action. Let me give you some samples thus far unknown, I believe, in New York:

July 2: the S. S. Charlotte Schroeder, Kootenai, sailed through the Brussels Canal. The Captain later reported to Hitler's official organ that some 500 men, women and children on the banks showered the boat, which was flying the Nazi flag, with about 300 kilos of stones, smashing the whole superstructure.

July 12: the S. S. Stormarn, Hamburg, docked in Odense, Denmark. The protest strike against the Nazi flag was so tumultuous that the local trade union council fell all over itself to endorse the workers' action. The flag came down.

August 8: the S. S. Delta, Bremen, docked in Follafuss, Norway, to load wood. The Captain refused the longshoremen's demand to lower the Nazi flag. The sawyers came down from the mills, demonstrated on the pier, and gave him an hour to change his mind. The flag came down. When the boat sailed, the workers massed on the pier and sang the Internationale. Punished by a three-day lockout, they held fast and forced the bosses to retire them.

In the same week in Apenrade, Denmark, workers protested against the Nazi flag on the S. S. Maja. Danish Nazis were called in to load. The trade unions of Apenrade went on a one-hour general strike of protest. The flag came down.

August 24: the S. S. Delfin IV docked at Valdesmarvik, Sweden. Not even threats of expulsion by reactionary union officials deterred the protest against Hitlerism. The flag came down.

You will doubtless be glad to learn that others endorse the idea of an organized international transportation boycott. An early discussion of the idea was by the Neue Weltbühne, a German language paper published by exiles in Prague. This group is the feeble voice of the remnant of left bourgeoisie which has not abandoned its fight against Hitlerism; of its outstanding leaders, Carl von Ossietzky is in a Nazi concentration camp, and Kurt Tscholsky has vanished completely. These people have called on "the organized socialism of all countries" to join in such a boycott as you favor. A formal call was sent to the 2nd and 3rd Internationals, the Amsterdam T. U. center, the R. I. L. U., the co-operativist internationals and to many minor workers' organizations proposing a united front conference to draw up slogans and the detailed strategy of the boycott.

This proposal has been accepted by the Independent Labor Party of England, the I. W. W., and several other labor organizations. Apparently without knowledge of this action, a congress of Scandinavian workers' sport clubs met in Copenhagen on July 7-8 and resolved on behalf of 92,000 members (mostly Social Democrats) "to isolate Hitler Germany" by such a boycott. In the Arbeiderbladet of August 12, Trammann, chairman of the Norwegian Labor Party, (which belongs to no International), wrote that his party interprets the vague Brussels Resolution of the Second International as meaning a transportation boycott and nothing less. Most important of all, a joint resolution adopted by the I. L. P., the Norwegian Labor Party, the German S. A. P. and the Dutch O. S. P. (the last two being co-signatories of the Manifesto of Four along with the International Left Opposition) favors "direct organized action against Fascism of all marine, railroad, transport and other workers" in the form of an industrial and transportation boycott. It proposes the following slogans: reestablishment of elementary political rights of workers; liberation of all political prisoners; abolition of concentration camps; cessation of violence against political dissidents.

Supplementary action of many varieties may be cited. For example, the U. C. of the Norwegian trade unions has ordered a protest strike against the visit of any Nazi representative to Oslo, Norway's capital. Only hospital and firemen are exempted from the strike. Much has yet been done. The resolutions are noble in purpose but they haven't been carried out. How can they be made effective is a question which throws us face to face with some familiar, unfortunate facts. The bureaucrats of the 2nd International, the A. F. of L., etc., won't move unless shoved.

Some Communists oppose the boycott because it will mean loss of jobs to German workers, as though German workers who (those same Communists claim) can approve the U. S. S. R. having relations with Hitler, would not understand the boycott and approve the loss of jobs. Some say that the boycott will benefit capitalists of France, America, etc. If the USSR—and rightly—trades with such capitalists despite the fact that they make a profit, why should workers' hesitate in the boycott? Some say that boycott provokes war. And they are the same people who proclaim that Hitler is a peace move, that he is to refrain from hitting him is to expedite war.

Most fantastic of all Stalinist arguments against the boycott is that it can not overthrow Hitler any more than trade union action can, that only a revolution will do the job. No doubt. But a boycott can undermine Hitler so that the German workers can hope to finish him off by a revolution. The boycott is a peace move, that he is to refrain from hitting him is to expedite war.

Discussion Articles

Two Internationals

I. The international revolutionary movement is once again approaching a period of clarification and reorganization. This time it occurs as a result of a major defeat of the working class (Germany), proving that an outstanding victory of the proletariat is not the only axis around which such revaluations and reorganizations take place.

Lenin, without descending into mechanics, described the epoch of imperialist capitalism as the era of "wars and revolutions," all the time pointing out that this stage developed not in one straight line, but embodied all the ebbs and flows inherent in any form of decay. Translated into the terms of revolutionary politics, this designation signified that on a world scale the objective factors necessary as a pre-condition of the proletarian revolution, were present. The analysis did not exclude, but insisted, that the specific conditions of a given country had always to be considered, in order to effect such policies as would lead to the triumph of the proletariat.

The Subjective Factor

In such an epoch the primary forces required to bring about the overthrow of capitalism, is the subjective factor, the organized movement of the working class. It is a period in which the main strategic aim of the proletariat (the conquest of power) becomes a reality, the outcome depending on how well the workers movement carries out its tasks. If from the international point of view, the proletarian revolution is on the order of the day, it is of paramount importance for the proletariat to so organize its tactics, that they will lead directly to victory. The subordination of the main strategic aim of the proletariat to the tactical phases of the class struggle would mean the surrender of the revolution and the decline of the workers movement into opportunism and reform. Because the struggle will resolve itself finally on the basis of the strength or weakness of the revolutionary party of the working class, it is incumbent upon every revolutionary worker to constantly examine and re-examine his party in order to observe how well it meets the demands of the objective situation and to determine precisely whether or not it furthers the interests of the proletarian revolution. In such a manner errors may be corrected, adjustments made and possibilities exist for strengthening or correcting the organization, then it will prove to be necessary to reorganize the ranks of the workers movement upon a sound basis so that it can proceed to carry through the aim of class consciousness and revolutionary workers; the overthrow of capitalism. In such matters, fetishism of an organization will not enhance our aims. Our opinions and policies can only be determined by objective analysis.

Downfall of the Second International
 The 2nd International ceased to exist just one move in a long struggle. Its limitations are no more a ground for rejecting it than are those of trade unionism for rejecting that.

Armed insurrection is only, (a big only, of course) the final stage in a long process of which both trade union struggle and a real boycott can be important parts. As the Militant said, such a boycott can be "a means of lifting up the spirits of the German workers and helping them to their feet again... a demonstration which would revive and strengthen the international labor movement."

But to the C. I. all this is senseless! No wonder the Captain of the German tanker Ala-Kuh was surprised when, on August 1, Communist workers at Londen, Sweden, refused to service his boat as long as it flew the Nazi flag, even though they were employed by a nautical firm belonging to a Soviet trust. No wonder he complained to reporters, saying that they do such things better in Leningrad where he flew his livery pennant unmolested for nine days!

A long way the C. I. has come! On January 14, 1921, for example, the Executive Committee of the C. I. proclaimed a boycott of Spain in response to the appeal of the Spanish Confederation of Labor. "The workers of all countries," declared the E. C. C. I., "which was then under the leadership of Lenin and Trotsky, 'should refuse to load or unload goods coming from or destined for Spain. They should refuse to buy any Spanish products. Isolated from the rest of the world, its barbarism exposed by the proletarians of all lands, the Spanish bourgeoisie will have to capitulate.' The story of the boycotts against the Hungarian White Terror Government and against the Polish intervention in the U. S. S. R. are too well known to need repetition here. They were bold working class tactics, and they had their fruit. They were initiated by the C. I. to its glory and benefit at a time when the U. S. S. R. was far weaker than it is today.

Notes of the Week

Who Are the "Chiselers"?

A substantial part of the president's last radio address was devoted to vituperation against the "chiselers." Although, as members of the working class we have always been against this condescending system of capitalism—we cannot help pointing out the injustice of this attack on itself.

For who, after all, are these particular "chiselers"? They are, in the main, the small bosses, the peasant businessmen. They are, for instance, the social prop of that big unit of mid-western revenue. They are the boys who live in deadly dread of big time competition.

Take the Swopes, the Owen Youngs, the steel magnates and the textile barons. A "fair code of competition"—that is just their meat. They have big capital resources, tremendous credit resources, gigantic mass production facilities. They have noses of lawyers to ward their way out of any "labor provisions." What chance has the poor little chiseler to keep pace with them? He has to live and produce on a hand-to-mouth proposition. The bank is down on his neck every minute of the day. The regular sharp charges exorbitant fees. Can he help lengthening hours and cutting wages. Can he do anything but perpetuate the sweatshops and skin his neighbor? Not if he wants to keep his place under the capitalist sun. And yet, NRA or no NRA, he feels it in his veins—that sun is setting for him.

Hearst to the Rescue

The NRA obviously hastened the eclipse of small fry in business and industry. No doubt the real framers of it made "reorganization and centralization of business" one of the main objectives. The little fellows felt it.

When Mr. Ford bucked up against the big bad wolf, he became their idol. Mr. Ford, of course, had no need of a "code of fair competition." There are no small fry to wipe out in his field.

Now Mr. Hearst comes to their rescue. And that's encouraging for them.

"The blighting effect of NRA policy," says the white hope of the middle class, "has been so complete that a justifiable interpretation of the letters NRA would make them read appropriately, 'No Recovery Allowed.'"

The Hearst newspaper chain was among the first to back Roosevelt and boost the New Deal. Its present defection is, therefore, a blow with an extra sharp sting to it.

Which Way Is the New Wind Blowing?

While it reflects a widespread movement, the Hearstian pronouncement no doubt has aims of its own. Mr. Hearst is a jingo patriot of the first water. And he is circumspect in his patriotism.

He backed the New Deal in its efforts to harness American capitalism to a single aim—national concentration in the preparation for a new lunge at the world market.

When the national concentration of capital reached a point where it threatens the political concentration he balks. The small businessman is the indispensable prop in case of war, the middle class is the final resort of Big Business in case of a workers' rebellion.

"It imposed," runs Mr. Hearst's indictment against the NRA, "upon industry, struggling towards recovery, shorter hours and higher pay and greater employment.... than industry was able to bear (sic)."

There you have a successor to NRA: the remedy is a return to longer hours, less pay and lesser employment. If the small businessman can't bear the burden, the worker can!

This great vision is dubbed by Mr. Hearst: "Back to Democracy." Mark Sullivan, the Tribune correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, thinks that its proponents should be called the "new liberals."

A London news dispatch says that, the speculators there have become so cynical, every time there is some new declaration about the soundness of currency or business—they rush to sell short. Every time the boss class and their press lackeys begin to talk about "Back to Democracy" and "Liberalism," it's a cinch there's a big club hidden somewhere for the workers.

As to the Workers

The NRA—like the League of Nations—is tumbling. The worker who wants to keep his shirt on his back had better join a union. And get his fellow workers to join. It's going to be a tough fight, from the looks of things. And it'll take all of those 10,000,000 new members Bill Green has been talking about, to hold our own.

Bill Green is just talking. It's up to you and you to do the job, Green and no Green. Working class unity—for higher wages, for the six hour day, five day week; for unemployment insurance—there is the first step to get rid of chiselers and chiseldom.—G....n.

The New Rift in the Lovestone Group--and the New Party

After having been slain so often, the very much alive flesh and blood specter of "Trotskyism" has risen again to disturb the equanimity of the Lovestone group. A call has been issued for a national conference next month, and the current issue of the Workers Age prints a discussion supplement in which are published the statement of the majority "On the New Party and Trotskyism", and the minority statement by Zam "For a New Perspective for Our Group". The dispute is the second one in a year to wrack the frail body of the American Right wing, and the latest one promises to have even more far-reaching consequences than the one which preceded it.

That the discussion should revolve around the recent German events and the problem of a new Communist party and international arising out of them, is already highly significant. In the first place, it is a warning revelation of how the overwhelming pressure of international (the so-called "foreign") questions inexorably crushes every futile attempt to establish a revolutionary organization and policy on purely "American" issues (whatever they may be). In the second place, it again attests the fact that the regenerated Communist movement will and can come into existence primarily on the basis of the position taken towards the August 4th of Stalinism; its capitulation to Fascism in Germany. And not as an isolated instance, or an episode incident, but as the crowning point of ten years of policies which have converted the Communist International from the general staff of the world revolution, into a brute on the world revolution operated by the omnipotent Stalin secretariat.

The attitude to be taken to the problem referred to has already aroused stormy discussions in most sections of the radical labor movement of Europe. However contented conservative officials may be with the way matters have gone up to now, however reluctant they may be to engage in a discussion of the problem of the new international which is now posed as imperiously as it was after August 4, 1914, the discussion is nevertheless forcing its way into the pores of one organization after another. Not even the Lovestone group is exempt from this penetration. And if the official Stalinist parties will be among the last to reveal an open concern with the problem and to bring forward a sector which will contribute serious forces to the new movement, it is not because they enjoy any organic immunity from it, but only because the molecular processes of differentiation already at work have not yet gained sufficient strength to break the momentarily effective stranglehold with which the bureaucracy is throttling all criticism and progress.

The Lovestone group suffered a blow several months ago when the group supporting the views of Giltow—which has now taken a favorable position towards the slogan of a new Communist party and international—broke away from it. The new internal struggle is an echo and a continuation of that rupture. The statement of H. Zam, the official and solitary representative of the minority on the National Committee, declares for a new Communist party in the United States and in every other capitalist country, that is, for a new Communist International outside of the Soviet Union and exclusive of any Russian section. Zam's membership on the National Committee facilitates for the time being his role as official representative of the new current, although the genuinely progressive tendency in the Lovestone group does not and cannot find in him anything more than a fortuitous and unauthentic spokesman. But although truer voices will speak out tomorrow, it is the two "official" currents which concern us at present, the official statements in the discussion supplement of the Age.

Let us first examine the declaration of the Committee majority. The Lovestone document—interspersed with the customary falsehoods, inventions, distortions about the "Trotskyites"—proceeds from the idea that no new course is needed for the simple reason that no change has taken place in the situation. The sole criticism that Lovestone masters up boldness enough to make of the disastrous course of Stalinism in the German situation, is contained in the weasel words about "its failure to apply effective tactics to realize its correct Communist principles and aims". Nothing more!

The fact that the Communist party was deliberately prohibited by its own and the Moscow bureaucracy from effecting that elementary, obviously imperative and obviously correct united front which would have crushed Fascism before it came to power; the fact that the Fascists were allowed to come into power and to consolidate it without the Communist party lifting a finger to organize the slightest resistance to them; the fact that the last of the parties in the Comintern that retained a mass basis up to then now lies crushed, bleeding from a thousand fatal wounds, completely incapacitated—that is, has collapsed; the fact that the catastrophic course which rendered this outcome inevitable has been officially canonized by the Comintern and all its sections without the slightest attempt at self-criticism or re-evaluation; these facts and dozens of others which proclaim from the housetops the collapse of the Communist International—are blithely dismissed with the observation that, although they had correct Communist principles (the nationalistic dogma of socialism in one country!) and aims (the "people's revolution" and the "national" emancipation of Germany!), the Stalinists were not so effective with their tactics. Here you have revived the theory that if the monarch lost both battle and kingdom, it was only for want of a horse-shoe nail. The story was plausible and amusing in kindergarten books. In the present case, it is nothing less than a despicable attempt at whitewashing the Stalinist criminals who are responsible for the tragedy of the German proletariat and, implicitly, their discharged Right wing hunkies who seek re-hiring.

"Genuine Opposition to Fascism" The Stalinists in Germany have not had their August 4th, argues the thesis. "No one can doubt the sincerity and genuineness of the official C. P. G's opposition to Fascism at any stage of development," it declares. There is no way, however, of measuring sincerity in politics. There is no such thing as a "sincerometer", as Lenin once told Serrati, nor is there a need for one in politics. Sincerity does not weigh decisively on the scales of the class struggle, and what is important is not an instrument to measure it (and there is none), but an instrument with which to take the measure of political tendencies, of programs, of actions. That instrument is Marxism.

No sincerer opponent to the im-

Progressive Enginemen Organize For Reform of Railroad Unions

On July 10th, 1933, at the recent B. of L. E. Convention at Cleveland, Ohio, the "Progressive Club of Enginemen" was started by 74 members of the progressive block in that Convention. The progressive movement has already taken on an organized form inside of the B. of L. E. This minority movement grew up and developed on and around a 25 point program of much needed changes in the organization. Among other things, the progressive minority program called for the "Initiative Referendum and Recall"; abolition of all gag laws and secret work and the reinstatement of all gag law victims; for a new set of officials with lower salaries; for the removal of the B. of L. E. headquarters from Cleveland to Chicago, etc.

However, the Johnston machine had a sufficient majority to control the convention, and were able, with one or two exceptions, to prevent the proposals of the progressives from being enacted into law. When these progressive delegates saw that their program was being defeated they decided to launch an organized progressive movement inside of both of the two Engineers' Brotherhoods to perpetuate and keep alive the progressive program defeated at the B. of L. E. convention, and the result was the Progressive Club of Enginemen. Every locomotive engineer, fireman and hostler who is a member or eligible to membership in the two engineers' brotherhoods and who subscribes to the progressive program, may join the Progressive Club of Enginemen.

There is certainly a big and fertile field for an organized progressive minority movement in the Enginemen's Brotherhoods as well as in the 21 Railroad Unions. The Minneapolis Railroad Council Movement aims to do the same thing inside of the 21 railroad unions that the Progressive Club of Enginemen aims to do inside of the Engineers' and Firemen's unions. Instead of leadership and program the Railroad Brotherhoods have a well-organized bureaucratic autocracy which has entrenched itself behind gag laws, obligations, secret work and a very tightly censored Brotherhood press. No member of the 21 Railroad Brotherhoods can even mildly criticize his administration's

Boycott of Germany

(Resolution of the International Plenum of the Bolshevik-Leninists.)

The boycott is an important weapon in the international struggle against Hitler Germany. It is an elementary truth that the boycott cannot overthrow Hitler. But it can force him to make certain concessions and it can help the defeated German working class, as well as the world's working class, in regaining confidence in the power of proletarian internationalism.

The boycott of goods, supported by bourgeois and liberal Jewish organizations, transforms this method of struggle against Hitler into a means of bourgeois competition and ideological preparation for war, and into the creation of a "collaboration" between the bourgeoisie and the proletariat, in view of coming war.

The boycott of German goods is also propagated in the same sense by the reformist lackeys of capitalism. The revolutionary proletariat can take part only in an active boycott, which also develops the class struggle against its own bourgeoisie; boycott of shipping, strikes of seamen, longshoremen and railroad workers.

The 3rd International, refusing any boycott in the interest of the commercial policy of the Soviet Union, shows again its inability to defend the class interests of the proletariat; an inability which is due to the non-Marxist policy of socialism in one country. Experience has proved that the boycott has no meaning unless it is conducted by the mass organizations of the proletariat, and if it is designed to attain an aim in a definite period of time. This is why the boycott should be preceded by systematic propaganda and by the creation of a united front which will permit the projection of the boycott with the determined aim and at the same time with all the necessary force.

It is in this sense that the Plenum of the International Opposition has addressed itself to all workers' organizations on August 28, and again in its appeal on the subject of the trial on the burning of the Reichstag for joint action of all workers' organizations.

Stalinists Expel 3 Food Workers from Union

New York.—Three militants of years standing in the revolutionary and labor movements have just been expelled from the Food Workers Industrial Union in New York for the crime of disagreeing with the political views of the Stalinists in control of the organization and for supporting the standpoint of the Left Opposition. At the same time that this reactionary deed was committed, the Stalinists borrowed another leaf from the book of labor fakery and used the economic club against one of the expelled by firing her from the job which the union bureaucracy controls.

The militants involved are Sebastian Pappas and Sylvia Weiner, two founders of the union, and one of its most qualified organizers, James Gordon. There is not an organized worker in the food industry who is not acquainted with all three militants for their activities in the union, in strikes and on picket lines, for their combativity which has more than once brought about their arrest and imprisonment. Despite the fact that all three of them enjoy a blameless record in the movement, the Stalinists sat in judgment upon them in typical star chamber proceedings and promptly expelled them.

Culmination of Long Fight

The expulsion comes at the conclusion of a long fight within the union which began even prior to inextinguishable splitting of the Amalgamated Food Workers Union by the Stalinists for the purpose of creating the "red" Food Workers Industrial Union. For some time now the expelled members, whose loyalty nobody has ever been able to challenge, have been attempting to correct the pernicious course being pursued in the F. W. I. U. by its Stalinist officialdom. The aim of the Left Oppositionists in the organization has consistently been to establish one united union in the industry and to re-establish a genuine Left wing movement not isolated from the masses of the food workers.

Never able to meet the arguments made by our comrades, the Stalinists have instead sought for some time now to whip up the membership to a lynch spirit for the purpose of facilitating the expulsion of the workers who were a thorn in the side of the bureaucracy. Then, having reduced the union to a caricature, not much greater in strength and influence than the Stalinist party fraction which completely dominates it, the officialdom trumped up charges against the three militants and pronounced sentence of expulsion upon them.

"The most despicable act of the Stalinists consists in the firing of Sylvia Weiner from her job in the 'Coops', a Stalinist institution where she had been at work up to the time of her expulsion. The capitalist uses precisely the same method of firing and blacklisting in order to starve out militants in the shop until 'they come to their senses'. The A. F. of L. agents of capitalism use the same method in order to rid themselves of critics and opponents in the unions; they take them off the job, keep them unemployed without the possibility of getting work elsewhere, and thus starve the class conscious fighters into submission to the machine. Sylvia Weiner's discharge does not leave a single spot on her sterling record in the union; it does, however, brand the cynical bureaucracy which committed the act with an ineradicable stigma.

Rank and File Indignant

Scores of workers are seething with indignation at the expulsion which every rank and file understands to be based exclusively on the political opinions of the three comrades. Militants in the food and needle trades industries who have worked and fought side by side with our comrades in a dozen battles, refuse to swallow the crude and disgraceful action of the Stalinists. The latter have not heard the last of this expulsion. There are many workers who are determined to make a vigorous protest in every organization against the action. The hope of the Stalinists to finish off their business in the dark of the moon and in the confines of their trial chambers will, we are confident, be successfully spiked by resolute militants. The Stalinists, in this case at least, will be compelled to answer for their action before an infinitely more authoritative court than that which tried the three: the court of the workers and their organizations. The Stalinists will be confronted by militants in the food industry, in the needle trades unions and elsewhere and made to explain.

This crime will not be allowed to pass with impunity—bear that in mind, Messrs. Stalinists!

A Letter from Prison

Nov. 6, 1933
Gloucester, N. J.

The Militant,

Comrades:— I believe you should know that the I. L. D. have not given me any consideration whatsoever at any time during the 6 months that I have been incarcerated owing to my active work for our cause. I expect no action from this source and I feel that the Attorney is not being encouraged to exert the energy in my behalf that I know he can and is quite efficient to do. I am confident that he is perfectly O. K. but is not receiving the attention and care to enable him to forge ahead in the cause for which I confidently stand.

I am personally without funds and deprived of even smoking, also other incidentals which a person really needs. I am sure my comrades do not know these circumstances for I am positive that they realize I face my duty unflinchingly and so do warrant consideration in our unity of cause.

It would please me so much if you will kindly forward the "Modern Monthly" and keep me in mind as I am sure you realize I rightly warrant by my comrades.

The Militant is coming to me regularly and I want you to know that I appreciate all you do to inspire and further what is Right-For-All.

I have not heard any definite news for quite some time, the latest given to me here is that I be deported to Italy.

With kindest personal regards,

Believe me Sincerely,

COMRADE BELLUSSI.
Note: Letters to comrade Bellussi should be addressed as follows: Anthony Bellussi, Detention House, Philadelphia Immigration Station, Gloucester City, New Jersey.

'Good Government' Cleans Up in the New York Municipal Election

The Tiger's tail has been twisted. The "rascals" have been driven out of office. The "millionaire" of the end of "bossism" has come to New York. Honest-to-goodness government is installed in power and the days of corruption, skullduggery and political racketeering are over. The shining champion of cheapness and honesty in municipal administration, the master demagogue, Fiorello H. La Guardia is ensconced in City Hall to the great rejoicing of the "economy" experts, the pious Christians, the yellow press, the numerous office-seekers—not to mention the Big Boys who backed and financed his campaign.

It was a tense campaign filled with recrimination abuse and character assassination in which the right was no doubt shared by all the contestants for the mayoralty alike. There can be no doubt that this election must have been a real tickler to anyone with a sense of humor.

The great issue trumpeted up and down our fair city was boss or no boss. Tammany's candidate, the others admitted, was a square shooter but "Honest" John O'Brien had an evil genius behind him whispering Mephistophelian advice into his ear. "Holy" Joe McKee the crusader against Tammany dictatorship was accused of being the catpaw of the same kind of boss domineering which he inveighed so strongly against. And La Guardia, ever ready with radical phrases to please the demos, was charged with being a Communist. No less!

A Rude Awakening

The rude awakening will come for the masses in New York when they discover that the election promises to clean up the city, to make an end to corruption, whether carried out or bursting like soap bubbles, will not make a particle of difference in their economic conditions. The dead weight of the four years of abysmal privation, and body-wracking unemployment, will not be lightened when and if the grafters are cleaned out by La Guardia.

Quite another matter are the promises Mr. La Guardia has made to introduce "economy" into the city administration, where he contends extravagant waste has prevailed under Tammany. When La Guardia talks of "economy" he is not addressing himself to the workers but to the gentlemen of Wall Street who will supervise his actions in office. The New York City government is saddled with a huge debt to Morgan, Rockefeller et al. who want it honored, the principal and the interest. The panaceas heralded by La Guardia and others, tant dispensing with useless office holders will balance the budget and provide funds to meet the city's obligations are so much election ranting. If this debt is to be met in mind, Messrs. Stalinists!

N.Y. Food Workers Turn To Trade Union Action

Sentiment for Aggressive Organization Struggle Follows N.R.A. Fiasco; Hotel Strike in Prospect

New York.—While the organization campaign drive of the Hotel and Restaurant Union Branch of the A. F. W. is going on as reported previously the Union is confronted now with a new serious situation. The bosses realize that our Union is becoming a powerful force and they are preparing to strike the Union a blow.

They failed to line up the Vatel Club members for the Company Union and they are concentrating at present on the Geneva Association. The big Hotel owners are working methodically in creating the scabbing machinery. They have already begun to force the workers of Taft and New Yorker Hotels to join the company Union, and for obvious reasons. These Hotels so far have very few union members. This fact alone should convince every food worker that in order to protect his interests he must not only join the Union but convince his fellow workers to do the same. The NRA illusions even among the unionized workers were very strong. But now they begin to realize that the only road to follow is a more direct action against the bosses. The NRA officials did not lift a finger to help any worker but surely they did work very hard in protecting the interests of the bosses.

Besides the above mentioned behavior of the local NRA officials news reached us from Washington that the President is ready to sign the Hotel Code without any consultation with the Labor Unions. Of course this is an open violation of the law known as the NRA but the class conscious workers did not entertain any doubts that the capitaltalists would violate every law which might harm even slightly their sacred interests.

No results whatever were accomplished, whether the matter brought up to the NRA was an arbitrary firing of an individual or of a whole crew of cooks, waiters, a concerned wages or hours. The new ruling that tips are wages, and the forthcoming signing of a hotel men's code without the participation of the workers are putting the finishing touches to the hopes and confidence of the hotel and restaurant workers in assistance from the NRA.

Now one ruling after another weakens the position of the workers; the hours of the waitresses at Loft's are being lengthened, the waiters are not getting their fixed minimum wages, cooks and waiters are being fired arbitrarily, and the impossible burden of proving that the discharge is for union activity is being put on the organized workers.

They are beginning to realize that their fate is now in their own hands, and that they must look for help only to their own organization, their trade union. Thousands of organized workers, whether working in the biggest hotels or in the smaller restaurants are preparing for decisive action, completely independent of the NRA.

The workers for their part are prepared to draw the inevitable conclusions from the situation which has been forced upon them. They are prepared to fight back from now on against every aggression of the bosses, whether by the picket line or the strike, and if necessary they will surely not shrink from a general tie-up of the whole hotel and restaurant industry in the city of New York.

The food workers are realizing that only a Union based on class struggle principles is able to defend their interests. That is why they got rid mighty fast of their illusions about the NRA and they are determined to fight for their demands. Their fight will not be an isolated one. Tens of thousands of unorganized will join the ranks of the Union when it leads the fight for the abolition of the miserable conditions that the Hotel Men's Association inserted in their code which the NRA Administration and the President is preparing to sign.

COTTON PICKERS ARRESTED IN STRIKE

Cotton pickers arrested following the attacks on the strikers by the growers' armed "committees of protection" in the San Joaquin Valley, Calif., will be defended by A. L. Wirin of the Southern California branch of the A. C. L. U. Seven workers are charged with murder, a strike leader with criminal syndicalism, seventeen pickers with resisting an officer and rioting, four with vagrancy and disturbing the peace.

The murder charges grew out of the shooting of a Mexican striker at Arvin. Though the strikers, according to all witnesses, were without weapons and the cotton growers carried guns, not a single grower is held. The indictment against Pat Chambers, the leader of the strike, for criminal syndicalism is called a frame-up by Mr. Wirin. Chambers, it is reported, at all times urged the strikers not to resort to violence. His bail was set at $2,000 and then raised overnight without hearing to $20,000. A writ of habeas corpus filed in the Superior Court to reduce the bail proved unavailing. At a hearing on the bail for the four strikers charged with vagrancy, the District Attorney of Kings County declared the defendants were arrested because they were strike leaders and urged that the bail be high to keep them in jail. The bail was set at $200 and raised at once and the men released. Governor Rolph's fact finding committee investigating the violence reported "Without question the civil rights of the strikers have been violated. We appeal to the constituted authorities to see that the strikers are protected in rights conferred upon them by the laws of the state and by the federal and state constitutions."

The Vote for the C. P.

The Communist party and its mayoralty candidate, Robert Minor received 26,564 votes or an increase of 2,500 votes over the vote recorded for Patterson last year. Considering the huge increase of voters this year the Communist vote has remained stationary. The campaign conducted by Minor and the Stalinists many times sunk into the most vulgar opportunism. The crimes of Stalinism in the unions and in the class struggle in this city, the repercussions of their bankruptcy throughout the world, is sadly registered in this election.

Hundreds Hear Mac-Donald at Toronto

Toronto.—With over 700 workers in attendance at the Labor Temple last Sunday, Jack Macdonald spoke on "The Need for a Fourth International". The meeting was composed of a large section of Left wing socialist workers, about 250 Party adherents and sympathizers and a number of L. W. members.

The speaker pointed out the international significance of capitalism and showed how the greedy parasite hand of capital must of necessity expand beyond its own national frontiers. This led up to the famous Stalinist revisionist theory of "socialism in one country". Comrade Macdonald here stated it was the opinion of many workers that this was purely an academic question. He shattered this opinion in the minds of many by showing the significance of this theory in practice. He quoted from Stalin and Lenin to show wherein the difference lay. He pointed out that from this theory came the diplomatic gestures that now leads to confusion and would inevitably lead to dissolution. He challenged the Stalinist to show wherein the internationalist character of the present Party lies.

In comparing the Red Army at the present time and the Red Army of 1923 he stressed the fact that in 1923 it was an international Army that at the present time it had degenerated to a national army. He showed that in 1923 the Red Army was mobilized for the assistance of the German proletariat in case a revolution broke out. This was contrasted with the present policy when not a single word came from the leader of the C. I. for 18 months prior to Hitler's seizure of power.

No word came from the Kremlin through official sources but it was left to a bourgeois correspondent, Walter Durnity, to make a comment in the N. Y. Times that Moscow bulls with meanness the growth of the revolutionary proletariat in Germany. Comment on this was unnecessary. Not only was the Red Army not mobilized for the defense of the German working class but not a single demonstration to protest against Fascism has taken place in the Soviet Union since the day Hitler took power. It is perfectly alright for the workers in capitalist countries to protest against Fascism but in the name of diplomacy this must not be done in the Soviet Union. These are not only the works of Stalinist spokesmen but also the deeds.

At this justice comrade Macdonald quoted from Lenin's speeches where the Soviet diplomat continually assumes capitalist countries that under no conditions will the Soviet Union intervene in foreign affairs. He then ended up, with stirring appeal to all revolutionary workers to study the problems honestly and objectively and emphatically stressed the need for a Fourth International based on the teachings of Marx, Engels and Lenin.

In the discussion that ensued a few party adherents attempt to pin comrade Macdonald's reference to the Red Army as meaning that the Red Army should have walked into Germany before and as Hitler took power. This speaker in reply stated that this was not so; that the question of intervention is decided by objective conditions and that in case of Germany he blamed the Party for refusing a genuine Leninist united front with reformist organizations and so building up a solid front against Fascism; that since the proletariat in Germany did not fight it would have been both futile and adventurist to do so under such conditions but that in spite of this, the Red Army should have been mobilized to offer every possible assistance in case civil war had broken out. Many other questions were asked which had no direct bearing on the topic but which were nevertheless answered.

That the meeting from our point of view was successful was proven when many workers expressed themselves favorably after the meeting.

Minneapolis Branch in Action

Minneapolis.—The renewed activity of the American labor movement is also quite well reflected in Minneapolis. Hundreds of workers have joined the various A. F. of L. local unions and a vigorous campaign of organization is still in progress. Unions that were formerly dormant, and in some cases practically non-existent, have suddenly sprung to life and already occupy a commanding position in the local labor movement. I speak specifically of such unions as the Upholsterers and the General Drivers. The former at the present time is conducting an effective city-wide strike and the latter is putting on an organizational drive that has practically quadrupled its membership in the last 8 or 10 weeks. All local unions are reporting substantial gains with the exception of the building trades. Due to the low ebb of the building industry the basis for organizing these workers into bona fide trade unions has been narrowed down almost to the vanishing point.

The Minneapolis branch has not been slow to take advantage of this revival in the labor movement. Several of our comrades have been successful in getting into the various A. F. of L. unions and in several instances are already playing leading roles. In fact it can be said that almost the entire activity of the branch is devoted to mass work at the present time.

In addition to the trade union work several comrades are engaged in unemployed activity. Working with a group of trade unionists and unemployed some of our comrades were instrumental in setting up the Councils for United Labor Action, an organization for the unemployed. As a result of working in this organization two League members were invited to join the Volunteer Committee for the Reorganization of Minneapolis Public Relief; a committee composed of professional men, Socialists, Farmer-Labor figures, co-operators and liberals of various shades. At the first meeting of the committee which our members attended, an elaborate plan of decentralizing Minneapolis public relief had already been worked out. The plan was ideal, everybody agreed, but when one of our comrades raised the question on how the committee proposed to put this plan into effect it revealed only the haziest ideas on the matter.

It remained for our comrades to propose the calling of a representative conference to be composed of delegates from the trade unions, and the entire labor movement if possible, to sponsor a program of action to organize the unemployed and by this method get, not only decentralization of relief, but other demands of the unemployed such as unemployment insurance, stoppage of forced labor, etc. This idea was finally adopted. A call was drawn up and signed by fifteen or sixteen prominent individuals, labor leaders, co-operators, liberals, etc. Through considerable work on the part of the League comrades on the committee the call has been sent out to about 150 organizations for a conference to be held at the headquarters of the Central Labor Union, Sunday, October 29, at 1:30 P. M. Through our special efforts, all working class organizations, political, economic, fraternal, co-operative and unemployed are being invited.

But the crowning achievement of our whole work in the Volunteer Committee is the fact that the committee picked one of our leading comrades to make the 30-minute "Report on Unemployment Conditions" to the conference. He is also to submit some well formulated resolutions on the organization of the unemployed in the name of the Volunteer Committee.

There will be more about this conference in a subsequent issue of the Militant.

In spite of the mass activity that the Minneapolis comrades are involved in at the present time, we are still able to carry on considerable League activity. The membership of the branch has been divided into two teams in order to whip up a spirit of rivalry in the present Militant sub-drive. This tactic has been applied before in the Minneapolis branch with good results so we are trying it again.

300 at Montreal Rally

Montreal.—The Left Opposition is becoming a factor to be reckoned with in the class conscious labor movement of Montreal in the L. L. G. W. T. at the anti-Fascist conference on the issue of Joe Derrin and the possible illegalization of the Young Communist League, the L. O. is making its influence felt. The Stalinists are especially frantic because of its honest and clear Marxist position at the anti-Fascist Conference, the L. O. is getting a foothold in Verdun, which has the only militant unemployed organization in Montreal.

Instead of producing ideological arguments, the bankrupt Stalinist bureaucrats do not merely, without further ado, declare the Left Opposition counter-revolutionary because it dares to reveal them as the organizers of the greatest defeats, but with irresponsible and outrageous shamelessness they spread the downright lie that the L. O. is consciously working hand in hand with the police.

Max Shachtman, member of the National Committee of the Communist League of America (Opposition) and of the editorial board of the Militant, setting out on a tour to Montreal, Toronto, Boston to speak on the 16th Anniversary of the Russian Revolution was arrested at the Canadian border and deported to New York. The Left Opposition in Montreal was formed to replace comrade Shachtman by comrade W. Krehmi as speaker.

The meeting was patrolled by the Red Squad and everything said was recorded by a police stenographer. The Stalinists attempted to break up the meeting and succeeded only in getting the police on the spot, who were probably called in by the detectives. The measures obviously taken by the authorities against the Left Opposition as a militant workers organization, did not prevent the inspired "Socialists in one country" from hurling the contemptible accusation that the L. O. had called in the police to the great indignation of the audience (some 300).

Stalinist hooliganism reveals it.

self time and again as conducive to police interference in workers meetings. Hooliganism is an aid to the activities of the police against the class-conscious workers. Only their bankruptcy forces the miserable Stalinist bureaucrats to resort to merely to misrepresentation of the theoretical position of the L. O. but to the combined method of attempting to break up its meetings and hurling the vilest and most despicable slander.

At the same meeting the stupid Stalinist denial of non-party class organizations of the workers was openly proclaimed. The Canadian Labor Defense League, declared its district secretary, believes in freedom for "working class propaganda but not for counter-revolutionary Trotskyist propaganda".

To comrade Krehmi's analysis of the collapse of the Communist International, through internal bankruptcy and as a result of the reactionary and utopian theory of "Socialism in one country" foisted upon it, in lieu of the perspective of the world revolution, by the petty bourgeois bureaucracy in the Soviet Union; to his incontestable contention that the German catastrophe marked the necessity for the creation of a new (Fourth) International as the only guarantee for the preservation of the workers fatherland, now in the most precarious position, the Stalinist spokesmen could only reply with abuse and with the gratuitous and absurd assertion that the Communist International are now stronger than ever.

The advanced workers of Montreal are learning to see these unprompted and impotent "leaders" in their true colors. —J. G.

Swaback Meetings in K. C. Successful

Kansas City.—Arne Swaback's three day visit to Kansas City—October 29, 30, 31—showed the rapid strides the branch has made under the banner of the Communist League of America (Opposition).

The address of comrade Swaback "The Roosevelt Program, the NRA and the Need for a New Communist Party" was enthusiastically received by a crowd of a hundred workers who attended his lecture, Sunday, October 29th.

Swaback pointed out to the audience that the ballyhoo of the liberal messiah, Roosevelt, and his quasi-Fascist assistant, Johnson, meant nothing but added misery for the American proletariat. The efforts of the "middle-of-the-road" scoundrels, the "Brain Trust", to prove that capitalism can plan will end in nothing but privation and loss of the worker's rights—if their conniving efforts are not halted by a genuine united front of the workers.

The speaker also showed the hopelessness and blundering of the bureaucratic C. P. under the present favorable conditions resulting from their theories of "social Fascism" and "Socialism in one country".

"The need for a new Communist International, a live and fighting one, and not the one buried in the Moscow archives, was clearly pointed out to the worker-audience as the next forward step of the world proletariat.

And to prove to our comrades that the workers in this part of the world are fired with the idea of a new party—the collection at the conclusion of the meeting was the largest ever received by the K. C. branch at any of its public meetings.

The meeting the next night for members of the branch and class sympathizers only rivaled our public gathering. Aside from laying the basis for the new Militant drive, a substantial amount of contributions and pledges were made. The branch feels sure it will meet its quota in the expansion and either win the Militant sub-drive or give the winner one hell of a battle.

The last day of comrade Swaback's stay was occupied in renewing old contacts and solidifying the position of the League among its many friends and sympathizers—an urgent need since the Stalinists, like the proverbial Arabs, folded their tents and stole away silently to the oasis of Omaha.

Mass Turnout to Hear Cannon at Toronto

Toronto.—On Nov. 3rd a gathering of more than 600 Toronto workers heard comrade J. P. Cannon deliver a stirring address on "The Sixteenth Anniversary of the October Revolution and the Fourth International". The notices announcing the lecture had informed the Toronto workers that comrade Shachtman would speak but the Canadian immigration officials, who apparently, do not feed on Stalinist tripe, would not believe that he was a counter-revolutionary and warned him to keep out of Canada. Comrade Cannon came in his stead in order not to disappoint the Toronto workers—and they were not disappointed. Comrade Cannon spoke a second time on Sunday, Nov. 5, at the Labor Temple on the subject of "The World Crisis and the Labor Movement". Both meetings were highly successful from a political and propaganda point of view and marked a further advance of the Left Opposition in Toronto.

Militant Builders

Thirty-three subs last week! That brings the total up to a hundred and thirty-five. That is something, but very far from the possibilities that are presented by the reduced prices of the Militant.

One reason for the slow pace is the fact that our comrades have delayed organizing their participation. The New York units, the Kansas City Branch and others have only now begun to swing into line in a drive to get subs. That means that the results they get will show up only after the drive closes. We will report these results as they come in. But they will not count in the race.

The Youngstown Branch
It seems that we blundered badly in the question of the Youngstown Branch and the sub drive. They said some time ago that they want the subs sent in from them credited to the branch and not to individuals—except in special campaigns like the present one; in which case they want the individuals credited. Our mistake lay in overlooking the proviso.

The branch has sent us a detailed list of the subs sent in since the beginning of the drive and the comrades who sent them in. According to the list one comrade accounted for all of them. Since the list is large he appears at the head of the list below.

Philadelphia League Members Repel Stalinist Hooligan Assault

Philadelphia.—The scourge of hooliganism received another setback as the Party and Y. C. L. misleaders; Mills and Hathaway called for the Philadelphia Police force to bar the Left Opposition from the 16th Anniversary celebration of the Russian Revolution at the Broadway Arena on Tuesday night.

Precipitating a gangster attack upon comrades of the Left Opposition engaged in the distribution of leaflets calling upon the workers for a protest meeting in the defense of Antonio Bellussi, this reprisal comes as another in the series of crimes perpetrated by Stalinist hooliganism.

Last week, after a few of our comrades had participated in a United Front anti-Fascist demonstration, Mills the district organizer made a malicious attack upon the Left Opposition and incited a lynch spirit among the Stalinists gathered after the demonstration in a hall at 1208 Tasker St. He instructed the party and Y. C. L. members to attack the Trotskyites and beat them up.

Tuesday Night we were prepared to defend ourselves and our democratic rights as workers to distribute our leaflets and to sell the Militant, despite the repeated attacks and threats of the organized hoodlums.

At one side of the entrance comrade Tom Holmes boldly displayed the Militant and proceeded to sell a few copies. At the other side of the entrance comrade Grant, recently expelled from the Y. C. L. was distributing the Bellussi defense leaflets.

The tools of the petty bureaucrats began to flutter about and cackle like hens.

They saw we were in a group and prepared to defend ourselves. For the first half hour we were unmolested as several abortive attempts by individual hoodlums were crabs who were brewing up some plans to "liquidate" us.

"Separate them and beat them up individually" was the first order sent out.

One of the well known bureaucrats, not seeming to realize Grant had been expelled for Trotskyism saw him with a group of our comrades and mistook them for Y. C. Lers.

"Don't you know what Mills said," he directed them. "When you see these Trotskyites knock them on their ear." Just then Goodman stepped forward. He walked away stately.

Mills, the party organizer was seen reading one of our leaflets. He gave the signal for attack and walked inside of the hall.

Roselle and Miller approached comrade Thomas who was also distributing leaflets. Thomas gave him a leaflet. He tore it up. He snatched at a few more Thomas has in his hand.

"Is that all of them," he asked. Thomas ignored him. "Keep distributing the leaflets," he told the other comrades. The comrades continued with the distribution of the Bellussi leaflets.

"British Communist, Thomas Mann, speaks for the defense of Chinese Trotskyite. Read all about it in the Militant." Holmes was selling his papers.

"Beat up the Trotskyites," the petty bureaucrats shouted as they jumped at our comrades.

The hooligans jumped the comrades with the leaflets. Holmes was selling the Militant. Comrade Roberts and a few others went to the aid of the comrades with the leaflets. The L. L. D. had repeatedly called Bellussi meetings which did not materialize. Now the party and the Y. C. L. was paying the same sabotaging role attempting to stop the distribution of leaflets calling for such a meeting.

Bellussi was a Trotskyite sympathizer!

Our comrades fought back hard giving blow for blow. For a few minutes the struggle was fast and furious.

"Read the Militant," Comrade Holmes was still selling our organ. "Why is the creation of a Fourth International the best defense of the Russian Revolution!"

Roselle and Miller the same bureaucrats who provoked the fight now suddenly became ardent pacifists.

They did not want the workers to see the manner in which they treated workers of other political organizations.

It was past nine o'clock and we called our comrades together and decided to enter the meeting. Bender was at the door. He told Goodman and Thomas he would not permit us to enter the meeting.

In order not to be accused of breaking up their meeting we sent another committee to talk with Bender. While this was going on Mills and Hathaway had entered the managers office and used the phone.

Our committee came back and reported. We had been refused admission. We decided to remain outside until the close of the meeting. While Bender was regarding us with a cynical stare, up drove the Philadelphia Police patrol with a squad of cops.

At first our comrades could scarcely believe this was possible. But after the bluecoats walked over to the entrance and were directed at us there was no other conclusion possible. The cops ordered us from the scene.

Insurgent Yipsels and other workers who was what was what was perpetrated by the Stalinist bureaucrats showed what they thought of such conduct by actively participating on our side.

At the present moment we call on these elements and all workers organizations for a united front to protect the democratic rights of free speech in the labor movement.

Canned Comedy at the Painters' Banquet

"In honor of Philip Zauser, and further—to celebrate the Rebirth of the Brotherhood of Painters"

The affair took place Saturday, Oct. 28 at Beethoven Hall, as advertised, with the exception of the starting time, which was changed from 8 to 11 P. M. due to the arrival of the celebrities. At four in the morning it was still in full swing.

The gathering was one huge conglomeration of painters who still had paint-spots behind their ears from previous days toil, of labor leaders in dashing tuxedos and black bow-ties, and their ladies in gorgeous evening gowns and sparkling jewelry. It was one great melange of haggard faces and dirty fingernails, of painted eyebrows and empty heads, of hates and aspirations, of booze, beer and perfumed cigarettes.

Shortly after the "soup" and the "Star Spangled Banner", the speech-making monstrosities began. The orge of inordinate feeding instantly succeeded by an orge of inordinate monologues. First came the string of clever labor-leutenants and invited guest politicians, who delivered themselves of much clever talk of complicated nature, of learned disquisitions. But the practical painters, who composed a good half of the crowd of almost one thousand present, did not seem to like them. At times this disapproval manifested itself in that impromptu musical performance of barbaric nature, as is produced by spoons and chinaware. If the painters were seeking amusement, well and good. Unhappily, they were seeking truth. The speakers all claimed to deal in painters welfare, but they found that they could not stop contradicting one another long enough to satisfy the workers. So they all took to general appraisal and clarification of Mr. Zauser himself, as a solace, and, having a sense of humor, tried to shock the congregation present into believing they had taken to drink. It was all canned comedy that passed for wit and reason.

Superior mortals, these labor-fakers! Near superman! They don't consider themselves part of the working class—and they are not, if we mean by that the producing class. They are merely funkies, lackeys and valets of their superiors. And what's a valet to "produce" besides a well-groomed master!

"Zauser is the greatest leader in the country. Long live Zauser!" shouted somebody. The poor simp

FROM THE MILITANTS

A New Method of Expulsion

New York.—Every C. P. member knows that there is bureaucracy "in the party", and it must be admitted that if this bureaucracy does not grow beyond certain limits it can be a basis only for criticism but not opposition. But every few party members are conscious of the fact that there exists a bureaucracy "over the party" which considers itself beyond criticism.

The Upholsterers section of the Furniture Workers Industrial Union, of which I am a member, contains within it the former Left wing of Local 76. A. F. of L. Towards the latter part of July local 76 called a mass meeting of all the upholsterers. It was rumored that this meeting would call a general strike of the upholsterers for the next morning but no one was certain.

On the same night of this mass meeting the C. P. leadership of the Industrial Union called together its party fraction and a few who were close to the party for a meeting. This meeting opened by baptizing those present as the "strike committee" which began to lay plans for a general strike of its own about two weeks later.

During the discussion a party member who has since dropped out asked about the possibility of a joint strike of the framemakers and the upholsterers. The framemakers were then, as now, controlled by the Industrial Union. The reply was, that if Mr. Thies, the business agent of local 76 A. F. of L. would sign an agreement with the Industrial Union to keep the upholsterers out on strike in sympathy with the framemakers then the Industrial Union would keep the framemakers out in sympathy with the upholsterers. I argued his point further saying that the unity of a strike is not a matter to be left to Mr. Thies and I was answered in effect: that nothing else could or would be done about it. Unconsciously the C. P. leadership was admitting that the upholsterers would overwhelmingly follow local 76 A. F. of L. in the strike. Yet when I made a motion to elect a committee to go to local 76 for the forming of a united front, the motion wasn't even ascended.

The policy which was to be carried out, as expressed by comrades Piker and Hirsch, was so evident that no one dared to second my motion. (Since this time Hirsch has quit the leadership of the union and is now a foreman in a shop.) We then received information by phone that the meeting of local 76 was discussing the general strike for the next morning with demands of $1.40 an hour and a thirty hour week and that it was a certainty the membership would accept them. The C. P. leadership had been caught unawares. It also was now forced to call their strike for the next morning without consulting their membership.

It was decided to call the strike for 10 A. M. the next morning in order to give themselves two hours time in which to collect the strike tax passed upon at a previous membership meeting. Then they proceeded to pick the full-time workers for the conducting of the strike. When I reminded them that they had forgotten to formulate their demands, they adopted demands of $1.00 per hour and a thirty-five hour week in the slack time and a forty hour week in the "season" which was considerably lower than those of the A. F. of L. My objection to this was not supported. A recess was called and I was not allowed to remain when the meeting was resumed. I was informed that there would be charges against me but I was not informed of the nature of the charges.

Since then I was not allowed to attend fraction meetings. After a long delay I was finally called to the District Discipline Commission of the C. P. The hearing was postponed and when I demanded to know what the nature of the charges were I was told that at present there were no charges. After another delay I again was called to the District D. C. and the hearing was held.

I was charged with giving information to the "Trotsky faction", breaking up the Tremont Workers Club a year ago when I worked with the party fraction of the club in fighting a financially corrupt opposition and that later when I applied for membership in the C. P. there was a charge of "Trotskyism" against my application of which I knew nothing about. Upon questioning I admitted my disagreement with the party on the trade union question and that I thought it was ridiculous to speak of Trotsky as a "counter-revolutionist". I denied everything else. The makers of the charges were not present at the hearing. No decision was reached, however, and I was told that I would be informed of a decision in about two or three weeks.

Months have passed and I have not yet been informed of any decision and I have not been allowed to attend either fraction meetings or party unit meetings. Neither my fraction nor my party unit was allowed to take up my case in my presence where I might defend myself.

The policy of the Stalinists, as carried out in my union, the bureaucratic handling of my case, the defeat of the C. P. in Germany, and the fact that no congress of the Third International has been called in almost six years proves to me that I belong in the Left Opposition where I can express my opinion without charges being made against me.

actually imagined he had said something in that borrowed bon-mot. The silence which ensued was broken by the a-propos remark of another near-gentleman, who piped "He is doing his best..."

"Zauser is a crook", somebody yelled with the top of his voice. Bang...whizz...boom...boom... General Bedlam: men rushed towards the centre of the trouble: bare-backed ladies stood on the chairs. "What is it?" "Who are the Communists?" "Who wants to fight?"

It took several minutes before order was restored. A little later two men with blood streaming down their foreheads were led down the stairs. The orchestra started "East side—West side..." Those nearest to the stage and furthest from light were emotionally following the tune by singing and swaying.

As time went on, it became evident that the crowd really wanted to hear their leader. Zauser's mug-face on the Menu-card wasn't enough for them. They wanted to hear what he's going to say. It has been a poor season, and thousands of painters had spent the peak of it in the picket lines. What have been the results of the strike so far? How much strength has the Union gained during this organizational drive? What about "after season"? etc.

Finally the dignified gentleman was introduced. He rose, threw his cigarette aside and unfolded his prepared speech. Many workers in far corners of the hall stared at his direction, humbly, hopefully, expecting any moment to hear something worth-while from the lips of the great leader. It was noticeable that the average, frail, vanity-filled worker was tremendously impressed by the commanding personality of the secretary-treasurer, and he waited like a blind fledgling for something to be dropped from his mouth.

But nothing happened. The same old demagoguery with which all class-conscious workers are familiar. He started with that great American delusion, the NRA and its benefits to the painters. Working upon the susceptibility of crowd-psychology, he even used, at times, some very radical phrases. But nothing concrete, nothing definite slipped from his lips that would benefit the worker. As for example of exempting the members of excessive dues-payment during the unemployment, of dividing of available work more equally amongst the members, of proposing an insurance system during the slack months, etc., not a word.

Yet—finally he said something!

Something that crowned the glory of his whole demagoguery. Said he: "...the Union conditions will be forced on whole industry, if necessary," "If necessary!" That reminds us of the br-rave general who, lacking both guns and ammunition, ordered a furious beating of drums to scare the enemy and hearten his followers. It is laughable especially when one notices how the "enemy"—the master-painter, the independent and the cockroach—does not put his tail between the legs and hike, and how some of the "brothers" do cheer the br-rave Phil. "Atta boy Phil! Tell it to 'em." The poor simps, who paid or were forced to pay $3 and extra for admission, actually believed they were going to get something.

"If necessary!" What deliberate and calculated mockery. There never was a time when it was not necessary. Phil "threatens" "by force" "if necessary" to unionize the whole industry. In time when Local Secretaries are encouraging painters to work for $5-$6 a day instead of $9 scale, in order to get that 50c a day tax, of which more than $3,000 runs daily into the Union treasury at present. How the spirit of 1933 buncombe reverberates in those imitation-artillery drum beats!

And Phil standing heroically erect at the honor table, faces the enemy, some of whom are sitting right at the tables in front of him, and wig-wag his approval and congratulations at his noisy and harmless bluntness. And Phil, in reply, with his back to his "brothers", solemnly winks the other eye.

Will the industry ever be sufficiently organized, to dictate terms to the bosses?

Yes, when "necessary"—which is to say, when painters and all other workers in other industries compel it to be done whether the Zausers think it "necessary" or not.

Discussion Articles

Two Internationals

The German social democracy, not to be distinguished from its international, did not pursue a revolutionary class policy, but in a period of approaching civil war continued to travel the road of reform. It feared most of all, the possibilities of a proletarian revolution in Germany and the bureaucracy of the O. S. P. did everything in its power to prevent such an occurrence. Taking advantage of the bankruptcy of Stalinism upon all important questions confronting the German workers, the officialdom of the G. S. P. toyed with the idea of the united front, hoping at all times that it would never really be consummated, because the development of the united front struggle against Fascism, would inevitably have pushed to the foreground the struggle for power by the German working class.

The main policy adopted by it during the whole situation was the support of the "lesser evil" as against Hitler. Under the policy of "toleration" of the "democratic elements" in Germany, it proceeded to support the Junker Hindenburg as the bulwark of democracy, against Fascism. Its main struggles against Fascism were purely parliamentary, and its fire was directed against the Communists.

Now that Hitler has taken power, how do these people look upon events in Germany? What have they learned over a period of years in which they pursued the policy of reform, of safeguarding bourgeois democracy, of prolonging the life of capitalism? At the International conference of the 2nd International, held in Paris last month, the German situation was chiefly discussed from the point of view of its effects upon the world socialist movement. The main points of view are presented below.

The opening speech by Friedrich Adler, Secretary of the International, reads as follows: "The German Social Democracy was too busy with its immediate problems and failed to formulate a general policy. THIS WAS THEIR MISTAKE. BUT THE REAL TROUBLE WAS THAT THE SOCIALIST MOVEMENT WAS FACED BY THE BITTER HOSTILITY OF ORGANIZED COMMUNISM, and so Social Democracy was crushed..." (emphasis mine—A. G.)

And from Otto Wels, the leader of the German Party, under whose direction the traitorous policies of that organization was initiated: "We made various mistakes but our critics mostly forget the circumstances and facts of the situation in which we worked. Why did we not declare a full Socialist revolution in 1918? And here Wels goes on to attack the Allied countries and to say: "If they had been humane to us, everything would have been different." (emphasis mine—A. G.) And again: "We were driven by terrible circumstances... Only people who do not understand our terrible position can criticize us because we thought internationally (1). We ostracized the middle class in the crisis and Hitler went with the aid of the Communists, who fought us furiously to the very end."

The French Socialist Party
The leader of the French Socialist Party, Leon Blum, eloquently declared: "Real political democracy is impossible without economic democracy, bourgeois democracy being but a stepping stone. The Bolshevik think it is necessary only to gain power and to hold it, but we feel that we want real socialism and liberty."

These men who sank in the swamp of chauvinism, who, whenever it was in their power, throttled movements of revolt and rose to save this social order, have summarized the colossal German defeat. You have the results: (1) The Allies were unfriendly to the "tender republic," (2) The Communists were hostile to social democracy. The conclusions: (1) Greater defense of "democratic" capitalism. (2) Reaffirmation of the policies of the German social democracy.

Here you witness no criticism of the "general line," no questioning of the theoretical outlook of social democracy, no criticism of the tactics of the leadership. It was circumstances and the Communists that were responsible for the defeat. Along with the admission of a defeat, "there are signs that the Hitler regime cannot last much longer. The German socialists and workers will fight bravely and their victory is certain." (Wels). Thus inflated optimism and the promise of struggle in the future.

It is quite true that little else could be expected from this gathering. Every revolutionary worker knew that there could be no other evaluation of the German events by these people. They prepared the ground for all that has taken place. We have treated them briefly, because much has already been said of them and of their role in the labor movement. But it is important to observe their actions during and after great events in order that we may learn from such occurrences, and make comparisons. Here nothing has changed since the first betrayal of 1914. We turn now to the Communist International and its relation to the German events.

III. The Comintern

Matters stand in no different light with regards to the Comintern. The policy pursued by the Stalinist bureaucracy in Germany, was essentially in an active political sense no different than the policy of social democracy. The likeness lay in that neither programs led in the direction of a possible victory of the proletariat. Quite the contrary, the line pursued by both organizations, spelled inevitable defeat for the German workers. And here, the question of consciousness or unconsciousness, has no real meaning. Objectively, the line of march of social democracy and Stalinism led to the victory of Fascism.

If Social democracy held to the theory of the "lesser evil", the Stalinists advanced the position of "national and social emancipation of the German people". When Wels and company came out in support of Hindenburg, Thaelmann and Neumann, drove the Communist party into Hitler's referendum, at the same time substituting the historic slogan of the proletarian revolution with the petty-bourgeois and reactionary slogan of the "peoples revolution". Advancing the theory of Social Fascism, Stalinism refused and prevented the formation of an effective united front struggle against Hitler. On this question, it played directly into the hands of the social democratic bureaucracy. In the course of the past three years, it successfully denied the growth of Fascism, or proclaimed that a victory of reaction would lead to the immediate triumph of the proletarian revolution. Instead of preparing the extra legal struggle, the party of the revolution carried on a purely parliamentary battle against the Brown Shirts, differing in no way from the methods of struggle of the social democracy. Its vacillating and speculative approach to the united front when Hitler was made Chancellor, bound the proletariat hand and foot.

Fascism and Social Democracy
Now, the working class is taught to believe that it has to go through the brutal stage of Fascism before it can experience the victory of the proletarian revolution. The demoralized ranks of the Communist International is given to understand and made to believe too, that the height of revolutionary strategy consisted in maintaining the demerit of the German workers, and conversely, that the united front was inimical to the interests of the revolution. On the day that Hitler was made Chancellor, the G. S. P. proclaimed the main danger to be the social democracy. When the Fascists were marching into power, the Stalinists continued to assert that the main struggle must be directed against the G. S. D. P. All of these outrages were committed in the name of Marx and Lenin. And at each new stage of the struggle, when comrade Trotsky in his numerous pamphlets and articles, and the I. L. O. in its declarations, were pointing the revolutionary way out of the difficult German situation, new expressions, new slanders, new characterizations were invented by these organizers of defeats.

Accepting Fascist functionaries into its ranks, canonizing fascist army officers who excelled in the anti-semitic campaign taking place in Germany, publishing their pamphlets and printing their articles because they announced their adherence to the Party when it issued its nationalistic slogans, only hastened the collapse of the German Party.

Revolutionists never expected the prosecution of a revolutionary course by social democracy. But they did expect that the tactics of the Communists would have severed the millions of social democratic workers from the tall of reformism and win them to the side of the revolution. This was possible only through one tactic: the united front. From the moment that the G. S. P. refused to utilize this supreme tactic of uniting the proletariat, all thought of winning the social democratic worker, was pure illusion. Experience is the only test for policy. What transpired in Germany stands out as the greatest indictment of the policies pursued by social democracy and Stalinism.

Evaluating the German Events
How does the Comintern evaluate the German events? From a disgraceful silence of almost three years, it finally recorded itself in a declaration that appeared in the world Stalinist press. The contents of the declaration can be summarized as follows: The victory of Fascism is not a defeat of the German workers. The German revolution has not only not been defeated, but is well-nigh on the upgrade and will break forth very soon. The German Communist Party is stronger and more active today than prior to the victory of Hitler. The policies of the G. S. P. under the leadership of Thaelmann (that means the policies of the Comintern) were absolutely correct. There were no errors committed. The social democracy is to blame for the victory of Fascism. The Party could not make the revolution because it did not have the support of the workers in Germany (1). Then the statement concludes by garbling and distorting a quotation from Lenin on what constitutes a revolutionary situation, in order to prove that such a condition was absent in Germany prior to March 5, 1933.

What essentially is different here from the "explanations" made by the social democracy? Nothing of genuine importance. Social democracy blames the Stalinists, the Stalinists blame social democracy. The social democrats feared the united front because it would inexorably have led to the proletarian revolution. The Stalinists played into their hands by preventing the execution of this tactic. The social democracy carried on a pure parliamentary struggle against Fascism, the C. P. G. did likewise, warning the Brown Shirts, following their march before the Liebknecht House, to beware the results of the elections. Social democracy declares that Hitler is on the verge of collapse and that his overthrow is imminent; the Stalinists declare that the revolution is today on the order of the day. Both declare their policies to have been entirely correct and signify their intention to continue along the same lines. The revolutionary worker can begin to draw his own conclusions on the basis of these facts.

IV.

With the defeat of the German party, the backbone of the Comintern was broken. Aside from the German party, the largest and strongest party in the international in the capitalist world, the C. I. is composed of small ineffectual organizations that play either small or no roles at all in the countries where they exist. With the collapse of the German party, the most powerful defense instrument for the Soviet Union has been destroyed. Yet, apparently undaunted, the Stalinist leadership organizes distinct defense organizations of musicians, actors, pacifists, soldiers, scientists and others of the same stripe who are and represent nobody in a class sense, as the defenders of the Soviet Union. The anomaly consists in this: that the revolutionary organizations of the proletariat, the only real defenders of the October Revolution, are hampered and made sterile, and are thus unable to build truly revolutionary organizations for the struggle for power (which in the last analysis is the decisive defense of the Soviet Union), while neo-symbolizers of the Soviet Union (those who are rallying to it since the construction of the isolated, independent and nationalist socialist society) are being made the defenders of the Soviet Union and apostles of anti-war work. The latter, as life has shown time and again, will be the first ones to fail and stumble over one another in their hurry to reach their homes, when the first serious conflicts arise, while the revolutionary has been strangled.

Capitulation to Fascism

Before the Nazis gained their victory, the party and the international always boasted about what would happen AFTER Fascism took power. Thus, Remmele in Reichstag: "If they (the Nazis) once come into power, the united front of the proletariat will be established and sweep everything away... They will come to grief more speedily than any other government." (Rote Fahne, October 16, 1931.) We do not doubt that eventually and finally the proletariat will come to victory in Germany as elsewhere. What the events in Germany prove is what has always been understood by Marxists: there is no hopeless situation as no guarantees for the proletariat for capitalism, just as there is not. The decisive element in such situations is the party of the working class. Post-war events have shown that in most cases it was precisely this subjective factor that was lacking, in order to bring about victory for the workers. In Germany this failure of the subjective factor has brought about tragic consequences for the international movement. Today, following this defeat, the German Party offers conditions by which to overcome Fascism. These conditions were borrowed almost totally from the proposals made by the Left Opposition of Germany, in December 1931. At the present moment these proposals have no concrete importance. To think that you can today organize a united front of the working class in Germany is to learn nothing from events. Or, to believe that it is now possible to establish committees of action or armed defense corps, to carry on the fight against the Fascist butchers, is to run about two years behind events.

The Recognition of the German Working Class

What is necessary in Germany today, is clarity. The workers must be taught to understand what took place and why it took place. The German working class will reconstitute itself in a final struggle against Fascism. But one thing certain, this reorganization of the ranks of the German workers will not take place upon the basis of the social democracy of Stalinism. The lessons of the social-democratic betrayal, the confusion and error of the Stalinists, which objectively brought about the same results as did the policy of Social Democracy, have left deep scars upon the proletariat. The "lesser-evil" theory, the policy of toleration, Social Fascism, united front from below, People's Revolution, bureaucratic centralism and national socialism, are dead in Germany, and cannot play any role in the reconstruction of the German revolutionary movement. The German working class will reconstitute itself on the basis of the proletarian revolution, upon the foundation of internationalism, above all.

The international proletariat is marching toward a new period of clarification. Betrayal by social democracy for twenty years, ten years of defeat under the bankrupt policies of Stalinism are forcing definite changes in the ranks of the world proletariat. Clarification as to these defeats of the working class in the "era" of wars and revolutions is indispensable. The needs of the situation demand a re-examination of our own ranks. In this period of clarification, the world proletariat will march forward on the basis of a revolution of events and a reorganization of the forces upon an international revolutionary foundation. That foundation is Marxism, mutilated today by Reformist Social Democracy and the National Socialist doctrines of Stalinism. ALBERT GLOTZER.

The Stalinist Mistake Factory-- Karl Radek and the Polish Prince

There are words which have acquired a sort of currency in the official Communist Party. Such for example is the word "mistake". "We made a mistake here"—is a sort of a formula in the Stalinist ritual, which is intended to the Grand Master of defeats. But there are mistakes and mistakes. If a disaster such as that in Germany takes place it is due not to "mistakes", it is due to a break with all the fundamental principles of revolutionary Communism. To call this a mistake is to dodge the issue criminally. And the history of the party since the defeat of the German Revolution in 1923 is nothing but such kind of dodging, this is because the Stalinist factory of "mistakes" cannot stop by itself. It can be stopped only by timely interference of the Russian and international proletariat before the Stalinist perversion of Leninism succeeds in invoking a terrible disaster on the Soviet Union itself.

Polish Diplomacy Blatantly Explained
Take for example "Izvestia", the official organ of the Russian Soviets. In the issue for September 8, 1933, Karl Radek takes a stand against Prince Sapieha, the former minister of foreign affairs of Poland, under Pilsudsky. Karl Radek informs us that this prince wrote an article in which he stated that Germany should be compensated for the loss of the territory which went to Poland in the "corridor", by "an expansion in grand style" farther to the East than Poland. This, the prince argues, is cheaper than to smash one's head on the barrier of the "corridor".

Here you can see that the Polish prince, defending the interests of "his country" and his class both nationally and internationally, indicates a concrete way out of the present difficulties. But the "international" revolutionist Radek who does his bit in helping to build complete socialism in the Soviet Union alone becomes indignant that Prince Sapieha is attempting "TO DISCREDIT POLISH DIPLOMACY IN THE EYES OF THOSE WHO SUPPORT THE POLISH GOVERNMENT" (underlined by Radek).

Further Prince Sapieha writes that "Poland would be tied by the non-aggression pact with the Soviet Union only if this pact would obligate Poland in some more serious matters. But... there are no immediate prospects of an oftensive on the part of Poland against the Soviet Union and at the same time the non-aggression pact does not contain any clause which forbids Poland to participate in any economic war against the Soviet Union". Besides, adds the prince, the pact is conducted for three years only, and historically speaking three years is a short period.

Radek's Comment

At this point the indignation of Karl Radek becomes high and carries him away completely into the realm of noble feelings. He does the robes of one of the highest priests of the infallible idol Stalin and indignantly pointing his finger to the sky solemnly proclaims: "We establish the fact that the former minister of foreign affairs of Poland is attempting to convince the world, that the Polish diplomacy in signing the principle political documents on non-aggression and accepting the greatest political obligations before the face of the whole world is only acting a play for a short period of time"

It sounds unbelievable, but here is the sad truth. A Polish bourgeois statesman informs the Polish and German bourgeois. In clear language that the non-aggression pact is not to be taken too seriously. That if Hitler wants to compensate himself for the Polish "corridor" it is no use for him to get embroiled with Poland. That a better way out is an expansion "in grand style" farther to the East. Radek sees far enough to state that the warning of the prince about smashing one's head against the "corridor" is nothing but an offer to give away "the corridor" if both Poland and Germany can agree about this "grand style" of destroying the Soviet Union and compensating themselves for the expenses of this destruction.

And the former revolutionist, Radek, becomes indignant about the chicanery of the former statesman and tells the world proletariat that this politician should be watched because... he wants to mislead those loyal bourgeois politicians who signed the non-aggression pact with the best intentions. —L. KOGAN.

NEXT WEEK

5th Anniversary of MILITANT
In next week's issue, which marks the fifth anniversary of the MILITANT, special articles commemorating the event will appear by various members of the editorial board.

In Exile on the Tierra Del Fuego

Argentine Reactionaries Use Torture on Militant Bolshevik-Leninist

There were those old reprobates from justice lured by the storms of life who could not hide their emotions.

Propaganda in Prison

The grey days drag by interminably. We have neither books, pen, nor a piece of paper. No news of any kind from the outside. A veritable tomb for the living. We decide to break the oppressive atmosphere of this routine life. With another comrade we begin a course on "trade union organization". Then another on the "role of the worker in the revolutionary struggle". Some days later, on the request of comrades, we start a lecture on "historical materialism and political economy". And also on the request of all the comrades, I give a history of the Russian Revolution of 1917 and another on the criticisms and program of the Left Communist Opposition.

Never have I seen a greater interest shown than by these comrades who followed the explanations made in the course of day by day. During this time we carried on as intense a political life as the prison rigor would permit.

We are again on board the "Pampa". A sad ending for this proud boat which bears more resemblance to a slave ship than a war transport. Many things had become worse. They put us in the last hold. They close the hatchways. We suffocate. We must satisfy all our needs here... A furious storm hits us as we leave the Malre grait. The old "Pampa" is thrown pell-mell; the pans full of urine and excretions roll with the men who vomit over one another.

A Fight on the Prison Ship
It is no longer bearable. We try to speak with the officer of the guards. He answers with insults. We cry out. We decide once for all, take some planks which serve as a ram and begin to strike at the walls of the vessel. The steam pipes burst open. The hold is filled with smoke. We are suffocated like rats. Several men fall but we continue to bang away furiously. Finally they invite us to a parley. We demand to be let out, in short to travel like men and not to be trapped like beasts. Accepted.

We spend the remainder of the trip on deck except when we enter a port.

After ten days we arrive, half of us are sick. We have returned to Villa Devoto. Strange thing! They place the political prisoners in quarter 30 which is meant for common criminals, instead of sending us to quarter 20 where we belonged. The police are cooking up something against us. We protest; in vain. The fourth day, anticipating the authorities, we begin demonstrations. Outside are workers, awaiting our release, who learn of our protest. In quarter 30 several prisoners cut themselves and shove bloody handkerchiefs and shirts through the windows. The guards intervene at first with water hoses and then with tear gas. They cannot subdue us. The director comes to the quarter: "on order from the chief of police I demand they cease their protest. I will then appeal and they will be put at liberty." We have won.

Again At Liberty
The police plan, which consisted in allowing several days to pass so as to ship us to the department, to put us at liberty in order to lock us up again "for carrying arms", had failed.

We are again at liberty. We will struggle for those who remain in the grip of the hegemony of capitalism, and particularly for the comrades we have left behind in Tierra Del Fuego which can be quite correctly called Tierra Maudite.

We are taking up our places again in the ranks of the Left Opposition, the advanced guard in the struggle for Communist revolution. Buenos Aires, July 1933. —EDUARDO ISLAS.

International Notes

THE L. O. IN LITHUANIA

The Left Oppositionists in Lithuania have been definitely constituted in an organized group, working in conditions of illegality. The comrades have begun the propagation of our ideas by translating the documents of the League of Internationalist Communists into the Lithuanian language. A secretary of the organization has been elected—The Lithuanian comrades write that the number of our sympathizers is increasing, particularly in the ranks of the official party.

The intellectuals of the group are conducting political courses among the workers—"The activity of the Oppositionists has provoked an odious campaign by the Stalinists against them. Every member of the official party has received a warning: fraternization with a 'Trotskyite' means immediate and irrevocable expulsion" from the party. The names of the leaders of Opposition are published in the illegal organ of the party, Partijos darbas (Party Activity). This is equivalent to denunciation to the police.

We greet our new adherents and we hope soon to be able more extensively to inform on their activity.

NATI. CONFERENCE OF SWISS

Our Swiss section held its national conference on September 23. This conference has an enormous importance for the future development of the Bolshevik-Leninists in Switzerland.—After approving the new orientation, the conference adopted the name, "Marxist Action". A new organ under the same name has been issued. The first number dealing with the very important questions of the Zurich elections, has revolutionized in the whole Swiss press.—It is very significant and encouraging to note that the members of the S. A. P. living in Switzerland belong to this new organization.

Great opportunities are opening for our Swiss comrades. It is a known fact that a development to the left has taken place in the Schaffhausen organization, still affiliated to the I. C. O. of Brandler.

THE ILP AND THE MOVEMENT FOR THE NEW INTERNATIONAL

The London New Leader, central organ of the British Independent Labour Party, announces, in the last issue of the paper received here, the publication of a discussion paper entitled Controversy. "Controversy" the London paper says "will, we hope, all the need for a organ where party policy and other points of difference can be thrashed out. The paper is for inner party circulation and members of the I. L. P. will be expected to participate in the discussion ranging over its pages. The first issue will appear on November 11 and will contain, besides articles on party policy, an article by Trotsky on 'Whether the I. L. P. The merit of the Bolshevik-Leninists in Need for a New International'."

Bellussi

The attitude toward foreign-born workers menaced by deportation has been a touchstone of labor solidarity in this country for many years—since the United States ceased to be an asylum for political refugees and its government officials became man-catchers for the tyrants of other lands. Twenty-five years ago the move of the U. S. government—during the administration of another Roosevelt—to hand over a refugee to the rulers of Czarist Russia, for torture and death at their hands, became an outstanding political issue of the day. All the radical labor bodies united in a stormy protest movement which raised the workers to their feet and stopped the deportation. Since that time, especially since the war, the club of deportation earned its place as one of the chief weapons of reaction and its victims have always counted on the warm sympathy and support of the class conscious workers.

This has been especially so in the case of those brought up for deportation to countries ruled by white terror and fascism. The soulless brutality of sending a worker to prison or death in another land, without even the accusation of a crime being laid against him in this country, revolts every human instinct. More than one intended victim has been saved from this fate by the intervention of the radical workers through protests, legal talent and financial aid. Solidarity with the foreign-born workers up for deportation has been a bond of unity between all the class conscious workers worthy of the name.

Anthony Bellussi, held in prison today with an order of deportation to Fascist Italy already pronounced against him, presents a case of exceptional importance and appeal. Here is the now long-familiar story of the rebel against tyranny in his own country seeking asylum in America and finding it a trap, its government officials in league with the foreign tyrant and catching victims for him. Here is the story, over new, bright and fresh, of the indomitable militant who travels the world as a refugee and remains true to the banner wherever he may be. Here is the whole rage and hate and fury of the struggle of the workers against fascism embodied in the person of a single man, a prisoner marked for the vengeance of the fascist beast.

Why is this case not raised to prominence in the radical labor movement and made an issue of the anti-fascist struggle? Why is his name not made a symbol of the fight as it deserves to be? Why are no serious efforts being made to save him from the vengeance of Mussolini by providing transportation and securing asylum for him in some other country? Let the International Labor Defense answer that question—it receives the support of radical workers on its express promise to defend the interests of all victims of bourgeois class justice regardless of their affiliations. Let the Daily Worker answer and explain why it suppresses all news about the Bellussi case and does not even mention his name.

Is it because comrade Bellussi, although not a member of the Left Opposition, was arrested on a charge of distributing copies of the Militant? Is it because the persecution of Bellussi for this offense contradicts the theory that "Trotskyists" are counter-revolutionists and fascists combined? And one more question: Many workers slated for deportation to fascist and white terror countries have finally been saved from this fate by securing permission to enter the Soviet Union. Will this opportunity be given to Bellussi? Perhaps Litvinoff can answer the last question. It is a matter of international proletarian solidarity. Can anything be more important?

The C. P. L. A. Convention

WHEN the Conference for Progressive Labor Action (C. P. L. A.) meets at Pittsburgh on November 18th it will confront as its major problem the outstanding issue presented by international developments—the question of a new international and, consequently, of a new party. This issue of internationalism will overshadow all the convention proceedings despite, or more correctly because of, the deliberate policy of home-grown American radicalism espoused by the organization. Internationalism dominates working class politics and grants no exemptions. It takes its revenge, with a special ironic twist, precisely on those nationally-limited groups which seek to enclose themselves in a national stockade and shut out the winds of Europe and the whole world.

The Lovestone group dedicated itself with a touching "realism" to the idea of a special American brand of Communism. Within the year it suffered one convulsion over the "Russian" question and is now in the throes of another over the "German" question. The C. P. L. A.—still more "American"—is next in order. It is caught in the whirlpool of international issues and every attempt, at Pittsburgh and afterward, to build exclusively on the basis of America will result all the more surely in a demonstration of the utter futility of such a program.

Internationalism is the motto of our epoch, and the determining influence in all tendencies in the labor movement. For all its ardent "Americanism", the C. P. L. A. is itself a by-product of the crisis and disintegration of official Communism in America which proceeds from international causes. The emergence of the C. P. L. A. as an organized body of "progressives" in the trade unions coincided with the first signs of the devastation wrought by the notorious "third period", in America—and not by accident either. Each step the C. P. L. A. has taken to the left—and that has been the general line of its recent development—would have rendered its separate existence more precarious, unnecessary and, eventually, impossible if official Communism had not retreated, in the same period, the general bankruptcy of Stalinism on an international scale.

The existence of a healthy party of revolutionary Communism on the one side, and an organization breaking away from reformism and proclaiming revolutionary aims on the other, would raise insistently in the minds of the revolutionary workers, and especially those in the C. P. L. A., the question of fusion into a single party. If the contrary has been the case; if the ill-starred bloc with the Stalinists came so soon to such a sorry end; if the Muste organization even has experienced a certain growth of influence in the recent period—the real explanation does not lie in "American peculiarities" but rather in the American expression of an international phenomenon—the bankruptcy of the Comintern. The C. P. L. A. owes its transient hour as an independent American movement primarily and fundamentally to factors which are international in their scope.

This situation is, by its very nature, temporary. Further developments of the crisis in the international movement of the workers' vanguard are upsetting the old conditions. Positive forces of new revolutionary life are making their way against the stream, combatting the disintegration, preparing the foundations of a new movement. This is the meaning of the steps already taken in Europe toward the formation of a new Communist International. These new developments are bound to exert a powerful influence in all workers' political organizations and to lead irresistibly to the fusion of all the genuinely revolutionary elements into a single party. Perpetual centrist groupings, such as the C. P. L. A., will not be able to stand aside. They will be drawn with compelling force into the process of differentiation taking place under the sign: for or against the new Communist Party and the New International.

The influence of this issue in the ranks of the C. P. L. A. is already demonstrated in the fact that the question of a new political party has taken the central place on the agenda of the Pittsburgh Conference. It would be too much to expect that a constructive answer will be given there. The C. P. L. A. as a whole is by no means yet prepared to participate in the formation of a new party of Communism, to say nothing of playing a leading or monopolistic role in this enterprise. The plan to change the name of the C. P. L. A.—to label it the new party—is indicated in the programmatic article by Budenz in the Nov. 8th issue of Labor Action is doomed to complete failure. It is an "easy" answer that solves nothing. Proclaiming itself the new party will not relieve the organization of the problem which will arise the day after the adjournment of the Conference and grow more insistent every day.

The organization of a new party is a colossal undertaking. What is to be its principle basis, what consciousness does it draw from the Russian Revolution and the experience of the Comintern under Lenin and under Stalin, with whom it is to be formed, what shall be its international affiliation?—these are the vital questions to which all the revolutionary workers in the C. P. L. A. and those moving toward a revolutionary position will demand a clear answer.

The Left Opposition has given its answer to these questions already. Our program is Marxism—the first four Congresses of the Comintern, and the 11 points of our International pre-Conference, the September 30th Declaration of the League. We are ready to unite with the revolutionary elements of other organizations for the formation of a new party and a new international—on the condition that it be a Communist Party and a Communist International. This is our message to the C. P. L. A. Conference. We trust it will be given consideration there and that those who stand for a new party through the union of all the revolutionary Communist forces will see the importance and necessity of the conference taking a definite and precise attitude toward our proposals.

Trade Union Tactics

WITH the entrance of new masses of workers into the A. F. of L. unions a new favorable basis for the rapid reconstruction of a strong Left wing in the labor movement has been provided. If the correct tactics are employed, the new Left wing should take on a broad scope. The narrowing down of the trade unions in the period preceding the recent labor revival gave exceptional advantages to the conservative officialdom which based itself on the more skilled and relatively well-placed workers. Supported from the left by the bankrupt trade union policy of the Stalinists the reactionaries tightened their grip on the unions all along the line. The heavy influx of new members radically changes the internal situation of the unions in favor of a revolutionary development. Will the Left wing be able to seize the opportunity and press forward with a realistic line of tactics? Or, will the same bankrupt policy, which aided the annihilation of the organized Left wing before, operate to prevent its resurgence now. At the present moment this is the most important question of the revolutionary movement.

The problem is especially acute in the needle trades, and notably in the International Ladies Garment Workers Union. The outcome of the strike, on top of previous developments, finally consolidated the position of the I. L. G. W. U., swelled its ranks with new thousands of members and eliminated the Industrial Union as a trade union factor.

The workers who once followed the Left wing, first inside the International and later outside, are back in the old union. If the militants now adjust themselves to reality and work on the basis of the union, to strengthen it as a fighting instrument of the workers, great successes for the new Left wing are inevitable. But if they take the position that the International is not their union, if they appear in the International as agents of the non-existent Industrial Union, they are bound to isolate and discredit themselves and alienate the workers who regard the union as their own and want it to serve them. By that they will strengthen the grip of the reactionary bureaucrats in the needle trade for a long time to come. Yet this idiotic tactic is precisely the one which the Stalinists, who learn nothing and forget nothing, are prescribing for the Left wing of the International!

This is the greatest menace to the prospect of a resurgent militant movement in the needle trades. The wrecking crew which ruined everything before by its stupidity is trying now to prevent any serious repairs being made. The question of what to do about it is being raised by those workers who want to struggle for a militant policy in the International and, at the same time, count on the cooperation of the Stalinists. The answer is clear. It is impossible to work successfully in one union in the interest of another. You cannot even begin a serious struggle inside the International until you make a complete break with the sabotaging policy of the Stalinists.

Does this imply a break with those who follow or try to follow the Stalinist policy in the union. Absolutely. And the sooner the better. Cooperation in the task of rebuilding the Left wing is possible only on the basis of a correct policy. Stalinism which destroyed the Left wing will never be the policy which rebuilds it. The new Left wing in the needle trades will arise from the joint labors of those workers who understand this thoroughly and do not hesitate to draw the full conclusions from it.

Hesitation on this crucial point out of reluctance to make a division in the opposition can only paralyze the work of the revolutionary militants and play the game of the reactionaries in the International, as in every other trade union. A clean break with the bankrupt and discredited tactics of Stalinism is today the first prerequisite for the emergence of an effective Left wing. Those who mean business in the labor movement and see the issue clearly will make this break at all costs and without delay.

perilous war never lived than Eugene Debs. He was however debased to the function of window-dressing for the party which represented in this country the International of capitulation and betrayal. In his day, there were not a few rogues who sought to conceal their own shame and criminal record under his untroubled mantle, just as years later the Italian social democrats who paved the way for Mussolini hid behind the coffin of the immortal Matteotti. This revolting practice does not become one whit more alluring when the Stalinist bureaucracy and its right wing attorneys take refuge behind the magnificent conduct of Dimitroff at Leipzig and Berlin or denigrate references to the thousands of party militants prostrate under the heel of Fascism. What is decisive is not the heroism of Matteotti; it is not the superb courage of the martyrs to Fascism who are now in its docks and concentration camps. What counts is the systematically fatal policy of Stalinism which led to the situation where Torgler is in the docks instead of Hitler, where the Communists and Socialists are imprisoned instead of the mad dogs of reaction!

The "Existence" of the German C. P.

"The C. P. G. certainly exists, although greatly reduced in numbers, and still includes in its ranks some of the most advanced and most courageous class conscious workers of Germany, an essential element for the reconstruction of the C. P. G." Upon this fact, says Lovestone, "any realistic policy in Germany must be based."

A fact it certainly is, but it is not upon that that the policy must be based. In 1917, and 1918, the same and more could have been said about the American Socialist Party. Hundreds of its militants were imprisoned by the American Socialist Party. Hundreds of its militants were imprisoned by the Wilson regime, its papers suppressed, its meetings prohibited. Yet the proletarian revolutionists declared that the old party no longer sufficed—a new one had to be built. The old party, its program, its bureaucracy, had failed to meet the test of the war, to learn the lessons of the collapse of the Second International and to absorb the teachings of the Russian revolution. The Communists of that day did not (Lovestone deliberately attributes such a stupid attitude to us today) therewith give up hope of winning over the "most advanced and most courageous class conscious workers" in the Socialist parties. Quite the contrary. They set themselves that task and accomplished it with varying success, winning over the majority in some cases. But this was nowhere done on the basis of continuing with the attempt of "reforming" what was beyond reform, but of building up new and independent Communist parties.

When Lenin in 1914, and the Comintern in 1919, declared that the Second International was dead, the Lovestones of that day made the clever retort that there were hundreds of thousands and even millions of workers still in the ranks of the social democracy, which as a matter of fact even experienced a period of growth after the world war, without bringing the Second International to life again. But as is known to most six-year olds, it was never a question of the physical existence of the Second International. It died on August 4th as a revolutionary or progressive force. It was on that historic day that the progressive function it had fulfilled in the two preceding decades—the function of breaking the proletariat away from the bourgeoisie and organizing it into independent mass working class parties—came to a dead stop. The possibilities for progress within the framework of the old International were completely exhausted and a new one had to be built on different foundations.

The collapse of 1914 and the collapse of 1933 have this in common essentially: the possibilities for progress, for reform of the Stalinists have now proved to be completely exhausted. Just as the collapse 10 years ago was the expression of the socialist bureaucracy's attempt to save its own life and its organizational base at the expense of the interests of the proletariat, so the collapse today expresses the Stalinist surrender of the interests of the German proletariat, of the world revolution, in order to preserve the interests of the reactionary bureaucratic caste which has usurped the Soviet state apparatus and which counterposes the building of socialism in Russia to the extension of the revolution on a world scale. Therein lies the August 4th of the International today.

It is not hopeless, insists Lovestone. "The official Communist party is today more accessible than ever to the influence of the Opposition struggle carried on by our group." Precisely so did the Kautskys and other Centrists argue against Lenin and the Bolsheviks in the formative period of the Comintern. Lovestone has here dislocated the subject and the object, for the sentence should read: "The Lovestone group is today more accessible than ever to the influence of the Stalinist party." When the apologists for social patriotism outside the ranks of the Second International clamored loudest that the old socialist parties were on the verge of succumbing to their influence, of being won over to "revolutionary" Kautskianism—the noise served only to cover up the retreat of the Centrists into the camp of the social patriots. If Lovestone is painting up the Stalinist parties to make them look pretty and robust, rejuvenated instead of sterile, it is only with a view to the approaching return of the Right wing to them.

What Lovestone writes about the relationship between the German events and the Comintern, or between them and the C. P. S. U., in his anonymous polemic against Zam, is quite correct, even if it deals a stiff blow to the whole body of dogma erected to justify the queer policy of international Brandism. In defense of this policy, Brandism has contended that while Stalinism is more than capable of pursuing a wrong policy in the capitalist countries, it is capable of pursuing only a correct policy in the U. S. S. R., where it is historically necessary, justified and irrefragable. Now Lovestone argues from exactly the opposite standpoint: if new Communist parties are to be built in Germany and the rest of the capitalist world, "very obviously, this means a 'new' party in the Soviet Union" because "the C. P. S. U. and the C. I. . . . are at least as responsible for this (the German) course as the C. P. G. leadership itself."

A Brandist Contradiction

This is quite correct, even if it does not constitute the only reason why a new Communist party must be formed in the Soviet Union. But how is such a line of reasoning to jibe with the previous Brandist philosophy according to which Stalinism in Russia was an entity by itself, separate and apart from Stalinism in the capitalist world? That Stalinism had to be defended in Russia regardless of what criticisms or attacks were made upon it elsewhere? That in a capitalist country independent "Communist parties" (Alsace, Sweden) were permissible provided they condoned the Stalinist robbery of the Russian party's independence? The philosophy is simply ignored—not dogmatically because it has been discarded by the Brandist, but paradoxically enough because in this particular instance a pseudo-internationalist universality is needed by Lovestone & Co. for his maligned defense of Stalin's security in the national apparatus.

The nationalist philistinism of the Lovestone position sticks out like a swollen thumb in his rejection of the new party for the United States. "Neither political nor organizational relations in the revolutionary movement of this country have changed materially in the last period of time. . . . To urge the formation of a new party in the U. S. A. on the basis primarily of alleged changes in the Communist movement in Germany, as do both the Trotskyites and others (that) tell Zam where he belongs!—S., discloses a hopeless divorce from the actualities of the labor movement and class relations in the United States."

How genuine and touching a tribute to the spirit of the late Morris Hillquit! It will be remembered how the recently deceased flunked against the Left wing in his party in 1919 because they wanted to build a new party and discard the old "on the basis primarily of alleged changes" produced by the equally alleged Russian revolution, and not on the basis of "the actualities of the labor movement and class relations in the United States." Hillquit wrote more gracefully and persuasively; otherwise the arguments are identical, equally reactionary and intentionally misleading.

Culmination of Ten Years

The Left wing demanded a Communist party in 1919 not simply because "something" had happened in Germany in 1914 or in Russia in 1917, but because August 4th had sealed the fate of the Second International, its program, its philosophy, its tactics and because November 7th had verified the need of a new international, introduced a new program and new tactics of world wide applicability. We propose today a new International and new Communist party not because a little slip was "sincerely and genuinely" made in Germany, but because the German events marks the culmination of ten years of Stalinist revisionism, because the old Comintern has collapsed, because it was shipwrecked after the bureaucracy threw overboard its revolutionary internationalist ballast, sails, rudder, keelson: because the German events were the outcome of ten years of the dismemberment of the body of Leninist ideas put into the foundation stones of the International, ten years of socialism in one country, of repudiation of socialist intervention, of capitulation to the petty bourgeoisie, of objective aid in the preservation of the discredited social democracy, of "social fascism" and the united front from below, of strangling the Chinese revolution and the British revolutionary movement, of poisoning the ideological wellsprings of the Communist parties, of corruption, degeneracy and usurpation, of enormously enhancing the dangers to the Soviet republic, of systematically crushing the vanguard movement and reducing the International to a foreign agency of the Soviet bureaucracy.

It is not we who are hopelessly divorced from actualities, but the Lovestones who are hopelessly fascinated and in love with the prospect of being graciously permitted to crawl back to the antechamber of the Stalinist chambers. In a deeper sense than is generally recognized—there lies the difference between us. That is why Lovestone continues to prop up the collapsing structure of Stalinism by means of specious argument and falsification.

The Crisis in the Cuban Revolution

Events in Cuba are moving toward a crisis. The strike wave is coming up again. The struggle against American imperialism is taking a violent form in the cities. In the interior the situation is still deadlocked: the workers hold some mills and plantations as guarantees of their demands for higher wages and better conditions while the soldiers and student bands of the Caribbean Army sent against them have not come to grips with the workers except in one or two cases.

But this state of affairs cannot long continue. One way or another they must be resolved definitely in the interests of the workers or the American imperialists and their Cuban bourgeois servants. The sugar crop in Cuba matures in autumn or early winter. The harvesting begins in December. It is the aim of the government to drive the workers off the sugar plantations, before the harvest season comes round to insure the American and Cuban owners their vested rights and whatever potential profit there is in the crop.

The workers on the plantations who are armed and organized to some extent will resist the attempt to evict them. In the one or two attempts to evict them that have already taken place the workers have demonstrated that. The conflict may develop into a widespread civil war. If the government is successful the United States warships will not land their complement of devil dogs.

But if the fighting should go the other way through the going over of the soldiers to the workers as is not impossible, the American imperialists may resort to armed intervention. The capitalist press reports that the Washington administration is looking for a formula by which it can land marines.

The difficulty here is the result of this action and its consequences in Cuba would have in Latin America today the Latin American aspect of the question is at an acute stage. The attempt to drive the workers off the plantations coincides in time with the Pan-American Congress which is to convene shortly in Montevideo. For the United States capitalists this congress is an extremely important one. They will make a determined effort there to "adjust" the South and Latin American markets in the interests of "our" own trade. Any misstep in Cuba may tip the scales at Montevideo in favor of English, which have been making inroads into these markets at the expense of the American brigands.

But if the policy of Yankee piracy is beset with difficulties from its trade rivalries it is unhampered by the international working class outside of Cuba. Nowhere is there a broad movement of the workers in defense of the struggling Cuban workers. The responsibility rests in the first instance, on the Stalinized Comintern.

The policy of the Comintern in the Cuban revolution is also the policy of the Communist Party of the United States, which of all the Communist parties outside of the Cuban party is the most directly involved in the struggle against American armed intervention. There is no movement in the United States. The Communist Party of the United States has demonstrated again its conception of internationalism. Its agitation is confined to articles in the Daily Worker and forum lectures. Demonstrations? There was one puny affair of the "vanguard" in Philadelphia. There may have been one or two others. But there has been no serious attempt to build a movement of support to the Cuban workers! Are the American Stalinists under orders not to "interfere" with the success of Litvinoff's diplomatic mission?

It is now the immediate, burning task of the advanced section of the American working class to come to the aid of the Cuban workers.

Notes of the Week

"Pigs Is Pigs"

It might have been another chapter of the Mad Hatter and the March Hare. But it was actually a news account in the New York Times.

We refer to a story of triumph and justice as it is practiced in these United States, in this day and age—After NRA, after the New Deal and after the Rooseveltian exaltation and mobilization of the "Human Agencies."

In Brooklyn, the other day, a magistrate held court over a villain who maltreated three poor little pigs, copped up uncomfortably in a cage too tightly built. A representative of the S. P. C. A. after pondering over this sight (which was used as a display advertisement for a popular porcine comedy at the Flatbush Theatre) had the perpetrator of the crime arrested.

The judge, whose commiseration with such animals thereby becomes understandable, ordered the hogs freed, scolded the defendant and slapped the cryptic sentence:

"Pigs is pigs and not subway sardines."

All this may be found to be an exact rendition of the Times story on Wednesday, October 26, 1933. The magisterial announcement, reported here in all its cynicism, gives a good measure of capitalist justice and the system on which it is based. "Fit for pigs"—that's capitalist's right.

A Subway Sardine Commits Suicide
—With Apologies to the Police

John Subway Sardine, on election day known as Mr. Taxpayer or the Voice of the People and otherwise regarded with eulogies on the dignity of labor, leads a less dignified existence than the three little pokers. The courts are not for him. He is not provided with any warm covering to protect him from the cold (that was another point of litigation in the case of the Flatbush Theatre). There is no S. P. C. A. to prevent cruelty against him.

Yet, he holds the proud title of human being. He is, by the law—"a free man". Free to sell his labor power to the boss. Free to starve when the "supply of labor hands exceeds the demand."

How heinous this freedom is, how much human dignity is lowered beyond the range of swine by the "commodity market" which produces unemployment, may be gathered from another item in the week's news (World Telegram, Tuesday, November 7, 1933):

JOBLESS, GOING BLIND,
HIE SLASHES WRISTS

Note on Park Bench
Apologizes to Police
For Trouble.

Robert Guinevahl sat on a park bench in Central Park before dawn today and took stock of himself.

He was 35. He was hungry, jobless. He was going blind, and he could not pay for medical care. It would become worse when winter came.

He scribbled a note to police:—I am sorry, for causing all this trouble. Then he cut his wrists with a razor blade. He collapsed finally from loss of blood. A motorist took Guinevahl to Bellevue. Doctors said he might live.

How class justice deals kindness to pigs. Working class victims apologize for committing suicide! This is the U. S. A., 1933.

How long will workers stand for pig justice? How long will they apologize for going under? How long will they allow a system of society which degrades them to a fate lower than the beasts, to do its work of human distraction?

CORRECTION
The first paragraph of comrade Abern's article in last week's Militant contains a misprint. The first fourteen lines of the article should have read as follows:

Edward Bernstein led the attack of reformism against the revolutionary doctrines of Marx and Engels. Laying emphasis on immediate gains and objectives, Bernstein completely subordinated, or subverted the need of revolutionary strategy to guide the proletariat in its struggles. He lost sight of the ultimate goal of socialism—the goal which, on the one hand, conditions the character of the strategy and tactics of the revolutionary workers and, on the other hand is determined by them. For the means employed will also determine the end.

Probation for Food Workers

Stalinist Expulsion Order Revoked Under Pressure

The framed-up expulsions of James Gordon, Sec. Pappas and Sylvia Weiner from the food workers industrial union for the crime of "Trotskyism" (?) were revoked at the last membership meeting of the union at which the Stalinist inquisitors who put through the order at the meeting of the so-called "trial committee" were compelled to make a shameful retreat under pressure of the protest movement which was rising in the ranks not only of the left wing workers in general, but even of members of the official Communist party. Instead of being formally expelled, the three comrades are now put on probation.

A whole squad of Stalinist functionaries from the Trade Union Unity League, headed by Sam Assa, were in attendance at the membership meeting in order to supervise the discussion, procedure and conclusion. They had hoped that the original expulsion order could be put over without creating much of a stir, and that they would thereby be rid of three militants whose impeccable record in the union they were quite prepared to ignore completely in view of the fact that these Oppositionists had become a thorn in their sides, fighting their encroachment and their disastrous policies at every turn.

Workers' Protest
This plan came a cropper, however, when scores of workers, especially in the food and needle trades industry, made it perfectly clear that they intended to carry on a determined fight in behalf of those expelled and against those who so criminally kicked them out, going so far as to take one of them on her job simply because of her political views.

With the protests of these workers ringing in their ears, the Stalinist officials were compelled to reverse the decision of expulsion arrived at by their own party faction and present to the membership meeting a "recommendation" from the New York T. U. L. Council that the expulsion action be revoked and the three comrades put "on probation." "Expulsion," explained Assa to the meeting, "is too good for these individuals. We don't want to make heroes or martyrs out of them."

Purpose of "Probation"
When Gordon, in the course of an impassioned indictment of the bureaucrats and their course, demanded to know the precise nature of the "probation," the Stalinists refused to make any explanation at all. Gordon and Weiner both declared that they would accept no conditions. They were not guilty of any crime against the interests of the trade union or labor movement, and the charges concocted by the bureaucrats either had to be substantiated—which was impossible—or to openly withdrawn and squashed. The purpose of the so-called "probation" was, however, made clear by the Stalinists in an indirect manner. Their courage having failed them, and having been compelled to withdraw the expulsions in the face of the indignation of left wing workers, they are now seeking to accomplish the same end without the cums of the formal action. "We're going to make life miserable for you in this union until you're forced to quit," was the illuminating observation of one of the machine-men.

The final action taken by the meeting, the bulk of which was under the disciplinary domination of the party faction to which this union—like most of the C. P.-controlled unions—has been reduced in essence, was as follows:

Graduated "Sentences"
Comrade Gordon was put on probation. Comrade Weiner was also put on probation, and the job from which she had been removed in the party "Goops" restaurant, was returned to her, also "on probation." Comrade Pappas, who could not be present at the meeting because he was in the hospital, is to be forced to accept a "withdrawal card" from the union—which is a "polite" way of effecting his expulsion. Pappas, besides the crime of "Trotskyism," must also pay for the fact that his physical condition has been undermined by the loss of health and blood in dozens of militant battles of the union against employers, gangsters, and police. Rarely does even the most reactionary union in the country permit itself so cynical and brutal measures against a militant who has sacrificed as much for the working class movement as has Pappas. Gordon was given a bare five Tag-Day for Terzani Defense This Week - End in N. Y. C.

To all Labor Organizations:
FELLOW WORKERS:

The United Front Terzani Tag-day Conference, held at 94 Fifth Avenue, Saturday, November 11th, decided on the following addresses as the Regional Headquarters for the Tag-days. On the 17th and 18th the United Front Committee will call to issue collection cans and receive collection cans from the collectors of all organizations participating in the Tag-day.

Addresses of Headquarters

Brooklyn:

Williamsburg:
289 S. 3rd Street

Flatbush:

841 Utica Avenue
2339 Church Avenue

Brownsville:

219 Sweeney Avenue

Bronx:

9 W. 170th Street
809 Westchester Avenue
2700 Bronx Park East
792 East Tremont Avenue

Rosa Park:

1377-42nd Street

Brighton:

1113 Brighton Beach Ave.

Manhattan:

7 East 15th Street
100 W. 72nd Street
2005-7th Avenue
94 Fifth Avenue

1148 St. Nicholas Ave.
Queens:
30 Flushing
b206-27th Street
Near Queens Plaza
Long Island City.

Downtown Brooklyn:

157 Montague St.
Hensonhurst:
87 Bay 25th Street

Coney Island:

2202 Mermaid Ave.
333 Sheffield Ave.

The necessity of every labor organization and every worker giving the fullest support to the Tag-day cannot be over-emphasized. Terzani goes to trial November 27 and the results of the trial will ultimately affect every worker in America. Regardless of our union affiliation or political allegiance we must combine our forces at this time to defeat the common enemy of all mankind. The best way that we can do this at this time is to give the maximum support to the Tag-days, November 17th and 18th.

Call at the Regional Headquarters that is nearest to your home, get a collection can, contact every worker in your neighborhood and ask them to contribute toward the defeat of Fascism. Bring your membership card for identification. Have the representative of your organization get the collection cans for distribution from your local center.

Socialist Mayor Promises Cheap Government

An interesting incident of the recent elections in the election in Bridgeport, Conn. of a socialist to the mayoralty and an entire socialist city administration, whether this rebirth of municipal "socialism" in another city besides Milwaukee, indicates a change towards radicalism in the mood of the masses or whether it is the triumph of good clean government is not within the province of this article to answer. Significant it is, however, that whatever causes motivated the majority received by Jasper McLevy, the new socialist mayor, his statement to the press must be received with jubilation by the solid citizens of Bridgeport.

No red threat of expropriation hangs over the heads or the property interests of this New England city. The first socialist administration to be elected in Bridgeport, McLevy makes it quite clear, is out to bring "economy" into the city finances, to save the taxpayers money. The unemployed and striking workers are not even mentioned by implication.

"I intend," says Jasper McLevy, ranking socialist, "to administer the affairs of the city with common sense and sound business judgment." This statement approximates the post election effusions of Mayor La Guardia or any successful Republican of Democratic candidate. It means balance the budget and if it fits into the financial pattern then the bothersome unemployed will get a look in.

"I intend to rehabilitate the financial and social life. I will introduce civil service and the merit system in the Police and Fire departments." Don't be astonished if the workers aren't mentioned, and the cops get attentive consideration. "This is a socialist talk."

"I have no obligations." No, not to the working men. "If necessary I will go unhesitatingly out of the party to fill key posts." No doubt a banker would make a better administrator of the city finances than an exploited proletarian.

"I realize that I cannot introduce socialism by a municipal victory, but we can sweep clean the city government and lay the foundation for a good, sound, constructive administration."

Take note of this municipal socialism. It has great potentialities... for the bosses.

ADMISSION 15 CENTS

In the Fascist Inferno

The story of an Austrian miner, Alois Hohenreich, is published in the Volksblatt of Linz. Hohenreich had migrated to Germany to look for work, as he had been unemployed for some time. He reached Zwettau in Saxony where he had been promised a job, to start June 18th. On the day before, he was arrested on the grounds that his papers were not in order and that he was a spy who intended to send unfavorable reports back to Austria. He was carried back and forth between a concentration camp and several prisons. He entered complaints against his confinement.

Because of this he was brought to a cell where he had been held previously, on June 29th. There he was stretched out on a table with three Storm Troopers holding him down, while three other Storm Troopers belabored him with rubber cudgels on his back, seat and all over the table, one Storm Trooper standing with his foot on the back of his neck so that he could not defend himself at all, while another held him by the hand and threatened him with a revolver, declaring that he would be shot immediately if he uttered a sound. While on the floor he was given another ninety blows with the rubber cudgel. In addition to this and a rain of cuffs on the ears, he was spat upon and called an "Austrian swine."

On June 30 he was released after he was forced to sign a statement that he had no cause for protest or complaint concerning detention. On July 5 he reached Austrian territory where he was examined by a doctor who found ample evidence of the treatment which he had received.

Lovestone Evades Challenge

On October 18, 1933, the following letter was sent to the Lovestone group by special messenger: "Dear Comrades:

"Some time ago there was an exchange of correspondence between your organization and ours concerning the arrangements for a debate at which the fundamental differences dividing us would be discussed in public. For a number of reasons, the debate did not materialize at that time.

"With this letter, we renew our proposal for a debate between a prominent representative of your organization and a spokesman for ours. We are prepared to have our committee of two meet with a similar committee from your organization to discuss all the details involved, such as the subject-title of the debate, the speakers, the hall, the date, the financial arrangements, etc., etc. It appears to us that there is a growing interest in those questions upon which our respective organizations take opposing stands. A public debate would not only draw several hundred workers but would serve to clarify many of the problems now confronting the Communist movement in this country and throughout the world. We might add that we are especially inclined to have the debate take place around the question of your position and ours

A. Bellussi Deporting Imminent

Quick Action Needed to Save Anti-Fascist

The decision against Anthony Bellussi has been upheld and his immediate deportation to Italy has been ordered by the Department of Labor. The danger of this militant being delivered into the hands of Mussolini's hangmen is now most imminent. Heroic efforts will have to be made in the next days to save him from this fate.

All that is left now—since the deportation order has been confirmed—is to secure for comrade Bellussi the right of voluntary departure to another country, to find another country which will admit him and to provide him with passage money.

This right of voluntary departure has been granted by the Department of Labor in similar cases and, if the proper efforts are made, it should be secured for Bellussi. Also, in other cases, the International Labor Defense had secured permission for deportees to enter the Soviet Union and has provided the expenses for the journey. Only two weeks ago a case of this kind was reported in the Daily Worker. No move has been made to extend this solidarity to Bellussi, and, we can be sure, none will be made.

As the final hour draws near it becomes absolutely clear that if he has to depend on the U. S. D. Bellussi will be handed over to the Fascist butchers. Although he is not a member of the Left Opposition, Bellussi is regarded as a sympathizer and was arrested on a charge of distributing the Militant. For that "crime" he is receiving a double punishment: Deportation by the U. S. Government and sabotage of his case by the Socialists. The bulk fund of the U. S. D. was not available for him. Up to the present day, although he has been in jail for months, the Daily Worker has not printed a line about his case.

To leave the fate of Bellussi in the hands of these cynical saboteurs would be a crime. We must act independently without delay to save this sterling militant from the danger of torture and death in Fascist Italy. A defense committee is cooperating with the American Civil Liberties Union to secure a delay of the deportation and permission for him to enter another country. Efforts are also being made to secure his temporary release on bail. We hope for success in our efforts. Your help is needed. Send funds to the Bellussi Defense Committee, J. P. Cannon, Secretary, care of the Militant, 126 East 16th Street, New York City.

LYNCH THREAT FOR SCOTTSBORO BOYS

As we go to press, dispatches from Decatur, Alabama, arouse anxiety over the fate of the Scottsboro boys whose retrial starts this week.

Lynch mobs are being organized by reactionary Southern politicians to rid themselves of all legal embarrassments.

Threats have been directed not only against the nine boys, but also against Ruby Bates, star witness for the defense and the defense attorneys.

Peiping.—About a month ago we sent you a letter in which we gave a rough description of conditions here. Now, however, the situation in North China is changing rapidly. The conditions for revolutionary activity have become more difficult than they were a month ago. The first maneuver of General Ho Yin-chia, the right hand of Chiang Kai-shek, upon his arrival in Peiping, was the destruction of the C. P. and the organizations affiliated with it and the suppression of the anti-Japanese fighters.

A Wave of Arrests

In a short time mass meetings were forbidden, several party militants were shot, a wave of arrests spread everywhere, three comrades of the Left Opposition and many important leaders of the party were arrested. Practically all the party organizations in North China (including Peiping, Tientsin, Pootin, Shantung, etc.) are annihilated.

An important fact: Many of the party members who but yesterday slugged our comrades as counter-revolutionaries have been converted by Ho Yin-chia and are joining the Blue Shirt Fascist clique. All these gentlemen are saying today: "Only the 'Three Principles' and the Kuo Min Tung can save China from imperialist attack.... The Communist party is a foe.... We must crush it!"

The party organ, Red Flag, analyzing this trend of capitulation, concluded: "It is inevitable that in the process of the revolutionary movement some members pass over into the camp of the enemy." This is an indication of how blinded are the bureaucrats in face of a critical situation.

There can be no argument as to whether capitulation is inevitable in the revolutionary movement. But at present it is not a question of a handful but of a current, a movement! This movement is taking place while the bureaucracy is at the helm of the party.

Some months ago the Red Flag wrote: "About one hundred workers (?) have joined the Communist Youth League in one month! About ten workers a day!" While they howled with glee over the quantity, the quality was ignored, party education was trampled under foot and the Communist party was consequently transformed from a vanguard of the proletariat into a mass organization. The current of capitulations is the result of this policy.

Recently a rumor has been spread around that the Police Department is planning to destroy the Left Opposition just as it has destroyed the party. This is quite possible. The burden of oppression of the ruling class is great but we are continuing our fight, never tiring, never faltering.

Please send us some of the new books which you have published, such as "The Only Road," etc., etc. With Communist greetings.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.
Peiping, Sept. 24, 1933.

Hitler's Secret Police in Terror Campaign

The following report is taken from a news item in a London newspaper:

From a Special Correspondent
A new and sinister organization—Hitler's Secret Police—is now coming to the forefront of the news from Germany.

Wielding far greater authority than the chiefs of the ordinary police force, and howling the knee to none but Captain Goering, the drug-addicted Prussian Premier, their excesses are causing a reign of terror in Germany.

No one—not even a Nazi—knows whether he is safe from them. Not only do they wage uncontrolled war against the opponents of Hitler but they also provide the Nazi leaders with a handy instrument for settling private feuds.

The Secret Police are composed of men, hand-picked by Captain Goering.

Riddled With Bullets
One of their chief roles is that of executioner. Day after day, reports reach London from Germany of the body of this man or that being found riddled with bullets.

The official "inquiry" that takes place almost invariably comes to a sudden stop. It is found that the murder is the work of the Secret Police—and there is nothing more to be said.

The Secret Police hold their own "trials" at their various headquarters.

The prisoner—previously beaten to ensure his docility—is sentenced regardless of the accuracy of the charge.

They All Die
Prisoners tried by this new Star Chamber are whisked off to the concentration camp at Oranienburg, near Berlin, the most dreaded of all camps.

The mortality among prisoners here is so great that it is reported from Berlin that the camp will be shortly closed, not from motives of humanity, but because the death rate exceeds the supply.

Rising at 5 A. M., the prisoners have 15 minutes in which to wash and dress. Work, under the rule of the whip, lasts till midday, when a "dinner" of cabbage and potatoes is served. More work follows till 7 P. M., when tea with bread is provided. Eight o'clock is bedtime, and so the days pass in an animal sort of existence.

No one in Germany has yet heard of a prisoner coming from Oranienburg alive.

NAZIS INVESTIGATED
Clarence Hathaway, of the New York Daily Worker, presented damaging evidence, incriminating prominent American reactionaries, before the investigation of Nazi activities in the U. S. A., begun on November 15 in Washington, D. C. by the Dickstein (Congressional) Committee.

Hearings were disrupted by a head-on collision between Hathaway and Rep. Focht, who called the former an "anarchist."

Open sessions of the investigation were postponed to Dec. 4.

SAVE TOBIER AND DIMITOFF!

Too Much Bread

Gutzon Borglum, famous sculptor, in an article on conditions observed traveling through the Dakotas, makes the following observations which should give us an insight on what's behind the hunger of farmer and worker alike. He says in part, in the New York Times for November 12, 1933:

"A few weeks ago when the poorest of our farmers were breaking into the towns, their poor, old, unvaluable chattels piled on to a trailer, they explained they wanted to be with people, that they might get a little help during the winter."

This farmer himself a chattel of the banks and the ranchers, can get enough for his produce to live on through the winter. He must throw himself on the good will of his friends and relatives. The poor farmer lives in penury because the price is too low and the taxes and interest too high and the worker must suffer nevertheless. How explain this? Borglum gives the answer in another paragraph:

"A few weeks before Mayor Cermak of Chicago was killed he told me: 'There are over a half a million loaves of state bread in the market every morning in my city. I can't get hold of more than a few thousand. They are systematically burned, burned to protect the market while Chicago is struggling to feed one of the great overcrowded breadbaskets on the earth.' There's the answer. The farmer leaves the land. The prices are too low because there is too much wheat. The city worker suffers from "under-nourishment" while the surplus bread is burned to make prices high.

Figure it out for yourself! What kind of a system is this for the farmer and the worker?

"Emancipated" Children

One of the greatest boasts of the NRA is that the new deal has eliminated the curse of child labor from American industry. The "Brain Trust" is willing to concede that wages have not been raised as high as was necessary or hours as low as called for—but the abolition of child labor is the accomplishment of the generation and Roosevelt.

What is to happen to these children released from bread-winning and factory-killing toil? Mrs. Perkins, crusader against child labor and secretary of labor had the following to say at the Baltimore Hotel before the women's division of the Crusade for Children on Oct. 30, 1933:

"That means," she said, "that there are six million children in want and in hunger, not through any fault of their own, but because the bread winners of their families are out of work."

How make restitution for these little victims, whose bones are rickety from hunger and the lack of sunlight and fresh air? Abolish the system greedy for the huge profits wrung out of the toil of children? Or if that is too radical pass an unemployment insurance

Big Sums for War Purposes

Huge Appropriations for Military Revealed

"Uncle Sam's" War and Navy Departments are very busy. All western ports are being enlarged. Recruiting offices are open and the pick of the unemployed are being accepted—mostly college graduates. New barracks are being built in nearly all government towns and military posts, enlarging their quarters for officers and men. Contracts for ammunition have been let to several large companies including Chase Brass & Copper Co., Inc. of Watertown, Conn. and the Bridgeport Brass Co. These contracts average $3,000,000 apiece. General Electric got a contract for $3,000,000. Doubtless the regular arms companies like Winchester, Remington, Savage, Western, DuPont, etc., also received large orders but no complete figures are available. (All figures given here are as of Nov. 9th).

Huge Army Contracts

Contracts have been let for Coast Guard, Radio and Air Corp. Stations, Air Corp. hangars, research laboratories, ordnance warehouses, auxiliary barracks, magazine and shell houses, military police barracks, and chapels. These contracts amount to at least ten and a half million dollars, fully 90% being for new barracks. The reports are scattered and not clear out evidently from 500 to 600 new army camps entirely apart from the conservation camps for which no figures are given here.

Plans are also in progress for a detention farm in Mexican owned by the Dept. of Justice and for border "inspection" stations along the entire Mexican and Canadian boundary lines.

New contracts totalling the same amount as those already let—$10,000,000—are being awarded to building contractors daily. The capacity and adaptability of factories for making ammunition is thoroughly known and orders for each one according to this knowledge are lying in War Department files ready for immediate release. "Uncle Sam" is concentrating on the army and navy and these he is concentrating on the West coast. Fort Sam Houston, Texas, gets over one and a half million dollars for new barracks. The Macon, largest dirigible in the world, has been transferred to California.

Hundreds of Millions for War

All this expansion of the military machine is in addition to the snip-oudding for the Navy which runs into many hundreds of millions, many of these hundreds of millions (both for the Army and the Navy) being labelled for public consumption as NRA and "Public Works" projects. Compare this with the fact that cities most urgently in need of federal assistance for building projects cannot obtain it from the Public Works Administration because a city seeking this help must first turn over bonds for 70% of the cost of an undertaking and many cities cannot do this because of tax delinquencies and heavy debts to bankers.

With the collapse of the NRA the government has an excellent excuse for enlarging its war machine; it puts men to work and money into circulation. War itself will be a heaven-sent boon bringing new markets and "prosperity" for "all." Capitalism will have its roast pig if it has to burn its own house down.

Rushing War Preparations

But at present there is no immediate war crisis and no need for ballyhoo. Even "preparedness" bloodhounds must be satisfied. All is quiet; without batting an eye or apologizing to any one the government is rushing its war preparations, far outstripping other items of its Public Works, NRA and "Conservation" programs which serve as bait to public hopes for jobs and wages, peace and better times. Yes, not only will we have better times; we will celebrate. On the first fair day there will be an international picnic.

—MARTIN BEARDSLEE.

measure so designed that the worker can support his child in moments of enforced indigence?

Perish the thought!

The solution is the old-sheld game. Charity. A committee of 400 men and women have been appointed, headed by none other than the famous philanthropist, Thomas W. Lamont, to raise $400,000 for six New York City child welfare agencies. The child slaves are converted into child paupers. That is the great "Roosevelt Revolution"

Militant Builders

THE WINNERS

One change of note in the standing of the highest scoring snappers from last week took place in the displacement of S. Jomart of Toronto from third place by A. Caplan of Kansas City. Last week they stood as follows: S. Jomart 8; A. Caplan 7. Since then Caplan sent in four snbs and Jomart none. Koehler of Youngstown tops the list with 27 and S. Hardy of Philadelphia is next with 17. He is a newcomer in these drives.

To Koehler go the three volumes of the History of the Russian Revolution by comrade Trotsky, the first prize; to Hardy—two volumes; and to Caplan—one volume, second and third prizes respectively.

The books will be in to them within a week.

SHORTCOMINGS

Thirty-one subs last week brought the total in the drive up to a hundred and sixty-five. With that figure the drive closes. It cannot be called a success. Previous drives netted many more subs. And they were conducted in condition that were less favorable for their success.

At the beginning of the drive we pointed out that if we worked toward a new subscriber for every one then on the list we could double our circulation of single subscriptions. We felt below that figure. We felt below him that nature

It is possible that we set too short a period for the drive and that our comrades and branches took more time than we thought was necessary to swing into line. If that is so it will show up in the next few weeks. We will continue to record them as they come in.

But, of course, they will have no bearing on the drive which is closed and the winners who are listed above.

And in view of that possibility we suspend judgment. When we know we will offer our explanation for the failure of the drive.

MORE SUBS
The work of building the Militant will continue. Let us see if we cannot at least hold the average we have struck in this drive of about thirty subs a week. That should not be very difficult. If we go to it with a will it will be surprisingly easy.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE MILITANT

We want to make a standing offer to sub-getters. To every comrade who sends in 20 snbs (either half year or year or both) we will give a bound volume of the Militant, series two. Series two is the Militant that runs from the first issue of the present format, July 4, 1931 to the end of 1932.

Scoring will begin on November 20 and will continue until further notice. Weekly reports will be made in this column.

The Rift in the Lovestone Group

The declaration of the Lovestone majority "On the New Party and Trotskyism" is equally divided between a general philippic against the idea of a new Communist international and new Communist parties in every country, and a specific assault upon that current in the revolutionary movement which is in the forefront of the new movement: the Left Opposition. Before passing over to a consideration of the standpoint of the official minority (Zam), let us devote a few observations to the latter half of the Lovestone document.

As is known, there is hardly a name which has not been hauled out of the catalogue of abuse for the purpose of designating the so-called "Trotskyists". Left Mensheviks, Right Mensheviks, counter-revolutionaries, super-industrialists, anti-industrialists, super-anti-Kulaks, pro-Kulaks, Leftists covered with tight phrases or Rightists covered with loose phrases. The last name to be attached to the Opposition would seem to have claimed the possibility of any of the previous ones recurring in Stalinist literature: "the vanguard of the world counter-revolution".

Lovestone now retraces these steps—as if everything he said yesterday had not been meant seriously—and solemnly explains that we are taking the place of Austro-Marxism and are being transformed (at this late date!) "from a tendency in world Communism to the ideological focal point of a new international Communist concentration". Today is Trotskyism that serves as the binding force, as the ideological platform, for the various groups attempting to crystallize an international organization "between the Socialist and Communist Internationals." Trotskyism is rapidly becoming classical form.

The Austro-Marxist School

The identification of our fundamental standpoint with that of the Austro-Marxist school was first made some eight or nine years ago by the Russian party bureaucracy, for the purpose of covering up its own recantation with Centralism. Lovestone's revival of the calumny has no tetter in its mind.

The fundamental attitude of the Austro-Marxists towards that problem in which are comprehended the essential questions of contemporary revolutionary politics—the proletarian revolution in Russia—is not so obscure or unknown as to permit of much confusion. According to them, Marxism left no room in its conception for the outbreak of the first proletarian revolution in a country like Russia. The Russian revolution is therefore not only illegitimate, but it is not and cannot be socialist, and whatever it may be, it is doomed in advance. Russia, as an economically backward and capitalist country, simply did not have the right to a socialist revolution, and for arrogating to itself this right it is doomed to the brimstone and hellfire of damnation. Russia should have waited its turn until a more advanced capitalist country—Austria let us say—had its revolution first. And Austria must wait with its revolution until its more powerful capitalist neighbors succumb to the revolution, otherwise isolated proletarian Austria would succumb to the counter-revolutionary forces around it. And Germany and Hungary must wait until their proletarian revolutions, for should they materialize, the French and English imperialists might become so wrathful at the impudence of the former Entente proletariat as to smite them with their superior military forces.

Austro-Marxism and Bureaucratic Centrism

These elaborate apologies of Austro-Marxism for the policy of passivity, capitulation and despair pursued by Messrs. Adler, Bauer, Reumer and Co., are based on an approach to the problem of proletarian revolution which is blood brother to that of bureaucratic Centrism in the Soviet Union today. To substantiate their contentions, the Austro-Marxists produce voluminous statistical data to prove that Russia in 1917 was a backward agricultural country, with a small industry and proletariat, and not a land possessing the material prerequisites for socialism.

The Stalinist proponents of the theory of socialism in one country place themselves on exactly the same ground as the Austro-Marxists! They differ from the latter only in this, that they produce equally voluminous data to "justify" the seizure of power by the Russian proletariat and the independent construction of a classless society by furnishing statistical proof that Russia does possess the "material prerequisites for socialism."

This approach to the problem which Austro-Marxists and Stalinists have in common, leads the one to national passivity and the other to national utopianism. It flies directly in the face of the conception held by all genuine Marxists before the war—and up until today. There can no longer be a premature revolution in Europe, Lautsky explained more than a quarter of a century ago. Capitalism on a world scale has become rotten ripe for socialism, wrote the internationalists during and after the war; it has entered the epoch of world revolution.

Lenin's Point of View

"Russia has not reached such a stage of development of the productive forces as would render socialism possible," Lenin quoted the Russian Austro-Marxists a year before his death. "This is the sentence with which all the heroes of the 11 International, among them of course Suchanov, are strutting around, decorated with all the pompous feathers. They repeat this indisputable statement in a thousand tones. But it seems to me that it is not decisive for the estimation of our revolution."

If the debate with the Austro-Marxists is conducted—and that is how the Stalinists are compelled to conduct it—by challenging this "indisputable statement," which "is not decisive for the estimation of the Russian revolution, the Russian Centralists (and their right wing camp followers a la Lovestone) actually accept the fundamental postulate of national "autonomy" laid down by the Austrian Centralists and differ from the latter only to a statistical degree, as it were.

On the basic question, therefore, of internationalism versus socialism in one country, it is not "Trotskyism" which is "rapidly becoming" Centrism in its contemporary classical form, but Stalinism which is Centrism in its Soviet-bureaucratic form. Lovestone, who takes his oath on the Stalin theory of national socialism, is thus giving a clear example, in his document, of how convenient it is to lay down a smoke-screen of attack against "Trotskyism" in order to cover up an obsequious apology for Stalinist Centrism. There is no such thing as the former; the latter, however, not only exists but does you understand—also disposes of and dispenses great power and office, and let it be noted, as we magnanimously let forgive an erring but penitent underling as it is merciless in ousting him from the American party's Political Secretariat.

The "Declaration" on Centrism

The identification of our position with Austro-Marxism stands out too badly as a mere assertion in the Lovestone statement. It therefore proceeds to enlarge upon it with a casual reference to the "Declaration of Four" (Left Opposition, Socialist Workers Party of Germany, and the Independent and Revolutionary Socialist Parties of Holland) as indicating "very clearly" its essentially Centrism character. Here, as so often in his whole political career, Lovestone is simply relying on the abuse of trading on the gullibility of readers who may not take the trouble to read original documents. In point 3 of the "Declaration of Four" we read:

No less energetically must be rejected the theory of the Austro-Marxists, Centralists and Left reformists who, under the pretext of the international character of the socialist revolution, advocate an expectant passivity with regard to their own country, delivering thereby the proletariat in reality into the hands of Fascism."

And in point 8: "While ready to cooperate with all the organizations, groups and factions which are actually developing from reformism or bureaucratic Centrism (Stalinism) towards revolutionary Marxism policy, the undersigned at the same time declare that the new International cannot tolerate any conciliation towards reformism or Centrism. The necessity unity of the working class movement cannot be attained by the blurring of reformist and revolutionary conception."

A Deliberate Falsification

These two passages, it would seem, ought to "indicate very clearly" not only to what extent the Opposition has become the ideological focal point of a new international Centrism concentration, but also the extent to which Lovestone is accustomed to stating facts correctly. But there is more material before us. Whoever thinks that one swindle per document is enough, does not know the gentleman and the school we are dealing with.

"The Trotskyist Manifesto for a new International," writes the artful dodger, "carefully avoids all reference to Soviets as the form of the proletarian dictatorship. The deliberate refusal even to mention the Soviets likewise constitutes a virtual renunciation of the fundamental principles of Communism."

Here we reach a point where it requires a physical effort to overcome a feeling of revulsion and to continue the article. Is it possible or worth while even to write against persons who so obviously and deliberately lie—not exaggerate, not misunderstand, not misinterpret, but simply and flatly lie? Yet there are workers who read such abominations and put credence in them; so we swallow hard and proceed. The manifesto, we are told, has not merely "overlooked" the Soviets, but has "carefully avoided" and "deliberately refused even to mention" them. We turn to the Militant of September 23, and read in point 8 of the Declaration: "To remain equal to its task the new International must not permit any deviation from revolutionary principles in the question of the insurrection, the proletarian dictatorship, the Soviet form of the state, etc."

The Truth About the "21 Points"

Apparently under the illusion that like Stalin who enjoys an absolute monopoly of the Soviet press, he can lie wholesale and with impunity, Lovestone goes on with his arraignment of "Trotskyist-Centrism" to show that we demand the "radical revision" of the 21 points of the Comintern which, he reminds his readers, "were first formulated as a means of radical differentiation of Communism from 'Centrism'." So they were. Now let us see precisely what we do demand, as stated in the declaration of the Opposition representatives at the Paris conference:

"The 21 conditions for the acceptance to the Communist International elaborated in its time by Lenin for the purpose of a decisive separation from all types of reformism and anarchism, acquire at this stage again an urgent character. It is of course not a question of the text of this document which should be radically changed in accordance with the conditions of the modern period, but of its general spirit of revolutionary Marxist irreconcilability."

In other words, if the text of the 21 conditions is to be changed then, only in the sense of making more distinct the line of demarcation between the Communists of today and the Centrists and reformists of all varieties, including Stalinists and all their apologists and attorneys. The 21 conditions must be revised not by watering them down to make them more acceptable even to the most radical of the reformists, but so that they may reflect the significance of those thirteen years of tremendously important events in the international class struggle which have intervened since the second Congress of the Comintern. These events have deeply confirmed the soundness of the intemperate spirit of the conditions set down in 1920. Anyone who would cling rigidly to the liberal text of the 1920 document, and refuse to incorporate into it what we have been taught by the rise to power of Stalinism, the dispute over national socialism, the defeat of the Chinese revolution, the catastrophe in Germany, the problem of Fascism and social democracy—would not be a revolutionary Marxist but a poor bookworm of an archivist. Lovestone is not even the latter, for there is something honorable and respectable about that vocation which has nothing in common with forgery and misrepresentation.

The "August Bloc" Hoax

As the trumpet call in his marked deck, Lovestone plays the "August bloc." He is referring here, let us be emphasized, not to the bloc with Iswerelli and the Mensheviks proposed in March 1917 by Stalin, not to the bloc with La Follette in 1924, and Purcell in 1926, and Chiang Kai-Shek in 1927, and Upton Sinclair in 1933, nor even to the Lovestone bloc with pseudo-progressive labor states in certain trade unions, but to the "opportunistic concentration against Bolshevism" in 1912.

Now, who are the representatives of Bolshevism today against whom are united the "heterogeneous tendencies, running all the way from open reformism to self-styled ultra-radicalism" of which "the ideology of 'Trotskyism' is the binding force"? Surely, nobody will ask that the flexibility of one's sense of humor should be taxed to the point of considering the Brandellites, more than half of whom have already passed into the camp of the social democracy, as the modern representatives of Bolshevism? For, after all, who is there with time and energy hanging so heavily on his hands as to go through the trouble of making a bloc with anyone else for the purpose of an international campaign against.... the Brandellites?

Or perhaps the representatives of Bolshevism today are the Stalinists? "Should this standpoint be adopted by the Communist Opposition," Zam writes with some concern in his minority declaration, "there would be left no alternative but to liquidate and return to the Comintern." That is precisely what Lovestone's new sortie against "Trotskyism" signifies: his preparing for a complete reconciliation with the Stalinist apparatus.

The Position of the Centrism Parties But the "bloc" of all these heterogeneous Centrism groups for the new International—what about that? It does not exist, uneasy and unfortunate reader of the Workers Age, not even in Lovestone's mind. At the Paris Conference of independent socialist and Communist parties and groups, held in August 1933, there were more than one "contemporary classical" Centrism organization represented. Some of these organizations were close to the Second International or moving (at least in sections) towards it. Others were close to Communism or moving towards it. Still others stood for the merging of the two Internationals or for the creation of an intermediate organization. These included such groups as the English Independent Labour Party, the Norwegian Labor Party, the Party of Proletarian Unity in France, the Italian Socialist Party (Balebanova), the Independent Communist Party of Sweden (Kilboom), the Russian Left

S. K. S. of Stenberg, and the Right wing Iberian Federation of Mauria & Co.

On the key question of the new international, the official minutes report (page 24): "For the second amendment of the S. A. P. (Germany), declaring in principle for a new international—all the seven organizations listed above are recorded as voting 'Against.' The Lovestone document 'carefully avoids'—or shall we say 'utterly refuses even to mention'—any reference to this revealing little detail. Nor would it be appropriate for him to do so. It would not into the rest of his document like a fly in a sewage bucket.

A Ringleader from Hiloquit

Lovestone so notoriously rooted in the American class struggle, takes "Trotskyism" to task further because "the political justification for this sudden change of position in the American class struggle it finds exclusively in some alleged developments in Germany.... It still remains without roots in its own conditions, a mere international extension of Russian Trotskyism in its new form."

It is not entirely fair to attack Lovestone for this wretched nationalistic distortion of Marxism, because the real author of it is, as we suggested last week, the late Morris Hiloquit. In his time, he so poisoned against the Left wing in his party and the Communists in general for justifying the change in the position here because of "some alleged developments" in Russia. In September 1920, he inveighed in the New York Call, with all the ardor of a one hundred per cent American revolutionist, against "the incorrigible tendency of the Moscow international to deduce from specific and casual Russian conditions inapplicable social maxims of universal application." A few years later, that other learned pillar of genuine, unadorned American socialism, James O'Neal, who also could not conceive of the American Communist movement taking shape upon the basis of any event occurring outside the purlieus of Union Square and who still looks upon the movement as a foreign product smuggled into this country without even the payment of customs duties, expressed away the incantation by writing: "The 'SPB' in the American organization was direct outcome of the Russian revolution and the attacks made upon pro-war Socialists by the Russian Communists. Even the manifesto and program of the Left wing which formulated the grievances of the insurgents did not charge the American Socialists with support of the war."

Clearing the Atmosphere

We have no record at hand of what Lovestone thought of or replied to the Mayflower Socialists at that time. From his present-day attacks upon the idea of the new international and a new Communist party in the United States, however, one can only conclude that the reasoning of Hiloquit and O'Neal must have made a persuasive and lasting impression upon him.

The Lovestone statement ends with a not very elaborately conceived bid for unity with the Stalinists "to prevent this Centrism crystallization into new 'Communist' parties nationally and internationally." The tight wing leaders are ready to crawl back, especially if the terms of their pardon are not too obstructively humiliating. We speak as disinterested observers; by all that has been said above, we see no good reason why the reunion of Lovestone and Co. with their Stalinist taskmasters should not be speedily effected. It is a consummation devoutly to be wished for. It will clear the atmosphere.

To the Cuban Workers & Peasants

(Ed. Note: We print below the full text of the manifesto recently published by the newly-formed Bolshevik-Leninist Party of Cuba.)

The delegates of the sections and nuclei of the Communist Opposition of Cuba, assembled on September 14th, 1933, after an extensive and thoroughgoing study of recent events decided to constitute nationally the BOLSHEVIK-LENINIST PARTY and to publish and circulate this manifesto which contains an initial statement of clear and definite principles.

The Importance of the Party

In the political struggles of the Cuban proletariat no event has ever occurred as important as this step which we have just taken. In the midst of the present turbulent political situation accompanied by the most frightful confusion and chaos, the minority formed by the Communist Left Opposition has made a resolute decision and has worked out through the iron will of hundreds of workers, the form and essence of a new workers revolutionary party.

This party, which rises after a long and difficult struggle of over a year, does not hesitate to openly declare before all the workers, that it emerges from the very womb of the Communist party of Cuba and that it is historically the negation of the latter.

It has become evident in the most recent times in the complicated economic and political situation of Cuba, that the lack of a real revolutionary party has frustrated the ascending development of the revolution many times. The great tragedy of the oppressed Cuban masses consists in their not having found as yet a vehicle capable of carrying them on the road towards their final emancipation. On the crossroads to victory the masses have always felt the lack of the subjective factor which is necessary for the achievement of its liberation.

The existence of deep ferment and decomposition in the whole capitalist regime, means nothing, nevertheless, there does not exist the organized force of a proletarian revolutionary party able to direct realistically the protest and rebellion of the masses during a political upheaval.

Irrespective of our wishes, a revolutionary workers vanguard can only be organized at certain historical conjunctures. In periods of great revolutionary struggles, the ebullient flow of the mass movement automatically produces the necessary means for carrying out successfully the creation of a new party.

The Cuban Situation and the Bolshevik Party

In the present period of rapid developments and sharp crises, the Cuban working class needs and produces a revolutionary vanguard from its own ranks. This step does not need justification before history because it is an integral and fundamental part of the historical process itself.

The present situation and the difficulty of our position in it is no secret to the Bolshevik-Leninist Party. Armed by Marxism with the most efficient instrument for analyzing the historic processes, understanding the extent and consequences of their development, we are able to comprehend that never before in Cuba has there taken place such an outstanding political event as the rising of the rank and file of the army in the early morning of September 4th. The revolt of the non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the army opens a new stage in the revolutionary process in Cuba. This rebellion completely confirms our correct political line wherein we affirmed, ever since March 1933, that the fall of Machado would provoke clashes between the reactionary bourgeois wings of the Opposition, and the various elements of the petty bourgeoisie. The theory held by the leaders of the Communist party several months ago (May 30), that "a broad radicalization of the masses" existed, which "obliged the forces of the counter revolution to unite", has fallen to the ground smashed by the reality of the situation. Can it be said that there exists a broad radicalization of the masses at the very time when an uprising of the rank and file of the army takes place, and this uprising brings the petty bourgeois elements of the Directorate Estudiantil to the seat of power?

The coming to political power of the petty bourgeoisie has already placed before the masses in a practical form, the questions of bourgeois democracy and the instability of this outlived state form. In the face of the violent break of the petty bourgeoisie with the reactionary "mediation" forces, a regrouping of the bourgeois and petty bourgeois forces in struggle for the holding of power is taking place. Yankee imperialism, represented in Cuban politics by Sumner Welles, openly supports the formation of the counter-revolutionary front led by the ABC and Menocal.

In this situation the Bolshevik-Leninist party clearly understands that only a truly independent class position can save the proletariat from defeat. Confronted by the forces of the counter-revolution, the Bolshevik Party takes a determined stand, in the belief that in the present historical conjuncture the worker and peasant masses are in a position to marshal their forces and to prepare themselves for the revolution. The national liberation of Cuba, as a colonial country, must be posed in a concrete form. Under the pressure of imperialism the Grau San Martin government, successively wavers, gesticulates, threatens, yields; but does not firmly conduct the direct and fundamental attack against Yankee intervention. Only the working class in alliance with the poor peasants can liberate Cuba from the iniquities and oppression of imperialism.

The International Situation

The formation of a new revolutionary workers' vanguard, must necessarily deal not only with national questions but also with international problems. The present historical period characterized by the decline of finance capitalism has transferred the solution of complicated national problems on to the international arena.

Bolshevism was the inspiration of the glorious launching of the Third Communist International. Those of us who today militate in its ranks must honestly declare that a new stage has begun in the history of the world's workers movement. The catastrophe which took place in Germany with the shipwreck of the German Communist Party and the triumph of Fascism, have forever destroyed the possibilities of a regeneration of the Communist International. The cadres which throughout the world have broken from the domination of the Stalinist bureaucracy, now pose resolutely the question of a new International, which will turn its back on the bureaucratic centrism of Stalin-Mamulsky and face towards a real Marxist-Leninist conception of the class struggle.

At this juncture, we declare, as in the Bolshevik-Leninist statement at the recent conference of Left groups (the Paris Conference—Id.), that even in its present state the USSR is a workers state and that we are prepared to defend it. But his defense cannot be expected from the degenerate Soviet bureaucracy, but rather from the proletarian masses themselves guided by the new political orientation of International Leninism.

The Bolshevik Party and the Revolution in Cuba

Cuba, a semi-colonial country, which is rapidly becoming—if it is not already so—a Yankee colony, presents to the proletarian vanguard the clearest possible idea of the character and the realization of the agrarian revolution.

The Bolshevik Party, cannot predict the exact date of the agrarian revolution, neither does it pretend to be able to build socialism overnight in a country of poor and middle peasants, with a proletariat that is still politically too weak to rally the peasants around itself and come to power. Like every other colony Cuba lacks independent economic unity, and on the whole its economy is still in a pre-capitalist stage. Favorable objective conditions coincide with the marked liquidation of the subjective factor. And the possibilities of developing the movement have not been lost but rather delayed. The difference between the petty bourgeois elements and ourselves, the Bolshevik-Leninists, rests, in substance, on the form of government capable of guaranteeing the independence of the island, in the means of obtaining it and its aims. The most recent efforts of the "Anti-Imperialist" intellectuals of Latin America, led by the "Andristas", are oriented towards applying the "Latin American liberation formula". This formula has a common denominator in all countries: the necessity of the capitalist development of the economy in these countries. The fact that the industrial proletariat is not entirely developed in the colonies and that the national bourgeoisie is an emaciated and spineless class incapable of struggle against imperialism in defense of its own class interests, leads them to the conclusion that the proletarian revolution cannot be realized in America and that the struggle must be limited to driving imperialism out of these lands in order afterwards to develop on their "own independent economic" path. This concept looks for support in quotations from Marx and Lenin, arbitrarily snatched from the text and rearranged to support their contentions. These so-called "Marxists" state that it is impossible to jump over the stage of the bourgeois revolution in America, and consequently that only a gradual, slow development of the historical process, and "orderliness" of the "unsmotherable" historical stages, is possible without falling into utopian Socialism. This is false; absolutely false. Marxism as an economic doctrine does not believe in gradual, slow changes, in unsmotherable barriers, but rather a highly revolutionary theory which recognizes the possibility of jumping two stages at a time; two steps at a time.

In the present world situation, the interlocking character of the whole of world economy prevents the consideration of events from a one sided point of view of any single country in particular. From this springs the fact that, isolating Latin America from the rest of the world, and from the ripening of world economy for its revolutionary transformation, these petty bourgeois arrive at the conclusion that in Latin America the necessary capitalist conditions for realizing the Socialist revolution are not mature. This new petty bourgeois formula must be discarded in its entirety. We cannot consider the struggle in an isolated sense but only as a part of the world proletarian struggle. Our internationalism is not based on bold theoretical statements but on the economic structure of world capitalism. If we separate the colonies from the other capitalist countries, they have no independent economic unity and are in reality incapable of developing by themselves. But the task with which we are faced today is not exactly that of initiating capitalist development in America but rather of realizing the agrarian revolution; carrying out the dictatorship of the proletariat. "It is a question of knowing if we can attain that the development of capitalist economy is inevitable in the backward countries that now enslave themselves and in which certain progress has taken place since the war. We have reached the conclusion that the development of capitalism in these countries is not inevitable, especially in case where the victorious proletariat has conducted systematic propaganda in them. With the assistance of the proletariat in the advanced countries, the backward countries can reach the Soviet organizational form, and passing through a series of phases reach Communism, escaping a capitalist period."

This opinion of Lenin's is our conception. History cannot be turned backwards just because ten or fifteen countries are reared in their development, neither can the revolutionary movement stop to wait for them.

For this reason, the Bolshevik Party declares on the agrarian and national question and on the content and aims of the agrarian revolution, the following:

1. The national liberation of Cuba, as a semi-colonial country can be obtained only through the revolutionary struggle of the proletariat which applying the Bolshevik formula, drives the peasantry behind it.

2. The peasant question cannot be understood by the proletarian vanguard and still less in these semi-colonial and agrarian countries. The victory of the agrarian revolution depends upon which class the peasantry follows, the proletariat or the bourgeoisie.

3. The formula issued by the leaders of the Communist party concerning the development of the agrarian revolution, its slogans of "struggle, the confusion on the question of the mechanics of state power—in whose hands it should reside—all this must be discarded. In its stead should be placed the slogan of the agrarian and anti-imperialist revolution under the leadership of the proletariat in alliance with the peasantry.

4. The intimate victory of the agrarian revolution can only be obtained by the development and triumph of the world proletarian revolution. Therefore the Bolshevik party recognizes the necessity of effectively joining our movement with the worker and peasant masses of the entire world and specifically of the United States and Latin America.

5. It is necessary to take advantage of all the conjunctures in order to unite the proletariat with the peasantry and develop the agrarian revolution to its conclusion. If the proletariat does not secure this support of the peasant masses in advance, if it does not manage to "draw them behind" itself, it is then utopian to even think of the victory of the revolution in Cuba.

6. The native bourgeoisie and petty bourgeois, rural as well as urban, organically and ideologically, are incapable of leading the revolutionary struggle of the oppressed people to its goal. All collaboration with these elements in regard to the specific purposes of the revolution, is but treason to the workers and peasants. To hand over these forces to a petty bourgeois leadership, is to repeat consciously the betrayals in China and Mexico.

7. The agrarian anti-imperialist revolution, will not only fulfill the tasks of the bourgeois revolution (liquidation of the feudal forms of production, national liberation, agrarian revolution, etc.), but must, by the very fact that the bourgeoisie is not the motive force in it and that it is carried out without the support of the bourgeoisie and against the bourgeoisie, lay the foundations, from which the step can be taken to the socialist revolution and the proletarian dictatorship.

8. Given the character and future development of the agrarian and anti-imperialist revolution only the proletarian vanguard organized in a Bolshevik party, can achieve the revolutionary alliance of the proletariat and peasantry, accomplishing by this, the final triumph of the revolution. The so-called Anti-Imperialist Leagues, are organically and politically incapable of fulfilling these tasks, and are nothing but coarse caricatures of the revolutionary "united front". In their place, only the leadership of the proletariat organized in its class party, will be capable of fulfilling this role.

9. Finally, it is very clear to us that the victory of the agrarian anti-imperialist revolution can only

Five Years of the Militant

FIVE years ago this week the Militant made its first appearance of the spokesmen of the ideas and doctrines of the "Russian Opposition"—the heirs and defenders of the Bolshevik October. The five years of the continuous publication of our paper have been a period of rich in great events which put all currents in the labor movement to a historical test. Our current alone stood up under it. We have every right to a feeling of deep satisfaction that we have held true to our course. Ours is a profound and unshakable conviction that what we did five years ago, and all that has been built upon it, was right. On the fifth anniversary of our paper militant we repeat nothing and retract nothing.

The warning signals of the International Left Opposition were no false alarms. The tens years of reaction against which the Bolshevik-Leninists struggled without success have come to their tragic culmination in the downfall of the Comintern. What is most important in the whole world today is the fact that forces making for the reconstitution of the international movement are already at work, that the skeleton of its future organization exists and that its fundamental program has been elaborated.

In this preparatory work, carried out under a hailstorm of slander and persecution, the Militant played a part. The new party of Communism in America, which will constitute a section of the Fourth International, will mark its launching in November 1938, as an important and significant date if it does not tract its genealogy directly to that date.

Our struggle to set the counter current into motion and to prepare the way for the new movement was conducted from the first—and is still conducted—with inadequate material means and forces. Our chief weapon—almost our only weapon—was the Militant. The capacity of our movement to endure, to survive and to gain an influence under these circumstances is testimony to the power of Marxist ideas. They make their way in spite of everything. The celebration of the Militant, alive and strong on its fifth anniversary, is a celebration of the vitality of the doctrines of Marxism which nothing and nobody can kill.

By all that has gone before the militants grouped around the Militant are called upon to play the main part in assembling the elements of the new party in America. They are the bearers of its ideas. The Militant, as the spokesman of these ideas, only grows in significance as the new turn of events multiplies the opportunities and responsibilities.

All that has been done up till now is only a work of preparation for the future. Without minimizing our weakness or biding our faults we can face that future, and all the responsibilities it imposes, with confidence. The foundations that have been laid are impregnable. If we build on them we will build for victory.

Litvinoff's Visit and Russian Recognition

WITH public attention focused on the visit of Litvinoff and his discussions with Roosevelt, the question of Russian recognition is an outstanding issue which is stirring all interested political circles and economic groups into an increased activity; that is all circles except the one to whom the issue belongs first of all—the Communist and Left wing labor movement. While these various elements in American bourgeois society discuss terms, make conditions and bring forward one program or another, agitate heatedly and exert pressure for or against the recognition of the U. S. S. R. according to their special interest, the one section of the population which has the greatest stake in the issue—the radical labor movement—stands paralyzed and refrains from any intervention. What is the explanation of this anomaly? This neutralization of the working class in a matter of the most vital concern to them is more of the rotten fruit of Stalinist diplomacy.

From the point of view of the Marxists, the relationship between the workers state and the capitalist governments is an expression of the class struggle, that is, a fundamentally irreconcilable conflict. ("One or the other must finally triumph," said Lenin). While the final outcome of this conflict remains undecided, the Soviet Union is obliged to enter into temporary agreements with the bourgeois state powers which the workers aim eventually to overthrow, in pretty much the same way as trade unions bargain with private employers whom the workers aim to expropriate.

The condition for the making of an advantageous bargain is not under any circumstances the good will of the capitalists. The talent of a Soviet diplomat is a minor item; in the final analysis it cuts about as much ice as the shrewdness of a business agent in a trade dispute—the masters are acutely conscious of their material interests and cannot be talked out of them. What decides is the relative strength of the workers and its full mobilization at the moment of negotiations.

By disorienting the workers vanguard and paralyzing its activity, Stalinist diplomacy deprives the Soviet Union of the pressure and influence of its most reliable ally. That is why the question of recognition by the U. S. government is being considered as an internal affair of the bourgeoisie, influenced by any serious working class demonstration. Under such conditions it can be taken for granted that American capitalism will concede only what its own requirements dictate and will take full advantage of every weakness of the Soviet Union in presenting its own demands.

The humiliating spectacle presented by the one-sided discussion of Russian recognition in bourgeois circles can be ended, and the interests of the workers' state and of the American labor movement, in this as in every case, can be really defended only by the independent intervention of the workers' vanguard. The revolutionary workers must fight for the interests of the Soviet Union without the aid of Stalinism and against its pernicious policy.

In the first place the visit of Litvinoff should not be allowed to dampen down the working class agitation for recognition. On the contrary, it should be the signal for its stormy development on the broadest possible basis. Recognition should be made the central issue of a mighty united front movement which would shake the country with its clamorous demands for unconditional recognition in the midst of the negotiations at Washington. Every reactionary group is busy with demands and conditions and restrictions on the Soviet Union. Let the workers thunder their own demands on the Roosevelt Government to recognize the Soviet Union at once and without any conditions!

In the second place, while every reactionary clique is demanding "concessions" from the U. S. S. R., the workers should present their own demand for a "counter-claim" from the Wall Street Government. That demand, which unites the interests of the American with the Russian workers concretely, is—Long Term Credits to the Soviet Union!

Over three years ago the Left Opposition raised this slogan as an issue of the labor movement. It was denounced by the Stalinists as counter-revolutionary. Now it forms the central topic of the negotiations between Litvinoff and Roosevelt, but the latter is under no compulsion from the workers at home. He is free to accept or reject the proposal, or to hedge it about with restrictions, conditions and penalties, as the interests of Wall Street dictate. The composition of the Stalinists to agitation for Long Term credits deprived the Left wing labor movement of a living issue and has worked mightily to weaken the position of the Soviet Union in the present negotiations.

The slogan of long term credits is just the link needed to tie the American workers directly to the socialist construction in Russia by their own material interests. Opposition to it is a crime. Long term credits for Russia, to finance the purchase of American machinery, would serve to alleviate the unemployment situation to that extent. At the same time they would aid the development of Russian industry and improve the situation of the workers there. An immediate mutual interest would unite the American and the Soviet workers in the fight for this demand. The fusion of this demand with the demand for unconditional recognition would create the motive power to build a great movement among the American workers, hard pressed by unemployment, within a very short time. From this a great development of international solidarity would naturally follow.

It is high time to make an end of silent acquiescence in the back-stairs diplomacy of Stalin and Litvinoff. It is high time to organize a fight of the working class on the question of relations with Russia.

be guaranteed by the proletarian dictatorship, and that this proletarian dictatorship will not appear after the revolution, but on the foundation of the revolution itself, as the only force capable of achieving the agrarian and anti-imperialist objectives.

It is necessary to leave no room for doubt in this respect. An enormous theoretical poverty exists in this question, which, however, the Bolshevik party does not hesitate to tackle. The sectarian group has never been able to answer these essential questions, simply because it has not realized its responsibility in regard to them. In a petty bourgeois manner, they mask their ideological confusion by talking together a half dozen anti-imperialist slogans from the international store-room of catch words and slogans. In practice they have not advanced one inch further, in the agrarian and national questions, than the petty bourgeois of the A. B. C. However, they frantically attack these latter, perhaps because of a special desire to contradict themselves.

Possibilities of a Resurgence of the Official Communist Party

Before deciding to make the turn towards the formation of a new party, we have given due consideration to the possibilities of a general political resurgence not only of the Communist International but of its Cuban section as well. The development of recent political events, has returned the most valuable and honest elements, who had been in exile abroad to the ranks of the Communist Party of Cuba. These new forces, which the bureaucracy is very careful to keep on the periphery of the party, clash objectively with the old routine, sectarian tactics of the leadership. But the intensity of the clash is toned down, because the sectarian leadership maneuvers capably, extending to these new elements the strings which will definitely tie it to the worn-out and worm-eaten party apparatus.

These comrades still believe that it is possible to restore the Communist party to its "political normalcy", and that this restoration must take place from the inside. In spite however of their heroic efforts and sincere purpose, it will be proven useless. The degeneration of the party is complete.

We have fought hard ever since 1931 to create the renovating current capable of saving the party from its own corruption. These efforts have been in vain.

Those comrades who still struggle for the regeneration of the party, do not yet feel the pressure of the ruling bureaucracy, because the latter finds the menace of our group enough for the present. As soon as the Stalinist wing of the party is definitely entrenched in its position, it will turn disloyally against these new elements in an attempt to suppress them. Then, the friction between the two forces, will push towards the Bolshevik-Leninists, the most capable and revolutionary sections of the party.

To those militants who still conserve their ideological honesty,

(the Bolshevik-Leninist Party will never close its doors. The future of the world belongs to Bolshevism.

LOVESTONE'S APOLOGISTICS IN TORONTO

Toronto. — Lovestone's whole speech here was an apology for all the false Stalinist policies. So much so, that workers began to ask why aren't you inside the official party? What is the difference between you and the Stalinists.

Not one hostile question or, as a matter of fact, not one word of criticism was uttered against Lovestone by any of the big crowd of Stalinists present. The loudest and sincerest applause to Lovestone's remarks came from the Stalinists. This is very significant, especially when we recall a few months ago when Lovestone spoke in Toronto, they could not sit straight in their seats. It was only when Lovestone began to explain, in reply to a pointed question, the "few tactical differences" with the official party, did the Stalinists refrain from applauding.

The History of the Left Opposition by Max Shechtman, promised some time ago by Pioneer Publishers, is soon to appear. The pamphlet was long delayed due to financial and technical difficulties. It will sell for five cents.

SOCIETY NEWS

(Press Reports)

New York, Nov. 15.—The princess Alexis Mdivani (Barbara Hutton) reached the age of 21 yesterday and received a one-third share of the $600,000,000 estate left in 1919 by her grandfather, F. W. Woolworth, the five-and-ten-cent store operator.

In her honor, her father, Franklin Hutton, stock broker, gave a dinner party last night at the Hutton home, 1,020 Fifth Avenue, surrounded by fifty guests at small tables, a Hungarian orchestra and opera singers as entertainers, his daughter made it evident she still felt as she did before the spectacular wedding in Paris, when she told the world: "It's going to be fun to be a Princess."

(Adolph Gerstenzang, forty-eight years old, unemployed chemist, who was to have been possessed from his apartment at 885 West End Avenue, committed suicide Sunday night by shooting himself.)

Barbara Hutton Mdivani is a happy-go-lucky good natured girl. She is generous, easy-going and fun-loving. She likes to dance—tangoing is her favorite pastime. She usually drives her own car and is fond of horses.

She made her debut in December, 1930, at the Ritz-Carlton. That party, the largest ever given in her honor, cost $50,000. Silver birch trees were brought from California to transform the great ballroom into a woodland grove, an artificial moon was hung in blue haze and little stars made to twinkle in the make believe blue heavens.

(Mrs. Maria Bognasco, forty-two year old of 2731 Hughes Avenue, Bronx, was found dead in a gas-filled kitchen of her apartment at 5 p. m. yesterday by Lillian Rockson, a welfare worker. Mrs. Bognasco had turned on all the jets of the kitchen range, leaned against a wash tub and covered her head and the stove with a blanket. She was separated from her husband and was destitute.)

None of the Woolworth heirs—that is, the young ones—know the business end of the huge chain of stores. When the princess Mdivani arrives in any city one of the first things she does is to visit a five-and-ten and buy something in it. It has become a matter of superstition with the family.

(Owen Gallagher, thirty-four year old, an unemployed salesman committed suicide yesterday at his home, 439 Bronxville Road, Yonkers. He left three notes for his wife. He said he had been a "dreamer", unable to provide his wife and their two-year old son with "the things they should have had." He urged Mrs. Gallagher not to let their son "hitch his wagon to a star.")

The exact amount of the one-third share in her grandfather's estate to which the Princess became entitled yesterday could not be learned officially, but allowing for multiplication by time and depletion by depression, it was estimated here would have been at least $20,000,000.

All that could be learned was that she was not taking possession of the entire amount now—only about $10,000,000 or so. At the time of the wedding the Princess received a dowry, which was never officially revealed but was understood to be an outright gift of $1,000,000 to the princess together with assurance of an annual allowance of $50,000.

(On the dump heaps, jagged with scraps of old tin pieces of scrap iron and bits of broken glass, two children played. One was a Negro, the other a white child. It was raining hard, but the Negro child had on nothing but a cotton blouse.

He played with strips of old tin that matched the walls of the slacks around. Inside one of the most nondescript his mother tended his baby sister who lay in a bed of rags, sick "for three days with something bad with his stomach."

This mother is one of the fifteen or twenty women who fled to Hoover City with husbands and children when their morale was beaten down by frequently recurring evictions, when a shack fashioned from scraps of tin boxes, great iron drums, even from the backs of abandoned gas meter boxes, looked like a safe haven against the snow and cold of this coming winter.

"It was either come here or put the kids in a welfare home and try to live without them," said one mother who moved her family of five to the "Tin Mountains" in Brooklyn's Red Hook Section. "We couldn't pay the rent in a flat, although it was only $9 a month, and feed the kids too."

"We are very happy," the Princess told the friends who wished her well last night. Prince Alexis also was pleased.

"He is amusing, smart and interesting and he has leisure to devote to his wife," she said.

A New Light on the United Front

The testimony for the defense of a former Communist deputy at the Leipzig trial incidentally threw a revealing light on the contradictions and vacillations in the policy of the German C. P. regarding the question of the united front with the Social Democracy. Despite the theory of "social fascism" and the dogma of the "united front only from below" it now appears that private negotiations with Stammer (editor of the Vorwaerts), were being undertaken on the eve of the March elections.

Testimony of Neubauer

The Frankfurter Zeitung of October 28, 1933 contains an interesting report of the testimony given the previous day in the Reichstag fire frame-up trial by Dr. Theodor Neubauer, former Communist member of the German Reichstag. After informing the court that he had conferred in the Reichstag building with Torgler on February 27 (the day before the fire), and that he had been in a concentration camp since September 7,—Neubauer denied that he had ever seen van der Lubbe, the Nazi tool, until entering the court room. Questioned by Dr. Sack, Nazi attorney entrusted with the "defense" of Torgler, Neubauer then went on to explain the subject of his conversation with Torgler the day before the Reichstag fire.

Neubauer stated that he discussed the political situation with Torgler, and especially the question of making contacts to build a united front with the Social Democratic Party. He continued (verbatim translation):

"On the Sunday before the Reichstag fire a foreign newspaper man informed me that the Social Democratic Editor (of the Vorwaerts), Stammer, had tried to make contact with us in a perfectly absurd way. To learn how the C. P. felt about cooperating with the S. P., Stammer went to an official of the Russian Embassy in Berlin. This official, of course, answered that he had absolutely nothing to say on the question, that for this purpose Stammer must go not to the Russian Embassy, but to the headquarters of the C. P. Stammer coincided from this that Moscow was not interested in this question, and so expressed himself in the newspaper man.

Negotiations with Stammer

When I learned this on Sunday from the foreign newspaper man, I said to my friends that it was inconceivable to me that an old politician like Stammer couldn't manage to differentiate between the C. P. and an official agency of the Soviet Union which naturally cannot and may not bother with internal German political affairs. I looked up a newspaper man who was in touch with Stammer and asked him to tell Stammer that night, between Sunday and Monday, that he had committed a major stupidity and absurdity, and that he should address himself to the right place, that is, to our Party.

I offered at the same time to put myself at his service to establish the contact. Then on Monday morning the Social Democratic newspaper man, Prager, informed me that Stammer was ready to have a talk with us about this in the Reichstag building on Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock. At the time Torgler and I put the greatest value on this conference. Therefore I personally asked Torgler that he come along. After the stupidity that had been committed, I didn't want to deal with Stammer alone, but thought it important that Torgler be there so no more blunders would be committed....

Dr. Sack then asked Neubauer some other questions and, returning to the question of the united front, Neubauer stated that the creation of such a united front "was the substance of the entire work of the C. P. at that time."

Dr. Sack: Did you mean that in addition to the ballot you would attack by calling out the masses?

Neubauer: The working class was to oppose the government by strikes in factories and in outdoor actions.

A Journalist As Intermediary

Dr. Sack next asked the name of the journalist who informed Neubauer about Stammer's maneuvers. Neubauer stated that it was Frederic Kuh. (Kuh, at that time representative of the United Press in Berlin, has since been withdrawn by his organization; it has been generally supposed that this was because he is a Jew.—The Editor.)

Asked to explain what sort of actions were contemplated, Neubauer went on as follows:

"The shutting down of all factories as well as of transportation, with the necessary effects on all public life.... These actions could never have had any objective with respect to individual persons, because we were fighting most sharply against any measures of individual terrorism, because we held this to be false in theory and practically disastrous to labor. We stood by every individual action against individual persons we regarded as extraordinary condemnable for labor.

Dr. Seuffert (prosecuting attorney): It is not yet clear how strikes have any effect on crushing Fascism.

Dr. Neubauer: We have the often cited example that in the so-called Cuno Strike a mobilization of the men was enough to turn the government out. We also pointed out in the Kapp Putsch of 1920, labor went on strike and that this was the decisive factor in overthrowing the government. These are instances which were referred to repeatedly by Communist papers in those days and which we placed before the eyes of the workers.

General Strike and Civil War

Chief Prosecuting Attorney: Does the witness know that the C. P. regards a general strike as the last stage before a civil war?

Neubauer: I wouldn't formulate it that way. But I do know that the general strike, in the opinion of the C. P., can under certain conditions lead to civil war. That is not decided by the will of the C. P., but by the measure of its enemies, either the government or those parties who take opposing measures. There have been general strikes without armed insurrection and general strikes with armed insurrection. Its development one way or another does not depend on the will of the C. P.... It is obvious that if the C. P. attains its objective with a simple general strike, it would very gladly abandon the calling of an armed insurrection.

Chief Prosecuting Attorney: Perhaps, but if that doesn't achieve your goal?

Neubauer: the C. P. simply states that in certain situations it is not up to the Party but up to its opponents whether the general strike leads to an armed insurrection.

Chief Prosecuting Attorney: That means, if the opponents defend themselves, then there will be an armed insurrection.

After some minor questions by other attorneys, Dimitroff took the floor and asked Dr. Neubauer whether, early in 1933, before the Reichstag fire the German C. P. had posed the task of leading an immediate armed struggle for power. This the witness denied. Asked by Dimitroff what directives he and the Reichstag fraction had with respect to extra-parliamentary action, Neubauer continued:

Aimed at United Front

"The directives for the Reichstag fraction and for all organs of the German C. P. were based on the idea that the whole political development depended on whether or not a united front, a broad mass front of workers, including Social Democrats and Christian workers, could be created against the National Socialists. The whole work was concentrated on this cardinal problem. Nothing whatsoever was said about an impending armed insurrection. I and everybody else at that time would have regarded that as misleading, because the situation was absolutely not such as to enable the Party to do such a thing. Our directives were the building of the united front of labor for strikes, for the solidarity of employed and unemployed.

The prosecuting attorneys next addressed questions to Neubauer with the aim of establishing that the C. P. of Germany never acted except under Moscow's orders, and that it did permit individual terror.

Questions by Dimitroff

Dimitroff thereupon countered with other questions which brought out that the C. P. as well as the German C. P. had always been opposed to individual terror. Neubauer also stated that the decisions of the C. P. "were obligatory and directive. If the German Party had another view, it had to justify that other view before the C. P.... The German Party conducted a very wide campaign some months before the Reichstag fire, to fight against any inclinations in the Party toward individual terrorism, because we held such inclinations, due either to provocations or the unusual tension of the political situation, to be extraordinarily dangerous. Therefore we ordered that anyone representing such an inclination must be expelled from the Party as harmful."

The last question addressed to Neubauer came from Dimitroff.

"When Adolf Hitler came to power on January 30, were the National Socialists in Berlin and Germany engaged in a drive against the Communist movement? Were there not a series of attacks made on workers' organizations?"

Before Neubauer could answer, the Presiding Judge cut in and, despite Dimitroff's objection, suspended further questioning. Asked to take the oath on the testimony he had given, Neubauer refused a religious oath but affirmed the truth of his statements.

Notes of the Week

"Worker, Farmer 'Join Up'"

Worker, Farmer "Join Up"—is not, as you might suspect, just another Communist slogan. It happens to be the news-head of a story in the daily press. The story deals with the strike of the workers at the George A. Harrel Packing Co. plant in Austin, Minnesota.

The strikers, say the newspapers, "seized the plant, seventh largest in the world... after a clash with guards. The strikers were aided by members of the Farmer's National Holiday Association." The headline "Worker, Farmer 'Join Up'"—merely sums up a cold fact.

And still such a matter-of-fact headline sends a thrill of apprehension down a militant worker's spine. It has within it the portent of a magnificent perspective. It forebodes, by recounting a live incident, such a union of the mass of toilers in this country as will finally spell the doom of the ruling capitalist class.

The productive forces of society on either pole—on the farm and in the factory—instructively join hands! They have many different viewpoints, they may have varying conceptions of property, of law. But they are drawn closer and closer to each other in mutual self-defense against the destructive force of society—in defense against the ravages of capitalism.

The events at Austin, Minnesota bear a striking proof of this inevitable getting-together of workers and farmers. It is spontaneous, as the passion of the fighters themselves. The unity which is to deal the decisive blow for the preservation and defense of humanity in this country is still in the groping stage. More "Austin's" will dot the map as time goes by.

"Joining up" of farmers and workers will become more than a spontaneous outburst. Thinking farmers will give more thought to the idea of linking up their fight for life with that of the city producer.

It will be up to the industrial workers, with all their strike-experience, with all their natural discipline of action and aptness for collective struggle—to give the lead.

Powerful unions, a unified working class policy, and above all—the assumption of international experience—will do more than anything else to enable American workers to build up and buttress the fighting front of the workers and farmers for a decisive, revolutionary solution of their common problems.

Austin lights the way. It unfolds the possibilities of successful struggle. But it is also an admonition, a challenge to workers to prepare for the opportunities that are bound to arise.

If They Won't Raise 'Em—They'll Stretch 'Em

Not a step that the New Dealers take but has the interests of the working class at heart. Recently they put over repeal. But, you might ask: What has repeal to do with the interests of the workers in particular?

The answer is pretty easy. That is, if you've heard of the New York State regulations for the sale of liquor. Bottled drinks are to be sold cash down only. This provision, New York State's dictator of booze—Mr. Mulrooney, who not so long ago had the occasion to show his love for the workers in his capacity as police commissioner of the city—explains, is motivated by a desire to prevent pay envelopes from being emptied out by heaped-up charge accounts. It is, in other words, designed to stretch wages.

NRA and the codes haven't done much to bring about higher pay and guarantee decent living conditions. But the New Dealers are determined to do right by the working man. If NRA and the codes won't do the trick—no doubt the liquor regulations will be of help. No doubt!

If they can't raise wages, then they'll stretch them. —G....n

minutes in which to present his point of view. The pre-arranged claque of the machine interrupted him constantly with boos and catcalls, making it difficult for him to be heard in the hall. No extension of time was granted him. The shameful cry of "stool pigeon" was hurled at Gordon by one degenerate after another, and the shouting came loudest from two individuals in particular, the outstanding "Trotsky-baiters" in the union, who scream all the more loudly because of the fact that even in the District Executive Committee of the Communist Party here they have more than once been discussed as suspicious, shady elements who had to be watched.

Then They Sing—the "Internationale"

In a disgraceful mockery, the Stalinists brought the meeting to a close after their infamous procedure with... the singing of the "Internationale!"

We said last week that the Stalinists would not be permitted to carry through their expulsion with impunity. That the Left wing workers would let themselves be heard from before the case would safely be considered "closed" by the bureaucratic machine. We add now, that after this signal victory of our comrades whose fight compelled the machine-men to back water, we shall not be content to rest. The "probation" and "withdrawal card" racket which the Stalinists are now substituting for outright expulsions, will not be allowed to remain in effect. The militants intend to fight out this battle to the end, giving no quarter to the officialdom and their henchmen who have brought the progressive and Left wing labor movement to the brink of the abyss.

THE PRICE OF RECOGNITION

Stalin's Bargain (EDITORIAL)

AMERICAN IMPERIALISM was indubitably the victor in the negotiations which culminated with the official recognition of the Soviet Union. Diplomatic recognition by the richest and strongest country of the capitalist world and the prospects of credits to follow represent, of course, certain advantages to the workers' state. But these advantages are far outweighed by the price that has been paid for them by Stalin and Litvinov.

In return for American recognition and prospective credits the Stalinist bureaucracy has turned its back more openly and completely on the international revolution than ever before. The de facto liquidation of the Comintern as the organizer of world revolution is now virtually acknowledged by formal renunciation. The right even of "residence" on Soviet territory of American revolutionaries or their "representatives or officials" is taken away by the formal pledge of Litvinov. At the same time American capitalism is given the unconditional right to plant nests of counter-revolutionists in the Soviet Union under religious guise. And back of the whole monstrous bargain lurks the sinister implication of a secret military understanding which would seek to put the American proletarian movement at the service of American imperialism.

That is how the latest achievement of Soviet diplomacy really stands. Let the corrupted bureaucrats of American Stalinism and the dubious "friends" of the Soviet Union cheer for the "victory" and fool the radical workers about it. There applause is always on tap, ready in advance for anything. International revolutionists have the duty to estimate the shameful and perfidious bargain at its real worth and tell the truth about it.

"Compromises" - When, and How

THE BURNING indignation of the revolutionary internationalists at the latest exploit of Stalin-Litvinov diplomacy has nothing whatever to do with opposition "in principle" to compromises by the Soviet Union in its relations with the surrounding capitalist world. We, better than any others, have understood that the Soviet Union needs access to the world market, that it needs credits and diplomatic relations with capitalist countries and must pay for them with corresponding "concessions"—not because it can really build "socialism in one country", but for precisely opposite reasons.

This realistic understanding of the actual needs of Soviet economy, combined with the aim of uniting the American with the Soviet workers in a bond of common interest, motivated our three-year old proposal to organize a fighting movement of the American workers under the slogans of recognition and long-term credits for the Soviet Union.

Compromises and concessions as such are not in the least involved in the Communist appraisal of the Washington agreement. What did we get and what did we pay for it? Does it strengthen us or weaken us in the never-ceasing struggle with the international class enemy? These are the real questions. Lenin said, at the time of the Geneva conference eleven years ago: "We go there as traders." But the diplomacy of Lenin, his compromises, his "trading", were subordinated to revolutionary politics on the international arena. They supplemented and strengthened the aggression of the Comintern. The diplomacy of Stalin-Litvinov trades off the Comintern and the international revolution and, by that, undermines the foundation of the Russian Revolution also. The difference is fundamental, and none has understood it better than the imperialists who concluded the Washington bargain for Soviet recognition.

Soviet Diplomacy in 1918 and 1933

WITH A PERVERTED cynicism possible only in people who are as lacking in allegiance to principle as in any sense of reality the miserable spokesmen for American Stalinism are beating the drums for the Washington agreement and hailing it as a proletarian victory. That is not surprising. Those who could defend the capitulation to German Fascism are capable of defending anything—and their resources in this line are not yet exhausted. True, they had to remain in hiding for several days in order to concoct an explanation of Litvinov's pledges to Roosevelt. Meanwhile the capitalist press quoted the documents and brutally pointed out the contrast between Soviet diplomacy in 1918 under Lenin and in 1933 under Stalin, between revolutionary internationalism and "socialism in one country". The contrasting documents of the regime of Lenin and the regime of Stalin show all too plainly who was the real victor in the Washington negotiations. They reveal such a frightful degeneration of Soviet diplomacy, such a fundamental departure from the line of Lenin, that the Daily Worker does not dare to quote them side by side.

In 1918 the Soviet Congress assembled in Moscow replied to the message of President Wilson: "The Soviet Republic takes advantage of the message of President Wilson to express to all the peoples who have suffered from the horrors of an imperialist war its warm sympathies and its honest belief that the happy moment is not far away when the workers of all countries will throw off the yoke of capitalism and establish a socialist regime, which alone is able to bring about a just and lasting peace and to contribute to civilization and prosperity of the workers."

From that attitude "we are miles as well as years away", said the New York Times, in quoting the old document of Soviet diplomacy. How far we are away from it can be fully comprehended by a reading of the pledge made by Litvinov at Washington. Point 4 of this 1933 document reads:

"4. Not to permit the formation or residence on its territory of any organization or group—and to prevent the activity on its territory of any organization or group, or of representatives or officials of any organization or group—which has as an aim the overthrow of, or bringing about by force of a change in, the political or the social order of the whole or any part of the United States, its territories or possessions."

If that does not mean a complete renunciation and repudiation of the Comintern, as far as the United States, "its territories and possessions", is concerned, what does it mean?

The Bourgeois Press Celebrates

IN POINT 3 of the same document the Soviet Union had already agreed to "restrain" all persons and organizations "under its direct or indirect control, including organizations in receipt of any financial assistance from it", from any revolutionary activity aimed at the U. S. government. But even that was not enough to satisfy the demands of the Wall Street bandits who, according to the Daily Worker, were "defeated" in the negotiations. In point 4 it is even agreed to deny representatives of revolutionary parties in America the right to live in the Worker's Fatherland, and to refuse asylum to revolutionary refugees from America who remain active and unrepentant.

The full significance of this agreement is well understood by the most qualified representatives of the American ruling class. The New York Times remarked: "The United States receives the most complete pledge against Bolshevik propaganda that has been given by the Soviet Government." Father Edmund A. Walsh, one of the chief belters of the Soviet Union, is quoted by the Associated Press: "The Soviet Government, through its Commissioner for Foreign Affairs, now pledges itself to terminate the residence of all such organizations (as the Third International) on Soviet territory." The digest of editorial opinion in the South American press, according to the New York Times, is "that the Soviet Union of today is different from Lenin's Soviet. The desire to conquer the world has been abandoned, writers say, holding that bland pacific methods and economic propaganda have succeeded it." So runs the whole chorus of bourgeois press comments. Have they been "deceived"? Are they, perhaps, mistaken? Let Stalin come out in the open and say so!

Was U.S. Imperialism Outwitted?

NO "CORRECTION" of this impression will be made—of this we may be sure, despite the pathetic attempts of Daily Worker to pass off the explicit propaganda pledge as a "routine" matter. The most suspicious of all the imperialist powers has not been "outwitted" by the clever Litvinov, as the shame-faced apologists imply. Just as Roosevelt demanded and secured explicit pledges, so it can safely be assumed that he secured definite guarantees, that every concession in the way of credits will have strings attached to enforce the guarantees and that full payment will be exacted.

Bunt reminders of these expectations of 100% fulfillment of the pledges were not spared even while the ink was still wet on the agreement. "It goes without saying," said the N. Y. Times, "that public opinion in the United States will watch closely the observation of this pledge. It will not accept technical excuses for violation." Father Walsh adds: "The political success or failure of the new agreement, in my opinion, rests fairly and squarely on the shoulders of the Soviet Government, which is now under solemn covenant, openly and voluntarily arrived at, to end the Third International."

The Basis of the Retreat

SUCH A SHAMEFUL retreat of Stalinist diplomacy before the arrogant demands of American imperialism is not the result of a sudden departure in policy. It is a culminating point in a long series of mistakes and crimes which proceeded from the theory of "socialism in one country". This theory, and its practical expression in the abandonment of the international revolution, disorganizing the international proletarian vanguard and undermining the strength of the Soviet Union from within, prepared the way for the humiliating spectacle at Washington. The official repudiation of the Comintern at the behest of Wall Street was only the formal ratification of a fact already accomplished in practice. The Comintern was killed as a revolutionary force by ten years of Stalinist leadership. At Washington its murderers marked a cross over the grave.

If Stalin and Litvinov, under pressure of American imperialism, went further than they wished to go; if they were compelled to expose their real policy before the world more clearly than ever before; if they felt constrained to make great public concessions and, very probably, still greater secret ones, expressed or implied—all this is also the outcome of the weakened position of the Soviet Union brought about by the theory and practice of Stalinism over a period of ten years.

By transforming the parties of the Comintern into mere pacifist frontier guards for the defense of the Soviet Union they robbed the parties of the Comintern of their revolutionary fighting capacities and, consequently, of their effectiveness even for the

Resume Trial of Scottsboro Negro Boys

In an atmosphere charged with the electricity of mob violence, with the white hooded Ku Kluxers riding every night and burning the very cross on the highways and hilltops, terrorizing the entire Negro population, the Southern bourgeois are bringing the nine Negro boys to trial on the notorious railroad charge of the supposed rape of Ruby Bates and Virginia Price.

The facts and evidence in the famous Scottsboro case proving the innocence of the Negro boys, in which the star witness for the prosecution, Ruby Bates has vindicated the defendants, and the Supreme Court, are clear beyond a doubt. But the class laws of the lily-white south are undaunted by truth. Innocence or guilt is determined by the callousness of the palm of the hand and the color of the skin.

Preparing the Rope and Faggot

"Justice is too slow," says the barbarian riding class which is preparing the rope and faggot for the Scottsboro boys. Samuel S. Liebowitz, the attorney retained by the International Labor Defense through several of his employees, has circulated through Morgan County to ascertain the sentiment of the local population, and has found that the prevailing idea is to circumvent the slow processes of "justice" and apply direct action to the Negroes on trial.

Of course, this investigation included only the whites, the business men and their hangers-on. The Negroes have been so terrorized, that, according to press reports, they go far out of the way to avoid stating any opinion on the trial. Liebowitz and the other attorneys for the defense have an armed guard protecting them every minute of the day against threats at "Jewish lawyers from New York". Bigotry marches side by side with race hatred.

The Real Crime of the Scottsboro Boys

The ruling class of the South wants to make an object lesson of the nine Scottsboro boys. Their crime is not having raped the two women involved but of belonging

The Diplomacy of Stalin and the Diplomacy of Lenin--a Contrast

M. Litvinoff and -- M. Bedacht

"The Communist Party of Russia Does Not Concern America and the Communist Party of the U. S. Does Not Concern Russia"

Individuals, even many of them at a time, can be deceived. Classes in the last century—it has never before given to the capitalists, however much they tried to extract it from the Soviet leaders.

This promise has now been given by Litvinov! He gave it in the stilted, but quite unmistakable, terms of his letter to "your illustrious president" Mr. Roosevelt. Then, to assure the American bourgeoisie beyond any possibility of their fears recurring, he made it plain to the newspapermen that:

The Russian Communist Party is concerned only with Russia. The American Communist Party, if there is one ("I must profess ignorance"), is concerned only with America. The Communist International, as the general staff of the world revolution, does not exist, for it has not the victorious Russian party in its leadership, nor the absurd American party in its ranks.

Made it plain not merely to the newspapermen but also—and this is vastly more important—to the millions of workers who read the capitalist press and who have no cause for taking the People's Commissar at anything but face value. Assuming that this was intended merely as a clever maneuver against the bourgeoisie—and we have every reason not to assume this—its concrete effect could not but be an icy douche down the spinal column of the American Communist movement and whatever there is internationalist, i. e., Marxist and revolutionary, in it.

If any doubts can conceivably remain about this "trifling concession" which Stalin-Litvinov have made to the American bourgeoisie, Max Bedacht, representative of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the United States, has ruthlessly eliminated them. Exactly like Litvinov (who at least has the thin excuse that he is, after all, a government emissary), Bedacht hastened to assure the American bourgeoisie that the Third International is no longer to be feared, that it is nothing to worry about.

The New York Times (11-19-33), which prints Bedacht's statement, writes: "Asked about M. Litvinov's statement Friday evening that the

ELIMINATION OF C. I. RUBBER- STAMPED

The Washington Agreement in the Light of Soviet History

A storm of controversy has broken around the recognition of the Soviet Union by the government of the United States. Watery liberals disdain to discuss the question: who was victorious in the negotiations? But the representatives of the big bourgeoisie on the one side, and the proletarian revolutionists on the other, both conscious of the fact that in every skirmish of the class war there is a victor and a vanquished, are far from unconcerned with an evaluation of the discussions between Litvinov and Roosevelt which ended in normal diplomatic relations being established between the two republics.

The Propaganda Pledge

The controversy centers around the last three articles in the communication addressed to Roosevelt by the Russian emissary on November 16, 1933. Let it be said right at the outset that with few exceptions, the whole American press in this country has correctly estimated them in their true light. The outstanding exception is the official purveyor of Stalinist apologetics, the Daily Worker, which, after a significant silence for days, broke out into voluminous daily explanations of the Litvinov documents.

"Every single one of these articles," writes the editor on November 21, "in some form or other, has been part of the numerous recognition pacts that the Soviet government has signed during the last ten years with the leading powers of Europe. Far from being 'concessions' forced from a reluctant Soviet Government, the Soviet Government was willing and offered to sign such articles with all capitalist countries."

The Stalinist mameukes are deliberately lying! It is not by chance that they reproduced the articles in question without direct comment or elucidation. It is not by an oversight that they have failed to reproduce a single one of the "numerous recognition pacts" as proof that it contains articles similar to the ones offered the United States by Maxim Litvinov.

Mass Meeting of Food Workers Acclaims Drive for General Strike

New York.—The Hotel and Restaurant Workers Union, branch of the Amalgamated Food Workers, laying the necessary machinery to cope with any emergency that the Hotel Men's Association and the Restaurant Men's Association are trying to force through the NRA, which openly plays a scabbing role against the food workers.

On November 16, the local compliance board of the NRA ruled that the waiters' wages must be abolished and the gratuities of the public should be considered a sufficient amount of money to cover the $15.00 weekly minimum for waiters. Our Union protested vigorously against this infamous ruling and succeeded in forcing the local NRA to rescind their former decision. B. J. Field said at the NRA hearing that a great resentment exists among the restaurant workers and a strike is imminent unless the ruling were withdrawn. Flore of the A. F. of L. joined Field's statement that a strike is imminent. The secretary said further that employees have been coming to the NRA headquarters with complaints and receiving no satisfaction. At ways, he said, their representatives met with a courteous reception, received a full hearing of their grievances and went away empty handed. Nothing ever was done to intervene at complaints that men were discharged for organizational activities.

He attacked the vicious tipping system which degrades the men and demanded that a minimum of $35.00 a week be given as wages to the waiters. Even the arch-reactionary Grover Whalen for the sake of appearances agreed with Secretary Field that the whole tipping system might well be done away with. Mr. Whalen made it clear that the national NRA administration decided definitely that tips should not be considered as wages.

In spite of this decision we are informed that the Hotel Men's Code was signed by the President last Friday without any public hearing which would at least give an opportunity to the labor representatives to present their viewpoint, as was done prior to the signing of other codes. This shows plainly that in the case of the food workers President Roosevelt does not apply even the legal procedure required by the NRA simply because the hotels and chain restaurants in New York City and elsewhere are owned and operated by the banks. This proves that capitalist laws can be enforced only against workers and petty bourgeoisie, and sometimes against small industrialists. But by no means does Roosevelt dare to force the bankers to accept so-called reforms. The most ironical item of this code is the inclusion of the consideration of the tips of the waiters as wages to cover the $15.00 minimum. And this was done secretly only three days after the same NRA declared officially and reported in the leading capitalist press that tips an gratuities should not be considered as wages.

FROM THE MILITANTS

Unemployed Confab in Minneapolis

Minneapolis.—A Conference on unemployment was held in Minneapolis on Sunday, Oct. 23, in the headquarters of the Central Labor Union, as recorded in a previous issue of the Militant. The conference got under way shortly after 2 P. M. Wm. P. Bennett, trade unionist and delegate from the 10th Ward Farmer-Labor Club, was elected temporary chairman and Karl S. Kuch, secretary of the Volunteer Committee, was elected temporary secretary.

Comrade V. R. Dunne, regularly elected delegate from the Councils for United Labor Action, was chosen by the Volunteer Committee to make the report on Unemployment Conditions. He was allowed 30 minutes for his report which was well received by all the delegates with the exception of 8 or 10 Stalinists who represented the Communist Party and its closely sympathetic organizations. His report was a Marxist analysis of unemployment and led directly up to the resolutions which he was to present at the end of his report.

Forty-nine Organizations Represented
The credentials committee reported 87 delegates representing 49 organizations were present and a recommendation was brought in and accepted to seat them all. A resolutions committee of 5 was elected by ballot and out of a list of about a dozen candidates the following were elected: Dunne of the C. U. L. A.; Thomson, Teachers Federation; Norris, Socialist Party; Frank, Lathers Union; Haley, 11th Ward Farmer-Labor Club. Comrade Dunne received the highest number of votes.

The resolutions committee brought in unanimous resolutions with the exception of one, and that one was quickly ironed out on the floor. The resolution on decentralization of public relief which contained objectionable phrases about self-help, was replaced by another one and was readily adopted on the floor. Several good resolutions on forced labor, unemployment insurance, a shorter work week, consumers co-operatives, etc., were also passed.

A resolution calling for the setting up of a permanent committee consisting of one delegate from each organization present and one from each working class organization which may later affiliate, to be known as the Minneapolis Central Council for the Unemployed, was accepted. This resolution also called for proportional representation to be adopted as quickly as possible.

Achievements of Conference
In spite of the many bad features of the conference it can truthfully be said that it pushed the movement forward and resulted in a real victory for the ideas of the Left Opposition. When it is taken into consideration how the Volunteer Committee was loaded down with all kinds of opportunist ideas on the solution of the unemployment problem; how it was composed of people, some very energetic and sincere it is true, but who had scarcely a single idea on the kind of a program that the present objective conditions demand; how our comrades joined the Committee and patiently struggled along; and how out of this whole affair was realized a real program and the best conference on unemployment that Minneapolis has ever had, then it is clear that our method of working in the mass movement brings fruitful results. Our comrades on our statement of the facts, we were ruled out of order and called disrupters. We handed in our credentials again and this time they were accepted without a word.

Mass Meeting Speeches

A conference is, as I understand it, convened for organizations who agree on a certain purpose, as it happened in this case. The fight against Section 98 for common united front action. For all the positive value of the whole of the afternoon session, it might have been an unusually long, grand mass meeting. First one Stalinist exposed section 98 in an abbreviated speech that lasted one hour. Then another delivered a harangue which lasted almost two hours. Although section 98 should have been exposed to the complete satisfaction for the simplest person there who might have been ignorant of what section 98 signified this was not enough. Now it was the turn for the delegates from the W. L. U. C. L. S., the U. W. L., the Y. C. L. S., the Unemployed Council, the Ex-Servicemen's League, etc., to deliver their exposures, which weren't completed at the end of the session.

The Rev. A. E. Smith

The morning session next day happily brought this exposure to a close after another half dozen speakers had said their word. The rest of conference session was taken up with the election of a committee of action, which Rev. A. E. Smith hoped might not suffer a premature death one week after the conference closed, as has been our experience in the past. Finance was a very important item, as was a committee to plead with the premier, which committee everybody was reminded, should include trade unionists so that the government officials could not call it "another Communist committee". Then came "one of the most important orders of business", resolutions, greetings, and the program of action, the reading of which took exactly 30 minutes, and the discussion less than five, and the farce was at an end.

Toronto Conference on Anti-Labor Laws

Toronto.—On Sunday, Nov. 12, there took place in Toronto an International Canada Conference for the repeal of the notorious anti-labor legislation section 98. The Conference Call was addressed to "all labor organizations" so the Left Opposition organizations and auxiliaries sent their delegates.

One does not feel enthused in participating in a Stalinist sponsored conference, because it is a fact that not one conference these people have organized for no matter whatever good purpose has ever shown a successful outcome.

When our delegates handed in their credentials to the committee in charge, the credentials were literally thrown back in their faces—a procedure unheard of even for Stalinist conferences. When we asked this Stalinist flunkey, who as it afterwards turned out was only anticipating orders from the higher bureaucrats, by what right he was motivating his arbitrary action of rejecting credentials which was a prerogative only of the conference, we received the reply, "You are disrupters." To argue with a hopeless bureaucrat or a fool, whatever this specimen of Stalinism represented, could serve no purpose so our delegates placed the question before the conference when the discussion of the report of the credentials committee was up.

The higher bureaucrats, whether because they feared obvious opposition from the few outside organizations present, or the effect of their actions in the labor movement, decided to back down on their dunkey stand, and denied the whole matter. When we insisted

Evolution of the Anti-War «Fighters»

Right from the very beginning, when the World Anti-War Congress was first mooted, the Left Opposition, in all its sections, endeavored not only to expose its make-up, but to reaffirm the attitude and principles of Lenin on the question of war.

It was in order to achieve this end that the L. O. representatives entered the Congress held at Amsterdam, August 27th—29th, 1932. Not to oppose the fight against war but to seek a solution that would build up a real working-class organization, with proper Communist leadership. How necessary that task was has been abundantly stressed lately.

Professor Albert Einstein was a member of the original Committee which called the Congress. Much use has been made, by the Communist Parties identified with the Communist International, of the name of Einstein. True, it was said, he is a pacifist, but he is ready to resist the danger of a new war.

How little truth there was in this claim, and what little right the Comintern has to make use of his name in anti-war work is shown by Einstein recently. Not only has he attacked Soviet Russia; not only has he broken off his relations with the anti-war united front committee; but he has actually advocated Belgians joining the army of their country.

"I say frankly that if I were a Belgian I would not refuse military service in the present circumstances but on the contrary would accept it with wholeheartedness and with a feeling that I would be contributing to the salvation of European civilization."

Following Einstein's spectacular exit from the Anti-War Committee, on the grounds that he discovered through the pamphlet of the Labour Party that it was a Communist organization, Bertrand Russell (Marxist) likewise disassociates himself.

"I severed my connection with the Anti-War Movement some time ago as soon as I discovered that it was a Communist body in disguise. This had been concealed from me at first by an impressive list of non-Communist names and by the title of the organization, which as I subsequently discovered, by no means correctly represented its aims."

These defections should go a long way to enlighten all workers anxious to fight war; and the falsity of this type of united front against war, under the guidance of the Comintern so unably led by Stalin. Workers! Back to Lenin, and his methods!—From the British "Red Flag".

ing elements by threatening to cut off their relief if they failed to withdraw from the new U. C.

The U. C. held its United Front and a comrade reported that instead of singing the Internationale they substituted, "I'm so all alone." Subsequently the united front call was started with an article in defense of Manchuria and ended with the slogan of Defend the Soviet Union. Steele was expelled as a "stool-pigeon". Now, over a year later, the Unemployed Councils still number less than 200 members.

Debate Stalinists in St. Louis

St. Louis.—When comrade Swaback spoke to about 100 workers in St. Louis on October 27th on the question of Fascism in Germany and the bankruptcy of the German C. P. as well as the C. I., the Left Opposition was challenged to a debate by a Stalinist, C. W. Wyrnath, who was one of the organizers of the Food Workers Industrial Union, was told by the writer, that he will face persecution by the party bureaucrats for discussing the German question. "You're a liar," he said, "The Party is glad to discuss anything with anybody, and I'll expose you." He stated that he would debate in the name of the Party with the L. O.

The debate was announced for November 10th. As soon as the Party officials learned of this, they mobilized all the influence they had on Wyrnath so that he would not go through with the debate with the "counter-revolutionary Trotskyites". They had two "reasons".

(1) The Party doesn't debate the past. If the C. P. makes a mistake, it criticizes itself, and doesn't need criticism from outside. (2) The St. Louis C. P. has no one capable to debate this question with Wyrnath of the L. O., and the District will not send anyone from Chicago for that purpose. Wyrnath waved aside these reasons. He insisted that he was going to debate and to expose the "Trotskyites" as nothing more than liars and counter-revolutionists.

On the day of the debate the Party issued a circular letter to all workers of St. Louis calling upon them to "Smash these enemies of the working class". Headlines stated that "Trotskyites" debate on German Fascism is a fake and "Communist Party does not debate with stool-pigeons".

Underneath these trimmings every worker was told that C. W. Wyrnath is not a member of the C. P., that he is a second-rate, a misled worker, a stool-pigeon, an agent of the capitalist class just as Payer is. That Payer and Co. are paid out of the royalties from the half a million dollars which Trotsky received from the capitalist press for writing articles against the recognition of Soviet Russia by U. S. The circular ended up with "Give no comfort to these enemies of yours. Drive them out of your midst!" "Fight for the unity of the working class!"

Despite the above "warning", about 100 workers came to hear the debate, among them the Party section organizer Chauntz with about 25 Stalinist henchmen. They came over in a body, apparently to break up by force the debate, or to endeavor to get control of the hall, and make it a meeting to slander the Left Opposition. A warning was given to the Party disorganizer to attempt to disturb the meeting, and the chairman opened the meeting by outlining the rules of the debate. Chauntz stood up, turning his eyes in all directions apparently to see if he had enough force to break up the meeting. He apparently thumbed down that idea, and asked for the floor before the debate started. He wanted to make a statement. He did, for about 15 or 20 minutes. "The C. P. will debate with everybody," were his identical words, "Republicans, Democrats, Socialists, I. W. W., but it will not debate with Trotskyites, because they are counter-revolutionary!" He called upon the workers to "honor" Soviet Russia by every one leaving the hall. Not only did not a single worker follow the advice of Chauntz, but not even all of their 25 who came in a body! Only 17 of his bodyguard walked out. The others stayed in the hall and listened very attentively to the discussion on Germany.

The Left Opposition speaker, Payback, gave a Marxist analysis of the German situation. Wyrnath exhibited his ignorance not only about Germany but about everything connected with the revolutionary movement.

In the discussion that followed Geo. Benz, candidate for Mayor on the Communist ticket in the last elections, denied that Stalin and Co. expelled Trotsky. He stated that he had made "a thorough study" of the controversial Trotsky question. Workers shook their heads in astonishment as the words rolled out of his mouth about Lenin—with a gun in his hand!—making Trotsky resign!—In 1926! And that Lenin himself had Trotsky expelled in 1927!

This is the type of Stalinists who fight "counter-revolutionary Trotskyism" in St. Louis. No wonder they do not want to debate.

«I Am With You for a New Party»

Chicago.—I have been a member of District 8, Communist Party since 1928, during which time I have participated in all the struggles engaged in by the movement. I have labored day and night in organization work among the masses. The District leaders, recognizing my willingness to work, began sending me around the State of Illinois and also in Wisconsin to address meetings and do organizational work. On April 26, 1931 I was sent to Rockford, Illinois to prepare for the May 1 demonstration, finding that the local comrades were unable to do much, I began to hold outdoor meetings that reached many hundreds of workers. Because of this activity, I was arrested. This making the eleventh time that I have been arrested for my activities in the labor movement.

This arrest brought home to me the fact that because I was not a "leader" I could be discriminated against and forgotten in jail and, when fined by the courts, the leaders would generously permit me to serve out my time. At the same time they pay the fine and take out any number of the "official" family that would happen to be arrested.

I protested against this discrimination repeatedly but could get no answer. Finally, because I was insistent they began to call me a "counter-revolutionary". The sectarianism and bureaucracy in the party has gradually caused my estrangement.

However, because I have been a firm believer in revolutionary discipline, having fought against Fascism in Italy, France and Germany, I tried to hang on to the party. Soon, though, we were expelled from the party, myself and a number of Italian comrades, because I absolutely refused to accept the sectarian policies and the bureaucracy.

I have been, now for some time, reading the Militant and I am in full accord with its viewpoint. I shall be one of the first Italians in America to fight for a New International and for the destruction of the Stalinist bureaucracy.

I am with you in the formation of a new revolutionary party and will lend my energies in propagandizing among the workers for this end.

Anti-Semitism in 'Progressive Miner'

Kansas City, Mo.—In the recent columns of the Militant, the rightward swing of the Progressive Miners' Union has been analyzed by a few of our comrades who have been active in the Illinois area. Comrades Oehler and Giganti have shown us with accuracy the trend of the P. M. A., and how its leadership is following in the footsteps of the A. F. of L. by ousting the militants and trying to prove to the dear old "public" that they were "respectable."

But on the editorial page of the Progressive Miner, for Friday, October 27th, the reactionary character of the P. M. A. chieftains is paraded before the eyes of the rank and file of the workers in its full scope. The leaders apparently are not satisfied merely to ape their ideological brothers, the A. F. of L. leaders, but have gone into the realm of the American Hitlerite pretenders—the Silver Shirts. They are aiming to transform what appeared to be the infant prodigy of the revolutionary labor movement in America into the spearhead of reaction. Although their bid for blackguard duty is ill-timed, nevertheless the stench of custard oil, lead pipe, and bludgeon is to be found in the following editorial from the Progressive Miner for October 27, 1933 entitled: "Russian Commissar To Visit America."

"There is more than passing interest in the visit of this so-called 'International Salesman' Litvinoff, who is to sit down to talk about international affairs, with President Roosevelt. We read with amusement much about 'once more recognizing Russia'; 'rehabilitating a trade relation that would net America hundreds of millions of dollars'; and an 'understanding relative to the proposed position of America, should a war materialize between Japan and Russia.'"

"We are also hearing much about the possibilities of Morgenthau as a likely Ambassador to the Soviet State. Not long ago we read that Barney Baruch had been having a long chat with Litvinoff and about the same time our 'unofficial President Baruch' was hobnobbing with Count Karolyi while hunting around Slovenski-Nesgar."

The Militant can perform a great revolutionary service to the rank and file members of the P. M. A., and the entire American working class by throwing the searchlight of its vigorous criticism upon these leaders—the Progressive Miners' misleaders—the working class enemies in their full regalia. We must show the proletariat the reactionary role of the Messrs. Joe P. Goett, Edwin Bowen, C. E. Pearcey, and Wm. Keck as more than a mere trend but an organized force of the exploiters. To group Litvinoff, Morgenthau and Baruch smacks too much of the ugly methods of czarism and now of Hitler. Inculcating race hatred is still one of the capitalist trump cards, as can be measured by the article in the Progressive Miner.

Fifteen Years of Democracy in the Czechoslovakian Republic

The Czechoslovakian Republic is about to celebrate its fifteenth anniversary. The foreign reader, and also the proletarian reader, is generally very poorly acquainted with this country which has very often places among the "Balkan" countries, but which, because of its location in the heart of Europe, is not without importance in the imperialist game of European politics.

The legendary personality of the good, noble soldier, Schweik, is more familiar than the problems and conflicts which stir the social life of this state. Perhaps the name of Masaryk, this type of mediocrity and professorial platitudes, this orator of the Czech petty bourgeoisie; and the name of Benes, the servile wire-puller in the service of French imperialism in the provincial Geneva theatre are known. These two names, which the Temps equates as the inspiration of the "most democratic regime in Central Europe", celebrating the "Union of the three principal elements of the social life of this state of Czechs, Slovaks and Germans in one national life" which appears to represent the quintessence of harmony, friendship and good-will.

The Temps forgot to add that this devoted democracy, in reality, rests on systematic cultural, economic and political oppression of more than three and one-half million German workers and petty bourgeoisies, on the unscrupulous and unlimited exploitation of the "brother" Slovak people, living in uncultivated and pitiful villages, who are aware of the bloody brutality of the Czech gendarmes as the only messengers of the new liberty; that this democracy rests on the merciless tyranny exercised on Carpathian Russia, where for years one epidemic of famine has followed another and where the highest dream of the Ruthenian moujik, living in the cultural darkness of biologic misery similar to that of the moujik of Czarist Russia, consists literally in being able to eat black bread to his heart's content only once!

Add to that the "pendrik" (the police club) the daily diet of the Czech worker; the restrictions—incorporated in the Czech constitution—on freedom of assembly, of the press and the right to organize, and you have a picture of this "most democratic and liberal regime" where the most modern methods of popular deception are combined with the well-tested methods of the tyranny of the Hapsburg monarchy.

However, even this empty democracy has not been able to resist the blows of the world crisis. It is precisely at the time when Le Temps sings the most beautiful eulogies to Czechoslovakian "liberty" that these creatures are about to bury it in silence.

Czechoslovakia, like France, has been one of the last countries drawn into the vortex of the world crisis. A series of circumstances explain this fact, without speaking of a certain equilibrium between Czechoslovakian industry and agriculture and the advantages of the colonial exploitation of the national minorities by the Czech bourgeoisie. The ruling classes had already succeeded, in the years prior to the crisis, in a wholesale deflation of wages. What was already the standard of living of the Czech worker during the rising conjuncture—what was already the standard of living of the Czech worker is classified in the 13th rank among the industrial countries of Central Europe.

At first the relatively attenuated evolution of the economic crisis in Czechoslovakia reflected itself in the relative stability of the bourgeois government. Since the autumn of 1929, the time of the last parliamentary elections, Czechoslovakian politics have been directed by a Green-Red coalition, in which several minority fractions participate.

The national pillars of this coalition are formed by two parties. Firstly, the Czechoslovakian Republican Party (agrarian party), a party which (while being the most reactionary) resembles the French Radical-Socialist party by its social basis and its gravity in parliamentary life. The second party is the Czechoslovakian social democracy which, despite its four years participation in the government, and thanks to the genial policy of the Stalinist leaders, has become in the last few years a force numbering almost 200,000 members, 60% of whom are worker elements. (The official membership of the C. P. is 30,000 members!)

The aggravation of the crisis was accompanied by a constant regression of the working class in its daily struggles. During the four years of economic crisis, there have been only rare strike movements of any large scope, movements which have not been able to engulf the entire working class and which were strangled in an uncompleted stage.

Without encountering the least extra-parliamentary resistance the government has been able to endow itself—about one year ago—with dictatorial powers for anti-working class economic legislation. The development of this crisis was accompanied a growing weakening of the C. P. The red trade unions have become pitiful shadows of their former selves.

It is therefore quite understandable that with the growing pressure of the ruling classes on the masses, social discontent is more and more seeking a solution from the impasse of nationalist opposition against Czech imperialism. In fact, in the last epoch, the latter found itself in serious conflict with the tendencies of the national minorities. The victory of Fascism in Germany has caused a great deal of agitation among the petty-bourgeoisie of German Bohemia. They have been vigorously suppressed by the government which went as far as the proscription of the German Nationalist Party and the German National Socialist Party.

If the Fascist movement—despite the rather favorable conditions for it, (the absence of a proletarian vanguard, the desperate and impossible situation of the petty bourgeoisie)—has not outgrown its swaddling clothes, this is primarily due to the scattered nationalities of the petty bourgeoisie and its Fascist factions whose interests and demands clash violently.

Only recently the Czech fascist tendency of Striny (an old member of an "oppositionist bloc" of extreme right Czechs-Moravians-Slovaks) which would have been able to seriously threaten the parliamentary existence of the present government and lay the foundations for the further development of a larger pro-Fascist movement.

Add to that the growing activity of the Hungarian Irredentists and the strengthened demands of the Carpathian autonomists, and the desire for a struggle against the extreme right and the extreme left will be easily understood. The desire for a true democracy which would "plan the interests of classes and nationalities", the desire "for a strong and authoritative state" becomes ever more insistent.

The democrats are beginning to blast that very thing they have counseled up till now. Masaryk, who for years thundered against all the regimes which kicked over the democratic freedoms (naturally, against the dictatorship of the proletariat especially) has made a new discovery: "that the democratic regime is not incompatible with a dictatorial regime" if this dictatorship is led "by tested and capable men". A substitution of the principle of parties by the principle of "capable" people. This is the first step towards the new idol; Bonapartism.

However it would be a repetition of the insane mistakes of the Stalinists to want to dub every intriguement on the classical methods of liberal democracy as Bonapartism. Before taking recourse to "pure" Bonapartism, whose foundations are unsure and which is in constant danger of overthrowing by Fascism, the bourgeoisie attempts to traverse a series of intermediary stages, in the course of which it proceeds with constant amputations on the democratic organism in order to continue to conduct its affairs with the help of the mutilated democratic trunk.

In this connection the Czechoslovakian bourgeoisie has appropriately chosen its fifteenth anniversary to pass a law which makes the attempt to ward off the Fascist danger, to the detriment of the democratic system.... the piecemeal elimination of democracy.

The new law gives dictatorial power to the government for two years to dissolve at any moment whatsoever any political party or any formation considered a political party—and that under conditions which—we will see—do not dissemble their Fascist inspiration. This law opens the door to the government to reduce—by annulling the mandates of the proscribed parties—to reduce the parliament to the number necessary to insure a secure "democratic" majority.

The following are the essential points of the new law:

1. The right of perception not only of any given party, but at the same time of all its existent or future auxiliary organizations and of all parties which attempt to replace it.

2. The given organizations instead of being dissolved, can be maintained under the control and direction of the functionaries of the state (that is to put all the mass organizations at the disposition of the state, such as the trade unions, similar to the method practiced by Fascism).

3. Confiscation of all the property of their members by the state.

4. The prohibitions of all public functions and the cancellation of its electoral mandates. A corresponding reduction for the number of the constitutional majority in parliament.

5. The right of the limitation of the personal rights of the members of the proscribed organizations; confiscation and censoring of their correspondence, censoring of their telephones and telegrams; forced residence in determined districts with the right of police surveillance (translated from the "democratic" hypocrisy into the Fascist language: concentration camps).

6. All persons who not only continue activity in proscribed organizations but who have any connections at all with them will be condemned. The punishment is twofold, on the one hand the penalty inflicted by the administrative authorities, without trial (up to six months in prison) and again by the tribunal by means of the law for the safeguarding of the republic, (penalty of several years).

Are not the Stalinists correct in identifying democracy and Fascism, by speaking of social-Fascism in face of the adoption of such a law by a government that contains 7 socialist ministers? In reality, this affirmation serves more than ever to mask the real responsibilities in a situation where, thanks to the shameful bankruptcy of the Stalinists, the bourgeoisie succeeds in coquetting with Fascism... without mobilizing the petty bourgeois masses, without the least "illegal" action, by a simple parliamentary-bureaucratic maneuver.

The proscription of the entire Communist press and of several auxiliary organizations of the C. P. has met with no resistance, not the slightest from the C. P.

During the discussion in parliament on the new law, the Communist deputies displayed the attitude of small obedient school children. It is the tactic of the old imperial socialist Smeral who has not yet forgotten the class slogan of the pre-war social democracy: "Do not allow yourself to be provoked!" It is characteristic that during the discussion of the law in parliament not one word was mentioned on the subject of the C. P. The possibility of dissolving the party without any serious difficulty is a foregone conclusion for the bourgeoisie. The press speaks of "the depressed and confused attitude of the Communist deputies frightened by the severe attitude of the government."

The political bankruptcy of the C. I. brings in its wake the material destruction of its sections; after the German, Bulgarian and Austrian parties, it is now the turn of the Czech C. P. to die a shameful and lamentable death!

MARIA REESE ACCUSES! An Indictment of the Stalinists by a Leader of the German C.P.

(Editorial Note: Unser Wort, central organ of the Internationalist Communist Movement of Germany, publishes in its last issue a sensational letter sent by Maria Reese, leading comrade of the German Communist Party, to the Central Executive Committee of the C. P. G. and the E. C. C. I. We reprint below the statement of comrade Reese and the biographical commentary of Unser Wort.)

Comrade Maria Reese was one of the best known and most beloved mass speakers of the Communist Party of Germany. All her meetings used to be over-run. She distinguished herself from the other C. P. G. speakers, by leaving aside all the empty phrases and meaningless gestures and, instead of that, seriously and objectively pointing against the policy of the social democracy. In 1924, comrade Reese, at that time a member of the Reichstag, came over to the C. P. G. from the S. P. G., after realizing that the policy of the S. P. G. could not lead to socialism but rather to a new era of reaction. Her action aroused a great deal of attention among the working class at that time and was utilized by the C. P. G. in a big campaign against the social democracy. After the German catastrophe, when she saw that the C. P. G. had collapsed in Germany and that aid for the German proletariat could be expected only through international solidarity, comrade Reese went abroad to work for the vanquished German working class and against the fascist dictatorship. Comrade Reese was persecuted for her activity by the police in Denmark and expelled from Sweden.

The fact that such a comrade as Maria Reese, who because of her sense of responsibility before the working class went over to the C. P. G. from the S. P. G., today makes a break with the Stalinist bureaucracy—this constitutes a heavy blow for Stalinism and a signal for the German proletariat. We are firmly convinced that the most decisive sections of the membership of the C. P. G. will go the same way as comrade Reese. All the frenzied shouting, all the lies and calumniation of the bankrupt C.P.G. and Comintern bureaucracy cannot impede this development.—Unser Wort.)

For months I have been making repeated attempts to clarify my political differences with the party and the leadership of the Red Aid (I. L. D.) by means of oral and written discussion. These attempts were of no avail. My letters to Moscow have been concealed, for the most part, censored or simply not transmitted. My discipline, which forced me to remain silent before outsiders on the internal differences, was utilized in order to slander and isolate me.

Our last discussion, in which my political accusations were not taken up, has convinced me that I cannot take back my written accusations of September 25. On the contrary, for the clarification of the matter, I must add to them and emphasize the fact that it is a matter of fundamental political questions now appearing in our Comintern-Politics, which is nothing else but a consistent extension of your catastrophic policy before Hitler's seizure of power. In it is expressed a typically petty bourgeois lack of confidence in the power and mass struggle of the proletariat, which is even increased by you abroad to the point of despising the mass movement, linked up as it is with phrases and with a philistine overestimation of the liberal bourgeoisie, which in your view is to be substituted for the scarcity of class struggles and for the defeated Communist party.

HOW YOU FOUGHT AGAINST A MARXIST POLICY?

After your shameful defeat in Germany (before which you had disappeared into illegality, in order to preserve your precious leadership of the working class for the time after the defeat, leaving us, the army of rank and file soldiers, without a command), your Comintern-Politics has now completely divorced you from the mass movement, with which you, as representatives of the bureaucratic party machine, have long ago lost all contact. Through your sectarian policy of the last few years you have failed to bring about a mass movement in Germany or internationally. On the contrary, despite the revolutionization of the masses, you have weakened yourselves. In despair, you are now seeking succor in the arms of the lords and countesses, just as the social democrats did—with Brüning and Hindenburg....

Your opportunism is so incurable that you no longer can conceive that I am fighting against the Comintern-Politics, in principle. That is why you have told your bourgeois "comrades-in-arms" that I insult them, because I have opposed your putting them up as the standard bearers of anti-fascism, through which you deceive the working class. In one "common front" with them you have sabotaged my work for the Red Aid and for the defeated German working class. When fascism advances in these countries, it meets with no resistance from your bourgeois

"comrades-in-arms". But it is your policy that has prevented a proletarian mass movement from being created, that movement which alone can offer the necessary resistance, as I have so often and so repeatedly stressed by verbal and written protests....

I do not intend to return to the Soviet Union in order to sacrifice my revolutionary work for a life of material comfort. Moscow—i. e., the Comintern, not the workers—is obviously convinced of the correctness of your policy because of foreign-policy considerations to which it is sacrificing the world proletariat, although it recognizes you and despises you as the nominal bankrupts you are, and Moscow is agreed to have you continue your "leadership" over the revolutionary labor movement in Germany from the cozy-household in Paris, while you tell the defeated German working class that you are at the front. Thus you permit yourselves very easily to hand out "oranges" and provocative orders, to which later on the elite of the proletariat is sacrificed. Thus, with Muenzenberg's unconscionable committee behind you, you can very easily play at revolution.

The situation of the Comintern has made the C. P. G. defenseless, because it eliminated the democratic influence of the workers in the matter of policy and leadership of the party and because it thereby prevented a selective leadership, whoever thinks independently, fails a victim to slander campaigns. But when a situation came, at which Moscow left you without a command, you "great" leaders remained headless and helpless. That workers' democracy which could have kept you informed about their strength and their mood of struggles; which would have enabled even you Moscow parrots to lead in such a fatal hour—you yourselves cast aside unanimously. You did not even begin to imagine that you could learn from the simple workers, that the worker himself gathered so many new experiences in the course of the ever sharper class struggle from which you not only could have but should have learned in order to evaluate them for the purpose of the organized struggle. For more than a year and a half there was not a single meeting of the Comintern for mass work to which I belonged, although I protested at least fifty times in writing and by word of mouth, because I desired the organizational construction of the united front and not only beautiful congresses, from which the workers were turned back empty-handed, because there was lacking a sensible way of building up of the united front. The experiences of the workers were not utilized for practical purposes. When they did break through the bounds of the bureaucratic brace in which they were held by S. P. G. and C. P. G., spontaneously as was the case in Brunswick, where they united, then they were once again rapidly scattered because the organizational medium was lacking. Only the press still boasted, long after the event, of the great united front success which the apparatus attributed to itself. Moscow had to be shown how well the work was being done.

In all these questions, I informed the C. E. C., but the great strategists of the C. P. G. had learned to ignore a few undigested theses, which they were busy putting through—or else all their energy was consumed in the organization of the factional struggle they conducted for little jobs. You know all this better than I, and you know it now. But you know nothing whatsoever at the decisive moment. That is the strongest proof that you never knew anything and never will.

THE OPPORTUNIST COMINTERN-POLITICS. I have been fighting against your Comintern-Politics, because it is a crime against the working class and has nothing whatever to do with revolutionary class struggle. It is the politics of the despairing, of the defeated, of those who have lost all belief in the power of the working class. It is only an extension of the Muenzenbergian congress-comedies, at which telegrams of felicitation from Heinrich Mann or Einstein are supposed to take the place of the united front which is never achieved.

Daheim, in his childish enthusiasm for the "struggles" of the good bourgeois in the democratic countries against the foreign fascists, only keeps on looking for all kinds of sensations—and that is in fact what all the Comintern-Comrades are doing. They forget completely that all these things are mere bonfires that will only leave behind them a filthy heap of ashes which the revolutionary movement of the masses—the one you are obstructing in its development by your Comintern-Politics—will only have to sweep away.

You have always taken the road of least resistance and particularly at present, when it brings you an income through Muenzenberg. That is a source which imperialism will stop, when it has no use for you any longer. But by that time the Red Aid will not have been built up, through your false policy, for it is already today left almost without any means by your politics.

You do not at all wish to discuss politically about the questions of Comintern-Politics and the German catastrophe. Comintern-Politics permits you to live more conveniently. Besides, the line has been laid down in Moscow, and therefore is correct. Thus—without any discussion we in Germany slid right down into Fascism. But today, the workers who believed in your leadership have to pay for your irresponsibility. I have almost broken down under that strain ever since February 28. I cannot keep quiet until experience shall once again prove your policy false. There is a certain "discipline" which is a crime against the working class. To maintain silence about your Comintern-Politics is just such a crime. You no longer believe in the power and in the fighting qualities of the working class. Therefore you conclude alliances with foreign lords and ladies who have as much interest in our fighting comrades as the Hitler barons.

It is not you who are utilizing these people, as another comrade of the Political Committee expressed himself naively. Imperialism is utilizing you, in order—with your active aid—to prevent the mass struggle and the revolutionary advance in its own countries. You are in this way advancing, indirectly, the fascist development in these countries and you are thereby striking the world proletariat in the back—particularly the German and the Russian. That is what I have been fighting against. Only the solidarity of the world proletariat can help the German workers and defend the Soviet Union, which is threatened by nothing so much as by the current Comintern policy.

SABOTAGE AGAINST THE RED AID. You have sabotaged my work for the Red Aid from the beginning, because the Muenzenbergian Comintern-treasury—which is not controlled by any workers' organization but only subordinates itself to a few of his confidantes—is much more pleasant. Thus Muenzenberg and yourselves have always been able to hide behind the excuse that Lord This or Lord That did not want this or that which is to the interest of the working class and above all—that it was not in the interest of the big business man Muenzenberg.

Thus, according to the comrades, some lord would not tolerate my speaking at a meeting called by the Comintern in London at the beginning of July, because I wanted, in one small sentence, to mention the fact that there is an auxiliary organization in Germany whose members risk their blood and their lives, in order to be of help to the victims of Fascism, namely, the Red Aid. I then refused to speak, so as to be able to protest against this opportunist line. Copies of the protest were sent to you and to Moscow. In reality the lord did not perhaps know anything at all about this. Katz dictated for Muenzenberg and the line is: every advancement of the Red Aid must be subordinated in the interests of the Comintern-treasury over which the Comintern has no control.

The Red Aid treasury is at least controlled by the apparatus of a workers' organization. The money does come good to the victims of Fascism in Germany. The Comintern-means never reach them, confidential people who owe no one on account have charge of them. The Red Aid is almost without any means for its tremendous tasks. Particularly now it would have been easy to build it up and to create the means for genuine support of it. You have consciously obstructed this and the West European Comintern parties have gone along with you.

I came from Moscow in order to bring the Red Aid to the front. In the interests of the Comintern-treasury you have seen to it that not a single meeting was organized for this purpose for me. No method was too filthy for you to defame me among your clique. You succeeded in turning the Comintern apparatus against me in no time. Muenzenberg's agent, Katz, followed in my trail with the money collected for the German anti-fascists, in order to sabotage my work and make it impossible.

You answered my protests finally by forbidding me to work, because I had said something against Muenzenberg and you succeeded in getting Moscow to recall me. And you infamous bankrupts really imagined that such a command could seal my lips. Before your latest self-exposure, before your catastrophic collapse in Germany I would have taken a party order from you and carried it out. But not after that.

THE INGLORIOUS CAPITULATION BEFORE HITLER.

How can you dare raise me as leaders, after I have learned to know your real worth in all your wickedness, following Hitler's seizure of power? I had to pose political perspectives before the workers at the mass meeting, but you remained deaf and dumb at Hitler's assumption of power and we did not know the least about any of your plans. I could never have believed you so irresponsible that you would surrender the working class without any defensive leaders, after posing for years as its leaders and after your manifold promises to lead it in struggle.

Even if the prerequisites for a revolution were not at hand, because the social democratic leaders rejected struggle in principle and because our party had failed to win over the majority of the working class by its sectarian attitude in the question of the united front, you had no right to leave the revolutionary army in the ditch without a defensive plan. I was disgusted, like all the revolutionary workers that I met. "The party does not trust us sufficiently," "it is at least necessary to know where we stand," "we can't just simply allow ourselves to be slaughtered off," "an order must come from the whole Reich," etc., the workers said. It was not revolution, but defense that the workers were thinking about and they believed that in that the social democratic workers could be pulled along and thus make a revolution possible.

The certainty that the struggle was inevitable incited them to sacrifice their last pennies for the preparation of the resistance. You did not prevent them, although you never did have struggle in mind, as little perhaps as Braun and Severing. Now the workers must let themselves be arrested, repressed, tortured and thrown into the concentration camps, withering away one by one, due to your headlessness and helplessness.

I believed—and many of the functionaries with me—that you had some particular, illegal defense apparatus of which we were in ignorance, one which would inform us about what to do when the fascists drew back for the final blow. You were always so boastful, but that was only for show at the mass meetings, in the papers, at the convention parades and even in the sessions of parliament. There you gloated over the fear that your wild, but never seriously meant, speeches aroused in the philistines.

And because you did not take yourselves seriously, you poor mannikins of history, therefore you also did not take Fascism seriously. But the workers knew that Fascism had to be taken seriously. If the party had had a democratic control over the apparatus, and if the latter had not been omnipotent with regard to the working masses and servile with regard to the Comintern, then such vain show-offs like yourselves would not have been in the leaderships of the party.

I tried in vain, after the entry of Hitler into the government, to find a leading comrade and to find out what sort of a perspective these suddenly silenced leaders actually had. For I had to appear before the working class. But not a one among you could be reached. We were surrendered just like this, the workers and all of us who were not in the apparatus. Your whole preparation for illegality consisted in securing the continuity of payments of salaries to the apparatus people, the safe-maintenance of machinery, etc. It was only thus that Hitler could wreck the whole party with the stupid lie that the Communists had set fire to the Reichstag, without having to mobilize his whole army.

A victory and a defeat without a struggle. Only one lie, that it was we who had set fire to the old dump, sufficed to unmask all your boasts and qualities of leadership and to make the German working class defenseless, to leave it as a mass without leadership.

The social democratic leaders... to be sure! If you had taken your own words seriously, you would have known that they could not fight. But you did not see your "opportunistic" hopes upon them, didn't you? Then why didn't you ever say: "We can only fight, if the social democrats will make a beginning?" According to Hecker's apologetics, that would be the natural conclusion. But I am amazed by complaining that you did not even prepare the defensive and that in the hour of danger you took refuge in the bushes without as much as a word, that you surrendered the workers who waited defensively for your command.

After several of us, astonished that nothing had happened; that nothing had been done for the defensive—although you knew about the plans of the fascists; that at 10 o'clock on the morning after the night of the fire no leaflet had appeared as a reply to the accusation; that no action of resistance had been begun—after we then, without guidance and in the face of an unresisted destruction of the party, did undertake something on our own initiative to come to the aid of the deserted proletariat, what do you do? You can only heap insults on us and from your safe hiding-places, you call us disciplined and headless. If you had had your heads on your shoulders before, then those who remained faced with responsibility to the working class and sharing its fate, would not have had to become "headless". You had reconciled yourselves beforehand to the heavy fate that was to befall the working class.

But we, who did not previously bear ourselves with that ostentatious, bureaucratic sang-froid, behind which is concealed most often great egoism; we who knew that the workers want to fight but not to be sacrificed uselessly; we who saw the whole pitifulness of the disappointed masses and could not wait until any longer for your commands because by then we could not imagine in our dreams that you poor bankrupts would still deign to play the role of leaders again—we acted. It was not out of headlessness or in flight that I left for Denmark. I could have also gone into hiding like yourselves and I could have looked on, like you, in silence, while the working class bled defenselessly.

THE REICHSTAG FIRE AND THE SITUATION OF COM. TORGIER. I saw that you had not prepared anything and that for the moment the only aid that could be furnished was the mobilization of the international proletariat, and circulation of why we did not set fire to the Reichstag. I was in the Reichstag on February 27 and I can explain why comrade Torgier is innocent. As a result of your headlessness and helplessness after Hitler's entry into the government, due to your catastrophic failure, as a result of despair for the fate of the working class and conscious of his innocence, he wanted to take the step toward a desperate individual action so as to prevent the worst. You, least of all, have any right to make a political complaint against him. It was because of your irresponsibility that he was chained and despite your coalition of lords and countesses he was condemned although innocent, if the international proletariat does not prevent it.

And you sit in your Parisian cafes and criticize. You play roles and do not even appear to realize in what situation comrade Torgier is appearing before the court. You simply persecute him with your filthy gossip, achieving such brilliant results that Roman Torgier and Burousse write in Muenzenberg's "Legen-Griff" after the first appearance of the defendants, commending Dimitroff and the Bulgarians for their bravery and not even mentioning Torgier. For shame! Even if Muenzenberg handed them the assignment, these men must have shown what an insult to Torgier their attitude meant, but that only coincides with the decision of the German C. E. C., which passed a resolution in Paris at the same time and published it in "Immunite", also commending comrade Dimitroff for his bravery. And you mean to tell me that you do not practice factional revenge? You do worse than that. You know quite well that the fascists communicate with precision to comrade Torgier all the floods of political intrigue that issue forth from you and that they destroy him more with this means than with any of their other tortures.

It is precisely the German C. E. C. and particularly its political leadership that has all the cause to commend comrade Torgier, for never was a political defendant in a more painful situation—not because of the alleged crime, of which every one knows he is innocent—but because of the party leadership. This leadership had deserted its army and fled to the bushes without issuing a single slogan or a single word of explanation to its army, when the enemy was on the jump for the final blow.

How can comrade Torgier defend you before the workers? He was not in the German leadership like yourselves. He was only a parliamentarian and uninitiated in any of the plans, not even in any defensive plan, and believed as I did, that you could not possibly desert the proletariat in its most fearful hour. The situation became increasingly sharper, your helplessness was cloaked in a mysterious silence and in a lack of all indications as to how you evaluated the situation and as to what had to be done.

YOUR LATEST PEARLS OF WISDOM

Like the rest of us, comrade Torgier was very much concerned over this and attempted to reach leading comrades. When he finally found somebody from Talmann's most intimate circles, a member of the C. E. C., and asked him for advice, the brave one answered: "Well...if the workers won't fight, all the labor organizations are going to be crushed, a bloody terror is going to rage, murder and destruction of the proletariat will be on the order of the day, hunger, misery, balkanized conditions, concentration camps, war against the Soviet Union and perhaps, in the end, the decline of all culture. And you in particular—these sadistic homosexuals will hang you with joy in the market place and torment you to death in the indulgence of all their sadistic pleasures."

I shall never forget with what disdain and disgust comrade Torgier told me this and added in comment: "And these are supposed to be revolutionaries! To this end they have always boasted so, so many would never have known as to have such a perspective with out any plan of preventing it. And to say that of me, phui...." And then he concluded: "One would think that he'd know something". And now comrade Torgier is actually going through all this. Do you think that your defenseless surrender of the working class has had no effect on comrade Torgier, has left no trace on him? Why didn't you heroes tell this to the workers beforehand? Why did you say that the Brüning dictatorship was open fascism? Why did you, in saying that, prevent the workers from struggling? Why doesn't Hecker and why don't you speak of these and other sins? Do you believe that the German workers have forgotten this?

And when I met a comrade from the C. E. C. on the day of the fire and asked her for the perspective of the party, she said the same thing. So you did know what was going on, and yet you did not prepare any defensive—only defensive quarters for yourselves!

As late as February 27, Florin said helplessly when I met him in the Reichstag, where he had come for advice to comrade Torgier on the matter of postponing some trial: "If the workers won't fight...etc." That was always the answer. But since when do leaders wait for commands from their soldiers? At the same time he also told me to retain my living quarters, perhaps we would remain deputies like in 1923. You were so helpless and headless that you were left without any perspective when the cable from Moscow failed to arrive. But the attitude of Moscow in that decisive situation shows what a catastrophe can overtake the working class, when the revolutionary movement or a country lacks independent leadership.

Full of anger, disgust and despair at so much irresponsibility and at the quiet getaway of the leadership, comrade Torgier, valiant, conscious of his innocence, into the fascist prison, driven by a sense of responsibility to the working class, whom he wanted to aid with his individual action. Comrade Torgier can defend the Communist party against the stupid provocation charge of burning the Reichstag, but he cannot defend the Communist party leadership before the working class. And that is the reason why you are beating those a muffled discussion about him when is quite worthy of your attitude before the fire—you who are victorious in the maneuver and make the work of other comrades impossible, finally forced it altogether as "great leaders", because... that might turn out to be competition to the Muenzenberg Comintern-treasury in the interests of the Red Aid and because it might be of aid to the German anti-fascists instead of Muenzenberg and yourselves.

WHAT IS NECESSARY. After the German defeat I had occasion to become acquainted with almost all the European Communist sections. I found everywhere the same incapability to evaluate and utilize the political situation and its possibilities for the revolutionary movement. But all this is made up for by so much the greater intrigues. Also with regard to Moscow, which no one dares to oppose with political arguments, everyone works through intrigues, the consultation of letters, the defamation of active comrades, etc., etc.

The so-called political line is a colorful mishmash of ultra-left adventurism and opportunism. Has it ever occurred to you that because of your catastrophic failure the communist parties all over the world have suffered a loss of confidence among the masses? Don't you follow any election results? If such preposterous political bankrupts do not of their own will leave the arena of history, then it is time that the wrath of the workers should sweep them away. They must no longer pay any attention to them, but proceed to the creation of party forces independent of Moscow's Comintern and to the building up of a new Communist party and international which will not tolerate any omnipotent apparatus sitting enthroned above it, cut loose from the working class, but will on the other hand institute a democratic control of the workers over the apparatus and its employees.

Only thus will the working class be able to carry out its historic mission as the liberator of humanity. That will be difficult, but it is the only road, because the hope to renovate the Comintern parties no longer exists, since—after the frightful defeat in Germany, which was a defeat for the whole world proletariat—the bankrupt leadership with its disastrous policy are not compelled to abdicate. With such a leadership the revolutionary movement will only be carried to its grave for the benefit of a paid apparatus that has nothing whatever in common with the living, Bolshevik struggle.

I spurn the fieships of Moscow and material maintenance by your apparatus, as long I can do anything useful for the liberation of the proletariat. If you had been so great in the organization of the revolution as you are in intriguery and in political impotence, Germany would never have known as to have such a perspective with out any plan of preventing it. And

Maria Reese and the Comintern

In her open letter, published by the newspaper Unser Wort, Maria Reese spoke the harsh and bitter truth about the party to which she belonged until very recently. The German agency of the Comintern bureaucracy understood nothing, foresaw nothing, prepared nothing. Revolutionary work it replaced by hollow phrases and boastfulness. It fooled the workers and the party year in and year out. The Central Committee fooled even its own apparatus. People who occupied responsible posts in the party like Torgier, head of the parliamentary fraction, or Maria Reese herself, deputy of the Reichstag, believed honestly to the last moment that the Central Committee had its plans, that it had prepared the necessary fighting forces, that the Comintern knew whether it was leading the German workers. With Hitler's coming to power and especially with the burning of the Reichstag by Goering's agents, the revolutionary illusions of the best elements of the party fell into dust. The Central Committee left the party to the mercy of fate without leadership, without slogans, even without explanations. Another such treachery on the part of the leadership is unknown in the history of the revolutionary struggle. It is not hard to imagine the dark despair of the betrayed masses and the frightful helplessness of the party apparatus.

An Unbearable Contrast. The emigrant activity of Muenzenberg, Hecker and Co.: false reports, lying correspondence, hollow and sham congresses intended to throw dust into the eyes, could not but appear to Maria Reese as an unbearable contrast to the inner events in Germany. Maria Reese letter can have any influence on the demanded a discussion on what o-fate of the Communists persecuted by Hitler and particularly on the course of the Reichstag trial, it is only as invaluable testimony in favor of the accused. From the letter it is clear even to the blind how far removed the official party was from the thought of insurrection, from the preparation for an insurrection and consequently from such "signals" to insurrection as the Reichstag fire!

She Spoke the Truth. The Stalinist bureaucracy takes revenge for the fact that a responsible comrade who found herself until very recently in its ranks has openly and honestly spoken the truth about the leadership, the regime and the practices of the Comintern. The bureaucracy forgives cowardice, forgery, treachery and betrayal under one condition: to bring no tales out of school. For these people the laws of mutual responsibility have long replaced the laws of revolution and of Marxism. The fight for inflated personal prestige, for posts and for an assured livelihood have pushed to the background the struggle for the proletarian dictatorship. Maria Reese convinced herself of it on the tragic experience of the German proletariat. Together with her thousands and tens of thousands of betrayed revolutionaries have gone through the same experience. In jails and concentration camps they are drawing a balance from the catastrophe lived through. The letter of Maria Reese calls them to courageous open letter and her after the appearance of this letter, that is, after she herself broke with the Comintern. To call the bankrupts openly by the name of bankrupts is a direct duty of a true and sincere revolutionary. If Reese's events in Germany, Maria Reese letter can have any influence on the demanded a discussion on what o-fate of the Communists persecuted

BACILLI CULTURES, concocted by bespectacled scientists in chemical laboratories, will serve as major ammunition in the next war. An article in a recent issue of Weltbuehne, published in Zurich, Switzerland by a group of exiled German intellectuals, reveals feverish activity among the bio-chemical savants as part of the general militarization of Germany by Hitler and his Nazis. The article is the work of an anonymous chemist, himself employed at this devilish task.

The last war introduced the use of gases to poison the enemy en masse at the front. But the "enemy" was still left with sufficient human resources behind the lines. In the future, war methods are to be more effective: They will take care to rid the "enemy" of manpower in the hinterland as well. Reliable spies, equipped with the choicest of these deadly serums, will need apply only a single injection into one head of cattle to bring about the extermination of a whole metropolis, of millions of men, women and children.

Meanwhile the war clouds are gathering, the harpies of capitalism are concocting the brew of bloody slaughter out of economic chaos and political despair. The spirit of the coming war is being nurtured with the mysterious hocus pocus of pacifist or nationalist slogans.

Who does not recall how the mystic gas of "Save the World for Democracy" poisoned the minds of hundreds of thousands whose bodies were later poisoned by Melinite and Yperite on the battle fields?

Who does not recognize today the venomous substance of that "democratic" war-cry which has brought in its wake the bloodiest and most ruthless of dictatorships in Italy, in Germany, in the Balkans, in Poland and Hungary?

SUCH EXPERIENCES should put on his guard every thinking worker, every human being who can see further than his nose. The workers must be armed against the mental bacilli which are to do the advance work for the more tangible bacilli that threaten to destroy them by the millions.

One such bacillus is the rapid oratory about Soviet Recognition as a step toward peace. Nothing can be more dangerous from the point of view of those whom the capitalist system exploits as profit-producing machines today and as cannon fodder tomorrow. If the Stalin bureaucrats who pose as Communist leaders of the workers join in and promote the spreading of such a poison—that only puts the stigma of betrayal upon them. The militant and wide-awake workers will not recognize the Roosevelt roasts of the Prada Stalinists as the voice of the Soviets. They will recognize it much rather in words, that the bosses' New York Times rejoices to remark, are "miles... away when we read the undertakings given by the Soviet Foreign Minister (Litvinov)... as a condition of recognition by the United States". (Editorial, Saturday, Nov. 18.)

Those words, the reply of Lenin's Soviet Congress in 1918 to an overture from the Roosevelt of that time, from the "idealistic" war monger Woodrow Wilson—were:

"The Soviet Republic takes advantage of the message of President Wilson to express to all the people who have suffered from the horrors of imperialist war, its warm sympathies and its honest belief that the happy moment is not far away when the workers of all countries will throw off the yoke of capitalism and establish a socialist regime, which alone is able to bring about a just and lasting peace and to contribute to the civilization and prosperity of the workers."

The horrors of the "bacillus" imperialist war of the future—which promises to be a thousand times more terrible than the last, "poison gaseous" war—can be prevented in that same way only. This is the truth that the revolutionary workers in this country will have to pound out as a powerful defense against the advance bacilli.

The Diplomacy of Lenin and the Diplomacy of Stalin—a Contrast themselves, let us quote a bourgeois comment which directly contradicts the Daily Worker and is only typical of the reaction of the whole bourgeois press. "The bargain Mr. Roosevelt drove with Litvinov is the talk of diplomats everywhere," writes Paul Mallon, the Washington correspondent of the Brooklyn Daily Eagle (11-23-1933). "Neither France nor Britain has as good an agreement with Russia as we have. It really marks the first time Russia has ever given in to the world powers. Our officials believe it will lead to the abandonment of the American section of the Comintern. That means the Comintern will be advocating world revolution everywhere except in the United States. It does not matter much because that outfit has been more or less passive for several years."

Drawing the Balance Sheet

The bourgeoisie is deeply concerned with drawing up a balance sheet under what was given and what was received. The proletariat should be equally interested.

Article 3 of the Litvinov note to Roosevelt pledges the Soviet Union "Not to permit the formation or residence on its territory of any organization or group which makes claim to be the government of, or makes attempts upon the territorial integrity of, the United States, its territories or possessions; not to form, subsidize, support or permit on its territory military organizations or groups having the aim of armed struggle against the United States, its territories or possessions, and to prevent any recruiting on behalf of such organizations and groups."

Article 4 of the same note makes the significance of the Litvinov capitulation even more obvious: "Not to permit the formation or residence on its territory of any organization or group—and to prevent the activity on its territory of any organization or group, or of representatives or officials of any organization or group—which has as its aim the overthrow of, or bringing about by force of a change in, the political or social order of the whole or any part of the United States, its territories or possessions."

In these undertakings, the Stalin regime pledges itself to something which it has never previously yielded to a bourgeois government: The formal suppression or expulsion from the Soviet Union of the Third International, or any other revolutionary organization not strictly limited in its objects to Russia.

This is precisely how Roosevelt understands the two articles, "this is how Litvinov really understands them, this is how the bourgeois press has universally construed them, for the simple reason that no other interpretation is conceivable."

And because this is how every Communist worker in the country has understood the terms of the recognition agreement, the Daily Worker has engaged in a campaign of befuddlement, deceit and falsehood which has exceeded all bounds which it has thus far reached in its polychrome career. Without the slightest attempt at analyzing the text, or of proving its absolutely untenable assertion, it dismisses the perfectly obvious with the declaration that the capitalist press

"...know that every attempt to claim that Article 4 of the Litvinov pact applies to the Communist international will meet with defeat." (11-21-1933.)

It is possible that the editor really believes his readers to be so naive or stupid as to accept this bait attraction as it stands, or is it merely his way of proving that he is worthy of his hire? To whom and what does Article 4 apply, if not to the Communist International? What "organization or group" has been formed or is now resident in the Soviet Union "having the aim of armed struggle against the United States, its territories or possessions"? What organization is engaged in activity on the territory of the Soviet Union "which has as its aim the overthrow of, or bringing about by force of a change in, the political or social order of the whole or any part of the United States, its territories or possessions"?

To Whom Does It Apply?

Do these words of the pact—which we assume were written for some more serious purpose than the advancement of the consumption of paper and ink in the United States—perhaps apply to the Intourist? Or the Methodist church in Leningrad? Or the Moscow office of the General Electric Company? We permit ourselves to doubt it, however much our skepticism may perplex the editor of the Daily Worker to whom it is all so clear, clearer, we have no doubt, than he is ready to write.

We ask the pardon of the reader for repeating the tragically obvious: The terms of the pact are anything but ambiguous. There is and has been one and only one "organization or group" on the territory of the Soviet Union which aspires to the description: the Communist International. Litvinov has pledged the Soviet government to expel the international from its borders. And in doing so, he has given formal and, so to speak, organizational acknowledgement to a process of political liquidation of the Communist International which has been going on under Stalinist rule for ten years and which is not initiated but only crowned by the latest act of perfidy at Washington.

The pact does not only pledge Russia to the suppression of the Comintern. (We say suppression advisedly, for it is not really an expulsion. Can the seat of the Comintern be transferred to Berlin? or perhaps to Tokyo, or perhaps to... Washington?) It means that the American Communist Party and its representatives in the Executive Committee of the Comintern, are henceforth non-grata with the Soviet Government, and may not take up residence upon its territory. It means that a group of revolutionary Filipino nationalists striving for the independence of the islands, driven from their land by American imperialism like the Russian revolutionists were driven from the Empire by Czarism—cannot find asylum in the fatherland of the workers of the world... For impatient rogues that they are, they have designs "upon the territorial integrity of the United States, its territories or possessions". It means that if another Bill Haywood were to seek the hospitality of the Soviet Union, it would be granted him—if at all—only on condition that he refrain from conducting any political agitation or activity. It means leaving the American Communist Party in the lurch even more callously and openly than was done to the German Communist Party in the crucial days of Hitler's progress. It means—we cannot repeat it often enough—the suppression of the Communist International by the Stalinist regime at the demand of the American bourgeoisie.

A Lie of the Daily Worker

But such demands have been made in the past, many times, by various bourgeois governments, it is said. Yes, many times and by many governments. That is true. And, adds the Daily Worker, "every single one of these articles, in some form or another, has been part of the numerous recognition pacts that the Soviet government has signed during the last ten years with the leading powers of Europe." This claim we have labelled above for what it is: a lie.

What the Soviet government has signed, and what it has agreed to commit itself to since its first began relations with capitalist governments is a simple and unambiguous undertaking: that the Soviet government pledges itself not to carry on any "subversive propaganda" in the country with which it establishes diplomatic relations, if a reciprocal engagement is undertaken. This is quite understandable, this is correct, and warranted by the relationship of forces. It is the kind of a concession which is perfectly legitimate and required by the situation in which the Soviet republic, as a socialist state in a capitalist encirclement, finds itself. No serious revolutionist will ever lodge a complaint against such a concession, any more than he will oppose concessions to the enemy in principle. He will understand that it is given not because Russia has ceased to be revolutionary, but because the workers in the capitalist countries have not yet become revolutionary, i. e., are not yet prepared to seize power.

That is one thing. Quite a different thing is the question of the Communist International, founded as a voluntary, independent world party of Communism, with sections in every country, to which the workers of Russia and their government, from its inception, have granted hospitality and complete freedom of action. (Just as, let us add, capitalist governments have granted hospitality to the International Red Cross which has not received as a measure of policy the attitude of the Soviets towards the Genoa and British demands, there are more than enough "purely American" precedents by which to go.

When he stepped on to American soil, Litvinov expressed the "keen sense of the privilege that is mine in being the first official representative to bring greetings to the American people from the peoples of the Soviet Union". Both Litvinov and his American bourgeois audience knew that this statement was gratuitously false. The truth is that Litvinov had a predecessor as official Soviet representative to the United States.

In April 1918, Ludwig C. A. K. Martens was appointed, in a document signed for the People's Commissariat for Foreign Affairs of the Soviets by Chicherin as its representative in this country, seeking to establish normal relations with the United States. Martens was not received with the official pomp and ceremony that attended Litvinov's arrival—he was only greeted by a mass meeting of the revolutionary workers of New York who came by the thousands to the largest available hall. He was not received by the president and the secretary of state. Quite the contrary. He was hunted and persecuted; his office was raided; he was haled before investigation committees; he was finally deported from this country as an undesirable alien.

Like Litvinov, he also answered the question of what the Soviet government would do about the Communist International and "propaganda in the United States". But not in the same way. More exactly, in just the opposite way. In the New York socialist "Call" of May Day 1919, the representative of the Soviet government wrote: "The attitude of the workers of the world towards the Russian workers' revolution has proved that the spirit of international solidarity of workers is not dead. It also proved that the international is not dead. It is resurging in the Third International in new glory. Long live the Third International."

Let us take two instances out of a hundred, not culled from the latest Litvinov-Stalin epoch, but from a preceding period.

Two Instances

In 1922, the bourgeoisie of Europe gathered in conference at Genoa, with a Russian delegation present for the first time, headed not by a respectable Stalinist diplomat, but by Christian Rakovsky. At Genoa, the bourgeoisie of Europe put forward as a condition for admitting Russia into their community of nations the same demand as was put by Roosevelt and accepted by M. Litvinov, alias Stalin. From the official documentary compilation "The Soviet Union and Peace" (page 97), we extract the following section of the reply made by the Russian delegation on May 12, 1922 to the memorandum submitted by eight capitalist delegations: "Giving new scope to this Canevas condition, the memorandum demands that Russia should 'suppress upon her territory all attempts to aid revolutionary movements in other countries'. However, by this formula the memorandum means to forbid the activities of political parties, or organizations of workers, or Russian delegation cannot accept such a prohibition unless the activities in question transgress the laws of the country."

In other words: gentlemen, we are ready to make certain concessions, but bands off the Communist International!

Three years later, on May 20, 1925, Zinoviev, speaking before the party fraction of the Third Soviet Congress of the Soviets, jested out of court the insolent demand renewed by the bourgeoisie for the suppression of the Comintern:

"We have heard a statement made in the English press and confirmed today (although it is partly denied) to the effect that the British government is endeavoring to create a united front against the U. S. S. R. in connection with the demand for the expulsion of the Comintern from Moscow. The Executive Committee of the Communist International, as we know, is not averse to a change of headquarters under certain conditions. Indeed, what is the good of sitting all the time in Moscow? To judge by the frame of mind of the Executive Committee of the C. I., it apparently would not be averse to setting up its tent in London. But I think that in any case such a decision should be taken by the Comintern independently of the bare-faced demands of the capitalist governments. When they put forward that demand during the famine period they received the reply that the Soviet government was more favorable there can be no doubt as to the reply to their insolent demand they would receive from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics if they decided to advance such." (G. Zinoviev, "Russia's Path to Communism", page 22.)

(Recognition by the United States, declare the Stalinist liars, has been forced by the strengthened position of the Soviet Union. For the moment, let us accept the validity of this contention. How, then, does it happen that in a situation more favorable to it, the Soviet Union is compelled not only to make an enormous, impermissible concession, but a concession such as it announced it would not make eight years ago, in 1925, and would not even make years before that, in those cruel famine days when Russia's back was to the wall and nobly ventured to say if it could hold out for any length of time?)

Or, if one does not want to act as a Red Cross which has not re-

Stalin's Bargain

tasks of defense. The Stalinist bureaucracy relied on them less and less, held them in contempt, converted the Comintern into a fiction and increasingly shifted the axis of Soviet foreign policy to the realm of negotiations and agreements with the capitalist powers.

Every step on this slippery path—of which the signing of the Kellogg Pact, the disarmament treaties, the non-aggression pacts, the capitulatory policy at the economic conferences, were milestones—weakened and undermined the position of the Soviet Union still further in the international relation of forces with the capitalist powers. By leaving the ground of the class struggle, by disrupting the proletarian vanguard, international class ally of the Soviet Union, the Stalinist leadership was compelled to retreat before the bourgeois powers step by step. The formal renunciation of the Comintern at Washington, which flowed out of the past policy and practice, prepares the way in turn for still heavier demands and new retreats. Stalinist diplomacy, while ostensibly improving the relations of the Soviet Union with the capitalist nations is in reality isolating it in an irreconcilably hostile capitalist world and leading it toward a fearful debacle.

The Soviet Union, thus endangered, depends upon the international movement of the revolutionary proletariat now in a direct and immediate sense. The more the Stalinist bureaucrats desert the international revolution, the more they take off the Bolshevik mask and show their real nationalist face as they did at Washington, the clearer becomes the necessity for the reorganization of the international workers' vanguard without the Stalinist bureaucrats and against them. The capitulation to Roosevelt followed soon after the capitulation to Hitler and was partly conditioned by it. Both of these events are loud alarm signals of the need to organize the Fourth International with all possible speed. The defense of the Soviet Union from the world imperialists on the one side and the disorganizing leadership of Stalinism on the other will be one of its foremost tasks.

attitude of the Soviets towards the Genoa and British demands, there are more than enough "purely American" precedents by which to go.

When he stepped on to American soil, Litvinov expressed the "keen sense of the privilege that is mine in being the first official representative to bring greetings to the American people from the peoples of the Soviet Union". Both Litvinov and his American bourgeois audience knew that this statement was gratuitously false. The truth is that Litvinov had a predecessor as official Soviet representative to the United States.

In April 1918, Ludwig C. A. K. Martens was appointed, in a document signed for the People's Commissariat for Foreign Affairs of the Soviets by Chicherin as its representative in this country, seeking to establish normal relations with the United States. Martens was not received with the official pomp and ceremony that attended Litvinov's arrival—he was only greeted by a mass meeting of the revolutionary workers of New York who came by the thousands to the largest available hall. He was not received by the president and the secretary of state. Quite the contrary. He was hunted and persecuted; his office was raided; he was haled before investigation committees; he was finally deported from this country as an undesirable alien.

Like Litvinov, he also answered the question of what the Soviet government would do about the Communist International and "propaganda in the United States". But not in the same way. More exactly, in just the opposite way. In the New York socialist "Call" of May Day 1919, the representative of the Soviet government wrote:

"The attitude of the workers of the world towards the Russian workers' revolution has proved that the spirit of international solidarity of workers is not dead. It also proved that the international is not dead. It is resurging in the Third International in new glory. Long live the Third International."

In a "Statement by L. Martens, Representative of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic, Before the Sub-Committee of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate" on "Soviet government propaganda", he declared boldly:

"The government of the United States has also been a party to attacks against the Russian Soviet Government, including invasion of Russian soil without a declaration of war and aggressive action against the military forces of Soviet Russia... Being confident that the peoples of other nations were not responsible for these policies, and that they permitted these activities only because they were not acquainted with the real situation, the workers of Russia appealed to the peoples in various countries urging them to put an end to these attacks. Appeals of this nature have been defensive measures in the war imposed on Soviet Russia by outside forces... Propaganda has been carried on by the Soviet government among the armies of the foreign governments which invaded Russia." (Soviet Russia, 2-14-1920.)

Two Epochs

It becomes a little clearer why, therefore, on December 15, 1920, secretary of Labor W. W. Wilson issued an order which concluded: "It is therefore decided that Ludwig C. A. K. Martens is an alien, a citizen of Russia, and that he entertains a belief in and is a member of or affiliated with an organization (i. e., the Third International—M. S.) that entertains a belief in, teaches or advocates the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, and the Commissioner General of Immigration is directed to take the said Ludwig C. A. K. Martens into custody and deport him to Russia at the expense of the Government of the United States."

Litvinov and Martens! These are not merely two different individuals. They symbolize two different epochs. The bounded and deported Bolshevik represented the Soviet republic in the epoch of revolutionary internationalism. The feted and loudly-praised diplomat represents the Stalinist epoch of national socialism, of capitulation, of the surrender of the world revolution and the very foundations of the Russian workers' state.

The Retrial of the Nine Scottsboro Boys to a persecuted race and class. Their resort to the I. L. D. for defense is another heavy count against them. When the K. K. K. wants to murder a Negro, legally or otherwise, to keep the black population of the South under the heel of their feudal baronage, they refuse to tolerate any "interference" from "outsiders" (the workers' movement). Having been frustrated by powerful protest in their original intention to burn the Negroes in the chair, the Southern wolves are again showing their fangs—"String 'em up" is the plan—"to hell with the courts". And it is in Morgan County that the retrial of Haywood Patterson and his companions to be held, that the class-prejudiced court is to pass sentence.

In the previous trial the National Guard escorted the prisoners to the court room. But now with the atmosphere one thousand times tenser the governor of Alabama has refused the use of the National Guard in the case. An appeal over his head was made by the defense to the President but the liberal Mr. Roosevelt, who would not for a moment hesitate to send the troops against striking workers, issues a statement through his secretary saying that the "Federal Executive has not interfered and cannot interfere in any case under the jurisdiction of the courts of a sovereign state."

Tense Atmosphere of Trail

Testifying to the will of the local population for a "fair" trial—in the course of the verbal tilt between the defense and the prosecution over a change of venue—a farmer marches into the courtroom carrying a six-shooter. The press says that this harmless fellow, who was "rebuked" by the court, related that he "had brought the revolver into town to have a new sight placed on its barrel." So tense is the atmosphere and so fearful is the Southern bourgeoisie of publicity that newspaper photographers have been threatened with proceedings for contempt of court for snapping photos of trial scenes. The defense attorneys have stated that in the event of a refusal of a change of venue by the local judge they will appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court for a reversal of decision. At this writing the local judge has refused a change of venue.

Lynch Pack in Full Cry

The lynch pack is in full cry. Can the victims of the Scottsboro case be saved from legal or "extralegal" lynching? That is the question that every class conscious worker will ask himself.

Lynching of one kind or another is certain if the sympathizers and supporters of the Scottsboro boys walk out of the courtroom in triumph, or hope for lynching to be avoided by means of the National Guard. One of the National Guards, quoted in the affidavits of the defense for a change of venue, made the frank assertion that if a lynch mob confronted him while guarding the defendants he would throw away his gun and let the mob take its course.

Class justice can only be fought by mass action. Plenty of time has been lost but it is not yet too late to arouse the mass movement that saved the Scottsboro boys once before.

We need not explain the significance of the Scottsboro case to the workers acquainted with it. It is a struggle of outstanding importance for workers, black and white. Action, Action! Now—tomorrow it may be too late!

Food Union New Aid for Bellussi to find out officially the terms of the hotel code that was signed last Friday. Only the Federation of Hotel and Restaurant Guilds, which is an outright company union of medieval origin, was able, thanks to its direct cooperation with the bosses, to inform the capitalist press last Wednesday that 54 hours a week was to be the minimum hours and that tips were to be considered as wages.

A special mass meeting was called and held at the new headquarters of the Hotel and Restaurant Workers Union, 915-17 Eighth Ave. on Wednesday, November 22. Various speakers spoke about the necessity of action. Comrade Giltow said that union organization offers the opportunity for the workers to improve their conditions by resorting to the most effective weapon that organized labor can utilize, and that is the general strike. B. J. Field, the secretary, reviewed all the activities of the Union. He said that the Union had drafted its own code and had its representatives at the hearing of the hotel code held in Washington on September 27. The Hotel Men's Association code was rejected by the NRA. In spite of this rejection, the President signed secretly the hotel code which is much worse than the very one that they rejected.

LITVINOFF AND STALIN

Communist Party of America was not concerned with the Communist Party of Russia, and vice versa, he said: "The American Communist Party concerns itself with the American working class and the Russian Communist Party concerns itself with the Russian working class, so of course they don't concern themselves with each other's problems. We have our problems, they have theirs. Their problem is to build socialism, we aren't as far yet. Unfortunately, we still have to defeat capitalism."

The Daily Worker, which took such elaborate and unnecessary pains to correct the grammatical structure of Litvinov's statement, has not printed a correction or a different version of the Times' report of Bracht's statement. We therefore have no reason to question its accuracy.

There was a time when a Communist—certainly one working in a country where bourgeois legality still existed—was neither ashamed nor afraid to proclaim his membership in the world party of the Third International. But that was before the Communist International was strangled by Stalinism, before the Communist parties were humiliated, debased and forced into the livery of the Soviet Foreign Office, before funkies and office-holders have usurped the places of revolutionists, before the world revolution was exchanged for a promised credit of half a billion American dollars.

At the time of this writing comrade Bellussi still remains confined in the Detention House of the Philadelphia Immigration Station at Gloucester City, N. J., awaiting deportation to Fascist Italy.

Meanwhile efforts are being made by the American Civil Liberties Union, which has interested itself in the case, to secure the release of Bellussi and the right of voluntary departure to some country other than Italy. Roger Baldwin, the director of the A. C. L. U., has promised the full cooperation of his organization in the endeavors to save comrade Bellussi from the horrible fate that awaits him in Italy.

The privilege of voluntary departure has been granted in other cases to other class war prisoners threatened with deportation to countries under Fascist or military dictatorships.

How vital is the need for comrade Bellussi not to be sent to Italy is shown by the fact that the evidence on which his deportation is taking place was the discovery of an old membership card in the Communist Party of Italy in Bellussi's possession.

The penalty for membership in a Communist organization in Italy is long years in a wretched penal colony if not summary execution by a firing squad. The danger facing Bellussi in the event of his deportation to Italy is so much more sinister when one considers that not only his militant activities in the United States but his sterling revolutionary record in Italy has aroused the wrath of Mussolini and his black gangs whose beast-like vengeance against revolutionary workers is well known to militant workers.

Bellussi must and can be saved! It is the first duty of class conscious workers to prevent the deliverance of their fellow-fighters into the jaws of its worst enemies. Let us do our part. We can force the American government to alter its ominous plans for our comrades. Bellussi must not be deported to Italy!

Biased Judge Rushes Negro Boys to Chair

No Reliance on Capitalist Justice; Only Mass
Pressure of Workers Can Save Scottsboro Boys

For the third time in three years Scottsboro there is no essential difference. Scottsboro is a legal Haywood Patterson guilty of the rape of Victoria Price, locally not a rapist, but a victim of a capitalist beast determined not to give up its prey. The wheels of justice are moving now with greater speed than they did last April at the last trial, almost as fast as the Sun and St. Joseph Lynch mobs did, and Clarence Norris is standing trial a second time for the same "crime." By the time this reaches the press the verdict will be in and the trial of the third or maybe even the fourth Scottsboro boy will be over.

The "Impartial" Jury
The jury which tried Patterson and the jury which will try the other defendants are supposed to be made up of impartial men who have no fixed ideas about the innocence or guilt of the boys. They are all white men, and if you wish you can believe that they have no prejudices against other men just because their skins are black. These jurymen are all local residents in a home-town community where the Scottsboro case has been the subject of discussion for years. How many sit in the courtroom during the previous trials? Leastways we are asked to believe that these men have a good deal of argument on the case, participated in it, read the editorials in the Southern papers urging them to "lynch the damned niggers," and still have open minds. One has to be as simple and trusting as a child to believe this fairy tale out of the capitalist propaganda book. These men are all set against the Scottsboro boys no matter what they say they believe or don't believe.

If there was one among them who had any lingering doubt, the way Judge Callahan ran the trial would have removed it. Callahan was fair. He gave the defense its day in court. Sure, he didn't allow the Jew lawyers from New York to play tricks on the court. He defended Southern womanhood. Yes, sir.

Cards Dealt from the Bottom
There isn't a white farmer in the neighborhood who could have held his opinion of Patterson's innocence against the bias of the upright justice's charge to the jury and his bewildering judicial hair-splitting. Callahan dealt cards from the bottom of the deck. That's what he is there for.

Callahan does his job well. There's nothing raw like the stuff Hornton pulled and the speeches prosecutors Knight and Wright made in the last trial. It's all strictly according to Hoyle. Callahan is carrying out the order of the Supreme Court to do it over again and cut out the mistakes.

Callahan made one serious slip. In his charge to the jury which consumed an hour and a half of Patterson's life he forgot to remind the jury that if they found the evidence insufficient to prove the charge against Patterson they could bring in a verdict of acquittal. Strange omission! Convenient memory! Only when reminded by the defense counsel and the prosecutor did he perfunctorily add this detail.

That slip gave the whole show away. What of that? Bias is no ground for acquittal in the higher courts. The learned justices do not arrive at their decisions by obvious facts and simple considerations. For them the question is not whether Callahan showed bias. They will take out their legal yardstick and see whether what Callahan said or did denied the defendant, who is presumed innocent until proven guilty, a fair trial by violating this statute or that law or is not in accord with the decision of Judge so-and-so in this-and-that case. You can be as fanatic on the bench as Holph of California is in the governor's chair, but if you want your stuff to go over with the boys higher up you have got to make it appear that you are sticking within the law. If you do they will give you the official o. k.

Learned from Massachusetts
And whoever heard of a high court saying straight out: the man is innocent, release him? Where and when did that happen? In the Mooney case? In the Sacco-Vanzetti case? Where? When? The cards are stacked against the boys all the way up the line.

The strategy of the capitalists is plain. They want to give the country another "line lesson." In California, they want to say, "and in Maryland they do it with the rope and the fagot; but in Alabama they are civilized. There they burn innocent men in the electric chair according to the law. But first they torture them in jail for years, holding out a ray of hope to them and snatching it away again. They learned that from what Massachusetts did to Sacco and Vanzetti."

Between St. Joseph, Mo., and

American Imperialism at the Montevideo Congress

The Seventh Pan-American Conference convened December 3 at Montevideo, Uruguay with twenty-one nations represented. The American delegation, headed by Secretary Hall, arrived prior to the conference to line up puppet delegates and to attempt to iron out and sidetrack some of the most difficult problems that are sure to be thrown open for discussion on the floor. This is the first Pan-American conference to be held since 1923. It is convened at a time when the economic life of Latin America is almost at a standstill as a result of the crisis within the leading imperialist nations, particularly the United States. These secondary capitalist nations of Latin America have long ago been subordinated to the imperialist powers. The leading capitalist nations, such as the United States, have attempted to shift part of the crisis burden onto the lesser nations of Latin America.

The conference has been compared to the last London conference. The capitalist press says the Montevideo meeting will succeed and will accomplish for America, what the London conference failed to accomplish for world capitalism. However, the set-up is entirely different even if economic problems hold the center of the stage at the Pan-American conference.

At Montevideo there will be a meeting of unequals. The leading capitalist nation in the world is able to hold a conference with 20 other nations under the self-made jurisdiction of the Monroe Doctrine, the enforcement of which Roosevelt hopes to modernize with his "new diplomacy." The London conference was a battle of the leading imperialists of Europe and America; the Montevideo conference is the set-up of American imperialism. Most of the delegates are puppets; others will be forced to cringe before the might of Yankee imperialism or stand the consequences. The other imperialist powers, particularly England are forced to pound away within the conference in an attempt to prevent America from constructing something tangible for itself. England will do this primarily through such forces as she can muster within the Latin American countries for policies that will be cloaked in the form of "national" demands of this or that Latin American country.

In the past, Argentina has been the main opposition force to the United States in the Pan-American conference, not only because of its weight within South America but because England has been fighting American imperialism tooth and nail in the struggle for domination within this first rate Latin American country.

War and revolution will be discussed extensively in the different cancesses. Bolivia and Paraguay are in the midst of the Chaco war. Peru and Colombia have not yet settled the Leticia affair. The Cuban revolution is in the foreground. Secretary Hall attempted to inject America's "good will" into the Chaco war before the conference, but Paraguay rejected his "kind" offer. A labor delegate from Haiti caused uneasiness, and showed that all was not so well in lining up safe and sound delegates to the conference, when on the first day he condemned American's 15-year military action in Haiti, intervention in Latin America, and the present financial supervision in Haiti which reveals how the Roosevelt government is driving ahead with great speed for better imperialist domination.

Revolutionary Cuba has not spoken yet. But it is very doubtful, if the petty-bourgeois government will go beyond words, and this only for the sake of bargaining power and compromise with American imperialism. It is very doubtful if the voice of the oppressed workers and peasants will even get a word into the proceedings. What opposition does materialize will be that of the nationalist bourgeois opposition to American imperialism and of spokesmen for British imperialism.

The economic factors and questions take on a varied number of forms. The American imperialists are attempting to avoid these problems which will interfere with the further development of the NRA and the struggle of the Dollar vs. the Pound. The U. S. Government issued a statement on November 9th, which said in part: "Unsettled conditions, such as European commercial quota restrictions, make it seem desirable for the United States to forego immediate discussions on such matters as currency stabilization, uniform import prohibitions, permanent custom duties and the like."

A real discussion on the above points and not mere talk by puppet delegates, would really be stepping on Uncle Sam's toes. That is the reason America hopes to keep these points off the Agenda. The question of debts is important, but America does not care to talk debts when her creditors are bankrupt and may ask for a moratorium; rather it is wiser to see what can be done to use these debts as clubs to line the countries up for further economic penetration by America. That is what the delegates of the Wall Street government hope to accomplish. America as the creditor, facing this condition, is opposed to debt discussion; many of the debtors, on the other hand, hope to force discussion. As a compromise American imperialism will agree to discuss debts so long as the discussion does not lead to decisive action.

Regardless of what form the economic discussion may take one thing is certain. The conference is an American Imperialist set-up for the benefit of American imperialism. To strip the issues bare, the U. S. imperialists are primarily interested in the following, from an economic standpoint: To strengthen their position and control over Latin America in the struggle against the other imperialists. To arrange long-term credits for private and public projects, which will enable America to export surplus capital so vital for America's internal life and, at the same time, enable her to use these projects to further consolidate her Latin American empire.

The American delegates are empowered to offer a half a million dollars as a start for the Texas-Santiago highway, to assume the major share of the expense of an engineering survey for a proposed Central American-Jo de Janeiro railroad. These projects will open up the doors for capital investment and the further extension of American imperialism. The aims of the U. S. Government in the Pan-American conference are the further extension of American domination, the elimination of other imperialist contenders and a straight jacket for the workers and peasants of Latin America to prevent the Soviet idea that raise its head in the Cuban revolution from becoming a living reality in the Western Hemisphere.

The conference is only two days old. Although it is America's set-up. There are factors within it that may get beyond the control of Wall Street. The results of the conference will be discussed in a later issue of THE MILITANT.

Hotel Union Shows Gains

New York.—The waiters at the Hotel Montclair, have gone out on strike under the leadership of the Hotel and Restaurant Workers' Union, branch of the Amalgamated Food Workers. The strike is against the wage scale of 64 cents a day for 9 hours forced on the waiters by the management after the new hotel code went into effect. The workers demand $12.50 a week, no arbitrary firing, no splitting of tips with the captains, the house to keep uniforms clean, and decent food.

New York.—Last week we reported the new orientation of the Hotel and Restaurant Workers Union organization drive. Already, the workers of the Union understand that they can expect very little from the NRA, and that only the Union is in a position through its strength to put back to work the workers that were discharged without any reason at all.

The huge new headquarters of our Union facilitates much of its activities. Shop meetings of hotels, restaurants and clubs take place every week at which the problems of the Union are discussed and decided. The joining of bellhops, housemen, chambermaids, elevator men and women is bringing about the realization of an ideal industrial union, aided also by the coming together of native and foreign born members.

Mass meetings will be held twice a week, one in the evening and one in the afternoon. Last Friday evening our Secretary, B. J. Field, reported on the fight which we put up in Washington against the Codes which the bosses are using as a means of keeping our conditions miserably low. In addition to a number of shop delegates, James P. Cannon also spoke at this meeting.

On Tuesday, November 22, Burkhardt, Cook and B. J. Field were the first ones to speak for labor's side of the case at the NRA hearing. They took the leadership in presenting the argument for the workers, all the other unions represented except the A. F. of L. taking up our demands.

Irrespective of what the NRA may do about the Code, the A. F. of L. has gained increased prestige in the eyes of the workers as have their representatives.

Shoe Workers to Merge Unions

Independents at Boston Convention

The eyes of the labor movement will be on Boston next Monday, December 11, when the amalgamation convention of the Independent shoe workers of the United States convenes for the purpose of uniting them into a single body. This convention comes as the culmination of a long struggle of the rank and file to bring about the amalgamation in the face of the most stubborn resistance and sabotage of the conservative officials. When the delegates meet at Boston next Monday they will stand instructed by the referendum vote of the organization to take the necessary steps to bring about the unification. The referendum carried by the overwhelming majority of more than 80 to 1.

Directly represented at the convention will be the National Shoe Workers' Association, with approximately 28,000 workers; the Shoe Workers' Protective Union, with approximately 30,000; and the Independent Union in Shoe Industry.

The shoe industry has long been noted for the multiplicity of independent unions. The shoe workers were forced onto this path by the systematic betrayals of the official A. F. of L. body, the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union. Even from the standpoint of typical American reactionary unionism, this "label" union stands in a class by itself as a corrupt and boss-serving organization. The impulse of the workers for genuine trade unionism manifested itself in almost every revolt through the medium of independent organization. The weakness of their movement arose from the inability up till now to bring the various independent organizations together; the conservative officialdom, which fastened itself on the two main organizations, blocked the union.

The strike wave of the past season gave the necessary impulse to the movement from below and carried it forward with a surging militancy to the present result. If the delegates at Boston succeed in carrying out the mandate of the rank and file and come out of the convention with a harmonious program for the final amalgamation of the unions, a new day will dawn for the shoe workers of the country and a bright page of labor history will be turned. The solidarity and hope of the advanced workers everywhere will be with the convention in its deliberations and every progressive tendency in the labor movement will be strengthened and encouraged by its success.

Bright Prospects of New Independent Union

The bright prospects for the emergence of a new powerful union of workers on an independent basis, at a time when the general tide is flowing strongly in the channel of the A. F. of L., demonstrates once again that the labor movement follows nobody's pre-conceived plan or arbitrary pattern, but takes its own course in different industries according to differing circumstances. If the general developments of the past months dealt a crushing blow to those who prescribed the arbitrary building of new independent unions all along the line, the specific situation in the shoe industry, which drove with the force of necessity to the constitution of a completely independent union, refutes the A. F. of L. fetishists no less conclusively.

The new amalgamated shoe workers' union will not be a "dual union"; it will be the legitimate and genuine organization in the industry and will be entitled to the unqualified support of the workers in its struggle for supremacy against the A. F. of L. union, the corrupt and treacherous "Boot and Shoe" Tasks of New Union

In our opinion the new union will have the task of making further efforts to come to an agreement and unification with the Brooklyn Brotherhood (Independent) and in waging a determined battle to organize the entire industry in head-on collision with the corrupt "Boot and Shoe" affiliate of the A. F. of L. The worst danger to the new movement is prevented by those who have some maneuver with the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union up their sleeve.

The problem of the new union is to become a power in its own right and drive its corrupt rival from the field with the help of the betrayed shoe workers still within its ranks who only await a favorable opportunity to break away from it and unite with their fellow workers in a genuine labor organization.

The developments among the shoe workers provide another instructive lesson regarding the real trend of the labor movement. In demonstrating the vitality that remains in the independent union movement they prove concretely, at the same time, that the organizations of the Stalinists cannot be the medium for its growth. The Shoe and Leather Workers' Industrial Union, after trying in every way to disrupt the amalgamation movement and to take the place of the other unions, has been reduced to such a weak position that it had to apply for admission into the amalgamation convention at the last moment under pressure of its own members. The Stalinists contributed nothing but disruption and disorganization to the effort to bring the shoe workers together and have completely discredited themselves.

"It is impossible to describe the results of this treatment. The victims almost lost consciousness, and the more they screamed the more pleasure their torturers gained...."

"If this first 'admonition'—so they called this brutal treatment—did not succeed, it was reinforced by blows from the rubber truncheons on the head and back, until the wretched victims admitted anything to avoid further torture.... in some cases the accused were

DRIVING FOR THE NEW PARTY

Less than two months have passed since we issued our public declaration for the creation of a new international and a new Communist party in this country. Already there have been a good many indications of a hearty response from the revolutionary workers. They come to our greetings in much greater numbers than before. Serious questions, asked sympathetically, manifest their live interest in the issue. The response is reflected most directly in the actual growth of the League. New branches are springing up and nearly everywhere the existing units are teeming with life and activity, extending the influence of the Left Opposition and its sympathetic circle.

To assemble the forces for the creation anew of a revolutionary party—this is the gigantic task which we have undertaken in this country. It will test the ability, devotion and capacity for sacrifice of every comrade. Our task is facilitated by the present raising curve of the labor movement as a whole. The most momentous problems will be posed before it in the next immediate period. For these a correct solution can be advanced only from the arsenal of Marxism. It is in the crucible of the struggle that all the programs will be tested. To be the most active participant in it is our aim.

We have taken the first preparatory step by openly proclaiming our orientation for a new international and a new party. This first decisive step has been followed by the elaboration of an Action Program for the coming immediate period.

RUSSIAN REVOLUTION FILM
The "Russian Revolution" film scheduled for Dec. 3rd is postponed for Saturday, Dec. 23rd. It will be held at the Millant Hall, 154 Watkins St., Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Film Club of the International Workers School. The hall can be reached by the B. M. T. 14th St. Canarsie Line to Sutter Ave., or the I. R. T.—7th Ave.—New Lots to Rockaway Avenue.

Action Program is the popularization of the new party and the establishment of a monthly theoretical organ. We have already made a beginning towards the popularization of the contents of THE MILITANT. We have reduced its price to put it within reach of the workers so that it might be read by the workers of the capitalist crisis and the new pressure of the "recovery" measures. We aim to make THE MILITANT a real bulwark of this new movement which, while maintaining entirely its unequivocal Marxist position, speaks in terms understandable to the workers. We aim to have it yet more fully reflect their struggles and aspirations and serve as an unflinching guide.

We plan the publication of a theoretical organ in the near future. A number of new pamphlets are coming up. Organizers are to be placed in the field.

But all of these aims, which are necessary parts of the big job of assembling the forces for a new revolutionary party, depend for their fulfillment on the financial support we receive now from our comrades and friends. This point now stands out prominently and imperatively. We are depending on you to stand with us now. Funds are urgently needed for current work as well as for the promotion of the new projects in our program of action. Enroll yourself now as a supporter of the new party of Communism in a concrete, practical way. Send your contribution to

«No!»-Unser Wort's Reply to the Hitler Plebiscite

(The following article, reprinted from Unser Wort, the German organ of the Bolshevik-Leninists, was published prior to the Nazi plebiscite on the withdrawal of Germany from the League of Nations and the sanctioning of Hitler's foreign policy.—Ed.)

There are many reasons for the Hitler Plebiscite and the withdrawal from the League of Nations. In the first place they seem to have been dictated by the daily worries of the Hitler government. While these worries do not permit us to predict the fall of German Fascism, nevertheless we must not neglect them.

First, there is the trial on the burning of the Reichstag which is truly not a glorious page in the history of Fascism, and which seriously compromises the Hitler government before the foreign world. There are also the differences in the leadership which they will not be able to stifle or minimize for very long. There is, moreover, the rapid decline in the confidence and enthusiasm of the petty bourgeois masses gathered from reports of all parts of the Reich. All this makes it necessary to "do something," to divert the attention of the foreign world and the popular masses, to find a slogan which will mobilize everybody for the creation of a new national united front. The field of "external national policy" is quite appropriate to this end. Nowhere had the agreement with the Fascist bandits of all sections of the population been greater; nowhere has the noisy work of the Fascists borne better fruit, in no question is the ideological commemoration of the German proletariat more marked, thanks to the shameful activity of the Socialist and Communist parties, than in this field.

Even if this plebiscite was not an organized comedy—whose results are made to order by the Minister for Reichstag Affairs, that is, the Minister of Propaganda—Hitler could secure votes on this field better than on any other. The "impossible" results of these elections backed by all the methods of Fascist terror, compared with which the "Balkan elections" are orgies of democratic freedom, will appear in the eyes of the outside world—which has no real notion of this German Macedonia—as a demonstration of the German people in favor of Hitler. There are important tasks of activity and propaganda for the emigrants in this field.

Hitler's step—the withdrawal from the League of Nations—has far deeper consequences than the trivial interests of daily agitation. It was dictated almost completely by the development of German imperialism after the war. The imperialist contradictions being opposed to its complete annihilation, German imperialism, suffering in its own forces, struggles forcibly to reach first rank. If it cannot obtain it as an independent force it endeavors to become an equal ally treated with equality and esteem. For only a war, openly posing the question of a new division of the world, could re-establish its own status. In this connection, Hitler is only continuing what was begun by Stresemann and Herrmann Muller.

The move of Hitler in Geneva rests less on his courage than on the utilization of the Japanese experience. The great powers of the League of Nations have so demonstrated their weakness on the departure of Japan, that Germany, still weaker, has permitted itself to do likewise.

The unparalleled economic decadence has forced Germany to look for quick solutions and to desert the path of patient negotiations. Experience has vindicated the position of Germany. No one wants today to engage in war with Germany; no French paper dares to pose the question of sanctions.

On the other hand it would be false to imagine that Germany wants to go to war tomorrow. Several years of preparation are necessary. Still less does it want war against France. In this sense Hitler's speeches are quite "sincere." They want to buy the dearest alliance, but not for war in the west. The real war for war, particularly for Hitler Germany, is the East.

The decision of Fascist Germany has sown the greatest confusion in the socialist and Communist parties. Both of them, kicking over Marxism, have accused Hitler not of nationalism, but of lack of nationalism. The whole agitation of the C. P. G. up to the month of June still tends to demonstrate the national "treachery" of Hitler. The Deutsche Freiheit stammers pitifully that the action of Hitler leads to a worsening of the positions of Germany as if it were paragraphs and statutes and not relationship of forces which decide.

Hitler is still not national enough for the C. P. O. We will be curious to know whether the C. P. G. wins a single Nazi with the help of this "tactic." But at the same time the C. P. O. has fallen into another contradiction. While the C. P. O. follows the line of the former foreign policy of the U. S. S. R., Litvinov has already embraced Herriot; Pilsudsky and Molotov send telegrams of protest against the German disturber in the ranks of the League of Nations. The entire policy of the last years has deprived the U. S. S. R. of its independence on the international arena and forces it to follow one or another bloc.

We Internationalist-Communists have a fundamentally different point of view on the national question. For us, the main enemy is German imperialism, the representative of exploitation and the artifice of the next war, and not the treaty of Versailles, whose abolition can only help our enemies. We have never followed a nationalist policy as do the miserable epigones of Bolshevism. We have always fought it as a policy which strengthens the exploiters and brings war nearer. In this sense, we arouse the masses, today again, against this Hitlerite policy which despite its pacifist phrases and by means of its pacifist phrases is preparing for war. There is only one way: to reject this shameful plebiscite of the organizers of hunger and the hangmen!

Unemployment Insurance - A Slogan to Unite Teachers and Workers

The growth of the population, the struggle against illiteracy, the lack of schools and the increasing specialization of knowledge and improvement in educational methods all make necessary an expansion of the educational system of the United States, particularly what is called the free school system. But no expansion is taking place. On the contrary, under the pressure of the crisis the capitalists are trying to conserve profits or reduce losses, among other means, by easing the tax burden through economy in civil and state government at the expense of the educational system.

The toll this economy has exacted can be gauged from some figures given in a recent resolution presented to George F. Zook, United States Commissioner of Education, by four hundred representatives of forty educational organizations. "More than 2,200,000 children of school age are already deprived of educational opportunity" and "nearly 2,000 rural schools failed to open this fall." To these figures should be added the curtailment of school terms, the shortage of indispensable material like text books, the crowded classrooms and the other easily imagined injurious effects of this economy.

What all this means to the teachers can be seen from statements in the same resolution. "One in every three American teachers is now receiving less than $750 per year. Thousands of teachers are receiving no salary at all."

Not a Temporary Phenomenon. There is good reason to believe that this contraction is not a temporary phenomenon. The need for economy is not likely soon to disappear. The crisis is not over. The bankers and realty interests will continue to squeeze for greater profits and greater economies. And this crisis, should the capitalists succeed in overcoming it, will be succeeded by others of a deeper character. If our present experience means anything it indicates that the attacks on the educational system will increase and cut deeper.

It follows that the employed teachers will suffer a drastic lowering of their living and working conditions if they do not organize and resist. The thousands of unemployed teachers and the thousands more who are qualifying to teach will never do so if they wait for the capitalist masters of society to provide them with the opportunity. Together they should struggle for the expansion of the educational system and resist its contraction.

For this they need unity. The unemployed should support the struggle of the employed against curtailment of school facilities as every successful resistance increases the possibility of advancing to the counter-attack for expansion of them. The employed should support the struggle of the unemployed for work and relief as every success in this direction removes a threat against the lowering of their own standards through the pressure of the unemployed for work.

Unemployment Insurance for Teachers. The fight for unemployment insurance is one of the best means of uniting the employed and unemployed.

An extensive agitation was carried on by our comrades among the sailors of the Red Fleet during the five days they stopped over in the port of Phalere.

The fleet, composed of a cruiser and two destroyers entered the port of Phalere on Monday morning. The first day was devoted to official visits. The eight admirals paid their respects to the minister of the Navy. The minister returned the visit of the fleet, receptions, speeches of friendship and mutual admiration, etc. The police were mobilized. No one could approach the harbor. The streets of Athens were full of dicks and bulls. But as the admirals left the ministry of Navy, their auto was covered with the leaflets of the organization and the admirals were greeted with shouts: "Long Live the Red Fleet and Army! Long Live Trotsky!"

The second day was the sailors'. The sailors, in groups with officers at their head, went to visit the museums. It was then that we had the opportunity to carry on an extensive agitation. A group of comrades distributed leaflets in Russian to them in the Archeologic museum. The sailors were accompanied up to the station with shouts: "Long Live the Red Fleet, Long Live the Red Army! Long Live Trotsky!"

On the Acropolis another strong group of comrades mixed with the sailors and discussed with them. They stated that the sailors showed an intense interest, but the officers intervened and pushed them away. "There were sailors who insulted the name of comrade Trotsky. But a great number remained silent and showed a kind of astonishment to see so many 'Trotskyists'."

A big sailor approached our comrades and said in a low voice "Trotsky is O. K." Another, bearing the insignia of the C. P., pushed him away and insulted him. For three hours our comrades persisted, singling the International and revolutionary partying them with questions on the expulsion of comrade Trotsky and the fate of Rakovsky.

At Every Step. But what caused most surprise among the sailors was the fact that as they strolled along in small groups they encountered "Trotskyists" at every step who greeted them with the shout "Long Live Trotsky!" and handed them leaflets.

There were cases where the sailors answered with insults. But some of them (those who were not accompanied by officers) took the leaflets and hid them. In the stores where the sailors bought footwear and small articles they were astonished to find leaflets of our organization. Our comrades of the trade union of store employees who were well-supplied with leaflets enclosed them in the purchases made by the sailors. There were also characteristic scenes in which on the one hand the bureaucrats showed their wrath and the terror to which the sailors were subjected.

A group of sailors were making purchases at a store. The guide showed them a survey of the party. The sailors said: No, it is Trotskyist. All the Greeks are Trotskyists.

The C. P. did nothing. It could only mobilize a dozen bureaucrats, who gathered in the Acropolis in a very wise manner, so as not to disturb the friendly relations of the two countries. This was the only demonstration of the Stalinists. The journalists were not given the right of entry on the warships. The most characteristic thing was that the sailors did not dare to speak to anyone. Even when people knowing foreign languages offered their services as interpreters, the sailors did not accept them.

The Attitude of the Sailors. As to the general attitude of the sailors—they were silent, austere and "wise." When they entered a store, one of them, always with a party insignia, remained outside and watched. They all bought food for themselves or for their wives, stockings and watches. They were well-dressed save for their shoes which were in bad condition. During their noon-hour meal (they ate on the Acropolis) they ate a cheap quality of bread and margarine.

The cruiser "Krasny-Kavkaz", built in the U. S. S. R., made a great impression, by its armament and generally by its construction, on the journalists and the officers of the Greek navy. They wrote many articles on it.

The fleet left for Naples, Italy in the evening. They will probably go also to Marseilles. The opportunity will also be present there to show the sailors of the Red Fleet that the liquidation of "Trotskyism" only exists in the minds of the bureaucrats of the Stalinist clique.

Statement of Goldman on Joining Communist League

In joining the Left Opposition I am doing that which every thinking revolutionary Marxist should not fail to do. That the Stalinist bureaucracy has forsaken the idea of the world revolution and uses the phrase only in the ritual on holiday celebrations should by this time be clear to everyone who keeps fairly well informed with ideas and events.

What it is incumbent upon every revolutionary Marxist to assert and emphasize is that the abandonment of the world revolution represents the greatest danger to the Soviet Union. To the middle class intellectuals Stalin gives evidence of his great "statesmanship" by concentrating on "building socialism in one country." To them comrade Trotsky is the wild revolutionary without a sense of "realism." To the working class revolutionary Stalin's path means inevitable disaster and betrayal of the international working class, including the Russian. This explains why so many of the New Republic and Nation enthusiasts are flocking to the banner of Stalinism at the time when revolutionary Marxists are expelled from the Communist parties.

When in the early part of 1933 I became acquainted with Trotsky's "Criticism of the Draft Program" I immediately knew who represented the truth of revolutionary Marxism. I hoped, however, that the Communist International would be compelled by the force of events to change its policies. I was not convinced that it was necessary to follow comrade Trotsky in making an open and intransigent struggle against the destructive ideas and tactics of the Comintern. Only my very closest friends knew where my sympathies lay. The party functionaries knew that I followed Trotsky's writings very closely and expressed some displeasure but attributed my interest to the fact that I was not a worker but an intellectual.

My five months in the Soviet Union in 1931 left me more disturbed than ever. On the one hand I saw the successful building of huge factories, while on the other hand I saw evident signs of degeneration in the party, and working class and peasant dissatisfaction. Fortunately in the last month of my stay I came in contact with an American-Jewish worker in Kharkov, and my first enthusiasm engendered by the appearance of huge factories was tempered by a more intimate knowledge of the life of the Soviet worker as revealed to me by this New York machinist who left the United States because he heard (Oligin, in a lecture, describe the Soviet Union as a veritable paradise).

Testimony of Russian Party Members. The economic hardships for the workers and peasants, however, were not in themselves sufficient to cause one to change his views on basic principles. Difficulties and hardships are to be expected. In 1931, the effect of the adventures policies of the "liquidation of the kulak as a class" and "the five year plan in four" was not yet fully apparent. There was a great deal of hope that the end of the five year plan would witness a marked improvement.

What was most disturbing was the intellectually stifling atmosphere in the party. Several times party members, when with me alone, asked me in a whisper concerning the whereabouts of Trotsky. They did not even know that he was in Turkey. The party members had a grotesque picture of conditions in capitalist countries. Discussion in the party units revolved around how best to carry out the party line. It was no longer a Communist party—that is, a living, thinking, functioning group of class-conscious workers but a huge machine mindlessly carrying out the behests of "the leader".

Upon my return to the United States I was determined to give the Chicago workers who were interested a more realistic picture of the Soviet Union. Though more convinced than ever that Trotsky was right in his criticism of Stalin's economic policies in the Soviet Union, I was not yet prepared to begin a struggle in the open. I therefore omitted many things in my lectures on the Soviet Union. I simply warned my listeners not to go to the Soviet Union for the purpose of remaining there.

The German Lesson. It was the German situation and the insane policies followed by the C. I. bureaucrats that convinced me of the necessity of an open fight against these policies. It became obvious that not to struggle against the Comintern "line" amounted to an actual betrayal. Comrade Trotsky was absolutely correct in his open and uncompromising struggle against the revisionism of Stalin and his fellow-bureaucrats. No longer quiet, but speaking openly against the C. I. line, I was immediately expelled.

I know, of course, that I belonged to the Left Opposition. Nevertheless I would not join without getting in touch with the "Love-ones" and reading their literature over again. The more I read of their position, the more I talked with their representatives, the more disgusted I became. The two Stalin ideas—one the correct Stalin for the Soviet Union and the other the incorrect one for the capitalist countries—was sickening. Herberg's article in the Modern Monthly explaining the position of the Lovestonites was the last straw. It is pitiful for anyone to attempt to make such a sharp distinction between Stalinism in the Soviet Union and in the capitalist countries. It is a denial of Marxism for anyone to say: the principles are correct, only the tactics are wrong.

The Principles of Marx and Lenin. I have joined the Left Opposition because it represents the interests of the international revolutionary working class. It is clear to me that the principles upon which it stands are based upon the teachings of Marx and Lenin and free from the filth and revisionism of Stalin and his obedient satellites in the Soviet Union and in the capitalist countries.

He who understands the principles of revolutionary Marxism and who is not afraid to struggle for those principles has only one road to follow—to build a new party and a new international under the leadership of the Left Opposition.

The Class Meaning of the Conflict over the Roosevelt Monetary Policy

The government money policy in relation to the national recovery act of the present administration has reached a critical stage. A struggle within the camp of the big bourgeoisie over methods to be used against other imperialists, the middle class at home and the workers of the world has been brought to the surface. In the first stage of the NRA this struggle, which was officially inaugurated with the election of Roosevelt, was somewhat concealed. Now it has broken out in the open.

It is no accident that the present controversy rages around a secondary issue such as the monetary policy. It seems to be an excellent point of attack for the opposition capitalists. At the same time it is a convenient cover for the more important struggle. Due to its government position Dr. Sprague was in a key position to launch an attack. His resignation as treasury financial adviser is hailed by the press as a step that will bring into sharp relief the different views on the monetary question. This is true. Nevertheless the question remains a secondary one.

Dr. Sprague's Statement. Dr. Sprague understands the difficulties of the capitalist system as a whole. More significant on this score than his criticism of the Roosevelt money policy was the following statement by Dr. Sprague: "Capitalism cannot survive unless we get together, tackle and solve these major problems which are breaking it down, which have already partially broken it down. I should say that, failing solution, the final breakdown will come two years from now."

But underlying and more fundamental than the offensive over the monetary policy of the administration is the struggle of the capitalist group working for greater government and industrial centralization against the capitalist individualists. And also there is the struggle over the question of the financial undertakings and expenses of the government for which at present there are no means of equalizing through government income. Some argue that the middle class will have to bear the burden with increased taxes. Others contend that the issuing of greenbacks and currency inflation is the best method. This is not only a conflict between the big capitalists and the middle class, it is a struggle within the camp of the big capitalists themselves as to the best method of consolidating and maintaining their power at home and abroad with the least friction. The struggle against the pound and the franc on the international field is as fundamental as the struggle against the other classes at home. For, in the last analysis, the leading imperialists desire to have the dollar sailing the seven seas as the dominating international exchange when monetary agreement can be reached on a basis satisfactory to America.

Increase in Foreign Trade. The increase in foreign trade for the month of October is reported enthusiastically by the capitalist press which attributes a considerable part of this gain to the depreciation of the dollar in relation to the pound and the franc. Soviet recognition and trade, through credits on American terms, are regarded as a step to increase the exports and regain markets. In addition to this America holds a favorable position in the Pan-American conference.

The tinkering with the financial structure is only a surface scratch of the problems and contradictions confronting American imperialism. At the most such measures can only provide short breathing spells. The more fundamental problems will have to be tackled and solved to prevent a breakdown.

THE LANGUAGE OF BOLSHEVIK DIPLOMACY

(Note of Soviet Commissar of Foreign Affairs Chicherin to President Woodrow Wilson, transmitted through the Norwegian Attaché in Moscow, October 24, 1918).

Mr. President,

In your message of January 8th to the Congress of the United States of North America, in the sixth point, you spoke of your profound sympathy for Russia, which was then conducting, single-handed, negotiations with the mighty German Imperialism. Your program, you declared, demands the evacuation of all Russian territory and such a settlement of all questions affecting Russia as will secure the best and freest co-operation of the other nations of the world in obtaining for her an unhindered and unembarrassed opportunity for the independent development and national policy, and assure her a sincere welcome into the society of free nations under institutions of her own choosing; and, more than a welcome, assistance of every kind that she may need and may herself desire. And you added that "the treatment accorded to Russia by her sister nations in the months to come will be the acid test of their good-will, of their comprehension of her needs as distinguished from their own interests, and of their intelligent and unselfish sympathy."

The desperate struggle which we were waging at Brest-Litovsk against German Imperialism apparently only intensified your sympathy for Soviet Russia, for you send greetings to the Congress of the Soviets, which under the threat of a German offensive ratified the Brest peace of violence—greetings and assurance that Soviet Russia might count upon American help.

Test of American Capitalism's "Good Will"

Six months have passed since then, and the Russian people have had sufficient time to get actual test of your Government's and your Allies' good will, of their comprehension of the needs of the Russian people, of their intelligent unselfish sympathy. This attitude of your Government and of your Allies was shown first of all in the conspiracy which was organized on Russian territory with the financial assistance of your French Allies and with the diplomatic co-operation of your Government as well as the conspiracy of the Czech-Slovak agents to whom your Government is furnishing every kind of assistance. For some time attempts have been made to create a pretext for a war between Russia and the United States by spreading false stories to the effect that German war prisoners had seized the Siberian railway, but your own officers, and after them Colonel Robins, the head of your Red Cross Mission, had been convinced that these allegations were absolutely false. The Czech-Slovak conspiracy was organized under the slogan that unless these mistreated unfortunate people be protected, they would be surrendered to Germany and Austria; but you may find out, among other sources, from the open letter of Captain Sadoul, of the French Military Mission, how unfounded this charge is.

The Czech-Slovaks would have left Russia in the beginning of the year had the French Government provided ships for them. For several months we have waited in vain for your Allies to provide the opportunity for the Czech-Slovaks to leave. Evidently these Governments have very much preferred the presence of the Czech-Slovaks in Russia—the results show for what object—to their departure for France and their participation in the fighting on the French front. The highest proof of the real object of the Czech-Slovak rebellion is the fact that although in control of the Siberian railway, the Czech-Slovaks have not taken advantage of this to leave Russia, but by the order of the Entente Governments, whose directions they follow, have remained in Russia to become the mainstay of the Russian counter-revolution.

Promises and Performances

Their counter-revolutionary activity, which made impossible the transportation of grain and petroleum on the Volga, which cut off the Russian workers and peasants from the Siberian stores of grain and other materials and condemned them to starvation—this was the first experience of the workers and peasants of Russia with your Government and with your Allies after your promises of the beginning of the year. And then came another experience; an attack on North American troops, including American troops, their invasion of Russian territory without any cause and without a declaration of war, the occupation of Russian cities and villages, executions of Soviet officials and other acts of violence against the peaceful population of Russia.

You have promised, Mr. President, to co-operate with Russia in order to obtain for her an unhindered and unembarrassed opportunity for the independent determination of her political development and her national policy. Actually, this co-operation took the form of an attempt of the Czech-Slovak troops, and later, in Archangel, Murmansk and the Far East, of your own and your Allies' troops, to force the Russian people to submit to the rule of the oppressing and exploiting classes, whose dominion was overthrown by the workers and peasants of Russia in November, 1917. The revival of the Russian counter-revolution which has already become a corpse, attempts to restore by force its bloody domination over the Russian people—such was the experience of the Russian people, instead of co-operation for the unhindered expression of their will which you promised them, Mr. President, in your declarations.

Wilson's "Assistance" to Russia

You have also, Mr. President, promised to the Russian people to assist them in their struggle for independence. Actually this is what has occurred: While the Russian people were fighting on the South-east front against the counter-revolution, which has betrayed them to German Imperialism and was threatening their independence, while they were using all their energy to organize the defense of their territory against Germany at their Western frontiers, they were forced to move their troops to the East to oppose the Czech-Slovaks who were bringing them slavery and oppression, and to the North—against your Allies and your troops, which had invaded their territory, and against the counter-revolutionary organized by these troops.

Mr. President, the acid test of the relations between the United States and Russia gave quite different results from those that might have been expected from your message to the Congress. But we have reason not to be altogether dissatisfied with even these results, since the outrages of the counter-revolution in the East and North have shown the workers and peasants of Russia the aims of the Russian counter-revolution, and of its foreign supporters, thereby creating among the Russian people an iron will to defend their liberty and the conquests of the revolution, to defend the land that it has given to the peasants and the factories that it has given to the workers. The fall of Kazan, Simbirsk, Syzran and Samara should make clear to you, Mr. President, what were the consequences for us of the actions which followed your promises of January 8. Our trials helped us to create a strongly united and disciplined Red Army, which is daily growing stronger and more powerful and which is learning to defend the revolution.

The attitude toward us which was actually displayed by your Government and by your Allies could not destroy us; on the contrary, we are now stronger than we were a few months ago, and your present proposal of international negotiations for a general peace finds us alive and strong and in a position to give in the name of Russia our consent to join the negotiations. In your note to Germany you demand the evacuation of occupied territories as a condition which must precede the armistice during which peace negotiations shall begin. We are ready, Mr. President, to conclude an armistice on these conditions, and we ask you to notify us when you, Mr. President, and your Allies intend to remove your troops from Murmansk, Archangel and Siberia. You refuse to conclude an armistice unless Germany will stop the outrages, pillaging, etc., during the evacuation of occupied territory. We allow ourselves, therefore, to draw the conclusion that you and your Allies will order the Czech-Slovaks to return the part of our gold reserve fund which they seized in Kazan, that you will forbid them to continue as heretofore their acts of pillaging and outrages against the workers and peasants during their forced departure (for we will encourage their speedy departure, without waiting for your order).

«Ours is a People's Government, Yours is Not»

With regard to your other peace terms, namely, that the Government would conclude peace must express the will of their people, you are aware that our Government fully satisfies this condition. Our government expresses the will of the Councils of Workers' Peasants', and Red Army Deputies, representing at least eighty per cent of the Russian people. This cannot, Mr. President, be said about your Government. But for the sake of humanity and peace we do not demand as a prerequisite for general peace negotiations that all nations participating in the negotiations shall be represented by Councils of Peoples' Commissars elected at a Congress of Councils of Workers', Peasants' and Soldiers' Deputies. We know that this form of Government will soon be the general form, and that a general peace, when nations will no more be threatened with defeat, will leave them free to put an end to the system and the intrigues that forced upon mankind this universal slaughter, and which will, in spite of themselves, surely lead the tortured peoples to create Soviet Governments that give exact expression to their will.

Agreeing to participate at present in negotiation with even such governments as do not yet express the will of the people, we would like on our part to find out from you, Mr. President, in detail what is your conception of the League of Nations, which you propose as the crowning work of peace. You demand the independence of Poland, Siberia, Belgium, and freedom for the peoples of Austria-Hungary. You probably mean by this that the masses of the people must everywhere first become the masters of their own fate in order to unite afterward in a league of free nations. But strongly enough, we do not find among your demands the liberation of Ireland, Egypt or India, nor even the liberation of the Philippines, and we would be very sorry if these peoples should be denied the opportunity to participate together with us, through their freely elected representatives, in the organization of the League of Nations.

For the Cancellation of War Debts

We would also, Mr. President, very much like to know, before the negotiations, with regard to the formation of a League of Nations, have begun, what is your conception of the solution of many economic questions which are essential for the cause of future peace. You do not mention the war expenditures—this unbearable burden which the masses would have to carry, unless the League of Nations should renounce payments on the loans to the capitalists of all countries. You know as well as we, Mr. President, that this war is the outcome of the policies of all capitalist nations, that the governments of all countries were continually piling up armaments, that the ruling groups of all civilized nations pursued a policy of annexations, and that it would, therefore, be extremely unjust if the masses, having paid for these policies with millions of lives and with economic ruin, should yet pay to those who are really responsible for the war a tribute for their policies which resulted in all these countless miseries. We propose, therefore, Mr. President, the annulment of the war loans as the basis of the League of Nations. As to the restoration of the countries that were laid waste by the war, we believe it is only just that all nations should in this respect aid the unfortunate Belgium, Poland and Silesia; and however poor and ruined Russia seems to be, she is ready on her part to do everything she can to help these victims of the war, and she expects that American capital, which has not at all suffered from this war and has even made many millions in profits out of it, will do its part to help these peoples.

Aims of the League of Nations

But the League of Nations should not only liquidate the present war, but also make impossible any wars in the future. You must be aware, Mr. President, that the capitalists of your country are planning to apply in the future the same policies of encroachment and of super-profits in China and in Siberia; and that, fearing competition from Japanese capitalists, they are preparing a military force to overcome the resistance which they meet from Japan. You are no doubt aware of similar plans of the capitalists and ruling circles of other countries with regard to other territories and other peoples. Knowing this, you will have to agree with us that the masses of the people created by the masses of the people to export products and capital to foreign countries in order to reap super-profits in return for the benefits forced on them, their struggle for spoils, resulting in imperialistic wars.

"Expropriate the Capitalists"

We propose, therefore, Mr. President, that the League of Nations be based on the expropriation of the capitalists of all countries. In your country, Mr. President, the banks and the industries are in the hands of such a small group of capitalists that, as your personal friend, Colonel Robins assured us, the arrest of twenty heads of capitalist cliques and the transfer of the control, which by characteristic capitalist methods they have come to possess, into the hands of the masses of the world is all that would be required to destroy the principal source of new wars.

If you will agree to this, Mr. President—if the sources of future wars will thus be destroyed, then there can be no doubt that it would be easy to remove all economic barriers and that all peoples, controlling the means of production, will be vitally interested in exchanging the things they need. It will then be a question of an exchange of products between nations, each of which produces what it can best produce, and the League of Nations will be a league of mutual aid of the toiling masses. It will then be easy to reduce the armed forces to the limit necessary for the maintenance of internal safety.

Appeal to American Workers

We know very well that the selfish capitalist class will attempt to create this internal menace, just as the Russian landlords and capitalists are now attempting, with the aid of American, English and French armed forces, to take the factories from the workers and the land from the peasants. But, if the American workers, inspired by your idea of a League of Nations, will crush the resistance of the American capitalists as we have crushed the resistance of the Russian capitalists, then neither the German nor any other capitalists will be a serious menace to the victorious working class, and it will then suffice, if every member of the commonwealth, working six hours in the factory, spends two hours daily for several months in learning the use of arms, so that the whole people will know how to overcome the internal menace.

And so, Mr. President, though we have had experience with your promises, we nevertheless accept as a basis your proposals about peace and about a League of Nations. We have tried to formulate with precision your proposals on the League of Nations in order that the League of Nations should not turn out to be a league of capitalists against the toiling masses. Should you not agree with us, we have no objection to an open discussion of your peace terms, as the first point of your peace program demands. If you will accept our proposals as a basis, we will gladly agree on the details.

"Which Is the Real President?"

But there is another possibility. We have had dealings with the president of the Archangel attack and the Siberian invasion and we have also had dealings with the president of the League of Nations' Peace Program. Is not the first of these—the real president—actually directing the policies of the American capitalist Government? Is not the American Government rather a government of the American corporations, of the American industrial, commercial and railroad trusts, of the American banks—in short, a government of the American capitalists? And is it not possible that the proposals of this government about the creation of a League of Nations will result in new chains for the people, in the organization of an international trust for the exploitation of the workers and the suppression of weak nations? In this latter case, Mr. President, you will not be in a position to reply to our questions, and we will say to the workers of all countries: Beware! Millions of your brothers, thrown at each other's throats by the bourgeoisie of all countries, are still perishing on the battle fields, and the capitalist leaders are already trying to come to an understanding for the purpose of suppressing with united forces those that remain alive, when they call to account the criminals who caused the war!

"Your Post Is Not Yet Taken by Debs."

However, Mr. President, since we do not at all desire to wage war against the United States, even though your government has not yet been replaced by a Council of Peoples' Commissars and your post is not yet taken by Eugene Debs, whom you have imprisoned; since we do not at all desire to wage war against England, even though the cabinet of Mr. Lloyd George has not yet been replaced by a Council of Peoples' Commissars with MacDonald at its head; since we have no desire to wage war against France, even though the capitalist government of Clemenceau has not yet been replaced by a workers' government of Merheim; just as we have concluded peace with the imperialist government of Germany, with Emperor William at its head, from whom you, Mr. President, feel as alien as we, the Workers' and Peasants' Revolutionary Government, from you—we finally propose to you, Mr. President, that you take up with your Allies the following questions and give us precise and definite replies: Do the governments of the United States, England and France consent to cease demanding the blood of the Russian people until they agree to pay them a ransom such as a man who has been suddenly attacked pays to the one who attacked him? If so, just what tribute do the governments of the United States, England and France demand of the Russian people? Do they demand concessions, that the railways, mines, gold deposits, etc., shall be handed over to them on certain conditions, or do they demand territorial concessions, some part of Siberia or Cassania, or perhaps the Murmansk Coast?

"State Your Demands Clearly"

The Russian people, through the people's Red Army, are guarding their territory and are bravely fighting against your invasion and against the attacks of your Allies. But your government and the governments of the other Powers of the Entente, undoubtedly, have well prepared plans, for the sake of which you will state your demands clearly and definitely. Should we, however, be disappointed should you fail to reply to our quite definite and precise questions we will draw the only justified conclusion—that we are only justified in the assumption that your government and the governments of your Allies desire to get from the Russian people a tribute both in money and in natural resources of Russia, and territorial concessions as well. We will tell this to the Russian people as well as to the toiling masses of other countries, and the absence of a reply from you will serve for us as a silent reply. The Russian people will then understand that the demands of your government and of the governments of your Allies are so severe and vast that you do not even communicate them to the Russian Government.

Our Present Tasks

The victory of national-socialism in Germany brought about in other countries not the strengthening of Communist but of democratic tendencies. In an especially clear form we see this in the examples of England and Norway. But the same process is undoubtedly taking place in a series of other countries as well. It is very possible that the social-democracy of Belgium in particular will in the nearest future go through a period of a new political ascent. That reformism is the worst break on historic development and that the social-democracy is doomed to failure—this is ABC to us. But the ABC alone does not suffice. In the general historic decline of reformism just as in the decline of capitalism, periods of temporary rise are inevitable. The candle burns most brightly before it goes out. The formula: either Fascism or Communism is absolutely correct, but only in the final historic analysis. The destructive policy of the Comintern supported by the authority of the workers' state has not only compromised revolutionary methods but has also given to the social-democracy, defiled by crimes and treacheries, the opportunity of raising up again over the working class the banner of democracy as the banner of salvation.

The Workers Dread Fascism

Tens of millions of workers are alarmed to the very depths of their hearts by the danger of Fascism. Hitler showed them again what the destruction of working class organizations and of elementary democratic rights means. The Stalinists kept on asserting for the last couple of years that there is no difference between Fascism and democracy, that Fascism and social-democracy are twins. On the tragic experience of Germany the workers of the whole world convinced themselves of such assertions. Therefore the further decline of the Stalinist parties under conditions exceptionally favorable for the revolutionary wing. Therefore also the desire of the workers to hold on to their mass organizations and to their democratic rights. Thanks to the ten-year criminal policy of the Stalinized Comintern the political problem presents itself to the consciousness of the many-millioned working class masses not in the form of a decisive alternative: the dictatorship of Fascism or the dictatorship of the proletariat, but in a form of a more primitive and vague alternative: Fascism or democracy.

Take the Situations As It Is

We must take the resultant political situation as it is without creating any illusions. Of course, we remain always true to ourselves and to our banners always and under all conditions we say openly who we are, what we want and where we are going. But we cannot force our program on the masses mechanically. The experience of the Stalinists on this score is sufficiently eloquent. Instead of coupling their locomotive to the train of the working class and accelerating its movement forward, the Stalinists set their locomotive with a loud whistle towards the train of the proletariat and sometimes even collide with it so that only scrap is left of the small locomotive. The consequences of such policy are evident: in some countries the proletariat has fallen a defenseless victim of Fascism, in others it has been thrown back to the positions of reformism.

The Struggle for Democratic "Rights"

There can be no thought of course of a serious and prolonged regeneration of reformism. It is really not a question of reformism in the wide sense of the word but of the instinctive desire of the workers to their "rights". From this purely defensive and purely conservative position the working class can and must in the process of struggle go over to a revolutionary offensive along the whole line. The offensive, in its turn, must make the masses more susceptible to great revolutionary tasks and consequently to our program. But to achieve this we must go through the period opening before us together with the masses, in their first ranks, without dissolving in them but also without detaching from them.

The Stalinists (and their miserable imitators, the Brandenburgers) declared democratic slogans under prohibition for all the countries of the world; for India which did not as yet accomplish its liberating national revolution; for Spain where the proletarian vanguard must yet find the ways for transforming the creeping bourgeois revolution into a socialist one; for Germany, where the crushed and atomized proletariat is deprived of all that is achieved during the last century; for Belgium the proletariat of which does not take its eyes off its Eastern borders and, suppressing a deep mistrust, supports the party of democratic "pacifism" (Vandervelde & Co.). The Stalinists deduce the bare renunciation of democratic slogans in a purely abstract way from the general characteristic of our epoch as an epoch of imperialism and of social revolution.

Deepen the Channels of Struggle

Thus presented, the question contains not even a grain of dialectics! Democratic slogans and illusions cannot be abolished by decree. It is necessary that the masses go through them and outlive them in the experience of battles. The task of the proletariat consists in coupling its locomotive to the train at the masses. It is necessary to find the dynamic elements in the present defensive position of the working class; we must make the masses draw conclusions from their own democratic logic, we must widen and deepen the channels of the struggle. And on this road quantity passes over into quality.

The Bolsheviks In 1917

Let us recall once more that in 1917 when the Bolsheviks were immeasurably stronger than any one of the present sections of the Comintern they continued to demand the earliest convocation of the Constituent Assembly, the lowering of the voting age, the right of suffrage for soldiers, the election of officials, etc., etc. The main slogan of the Bolsheviks "all power to the Soviets" meant from the beginning of April up to September 1917 all power to the social-democracy (Mensheviks and Social-Revolutionaries). When the reformists entered into a governmental coalition with the bourgeoisie, the Bolsheviks put forth the slogan "down with the capitalist ministers". This sloganized again workers, forced the Mensheviks and Social-Revolutionaries to take the whole power into their hands! The political experience of the only successful proletarian revolution is perverted and falsified by the Stalinists beyond recognition. Our task here also consists in re-establishing the facts and drawing from them the necessary conclusions for the present.

One Task Today

We, Bolsheviks, consider that the real salvation from Fascism and war lies in the revolutionary conquest of power and the establishing of the proletarian dictatorship.

ship. You, socialist workers, do not agree to this road. You hope not only to save what has been gained but also to move forward along the road of democracy. Good! As long as we have not convinced you and attracted you to our side we are ready to follow this road with you to the end. But we demand that you carry on the struggle for democracy not in words but in deeds. Everybody admits—each in his own way—that in the present conditions a "strong government" is necessary. Well then, make your party open up a real struggle for a strong democratic government. For this it is necessary first of all to sweep away all the remnants of the feudal state. It is necessary to give the suffrage to all men and women who reached their 18th birthday, also to the soldiers in the army. Full concentration of legislative and executive power in the hands of one chamber! Let your party open up a serious campaign under these slogans, let it arouse millions of workers, let it conquer power through the drive of the masses. This at any rate would be a serious attempt of struggle against Fascism and war. We, Bolsheviks, would retain the right to explain to the workers the insufficiency of democratic slogans; we could not take upon ourselves the political responsibility for the social-democratic government; but we would honestly help you in the struggle for such a government; together with you we would repel all attacks of bourgeois reaction. More than that, we would bind ourselves before you not to undertake any revolutionary actions which go beyond the limits of democracy (real democracy) so long as the majority of the workers has not consciously placed itself on the side of revolutionary dictatorship.

Attitude Toward Socialist Workers

For the coming period this should be our attitude towards socialist and non-party workers. Having taken together with them the initial positions of democratic defense, we must impart to this defense immediately a serious proletarian character. We must firmly say to ourselves, we shall not allow that which occurred in Germany! It is necessary that every class-conscious worker permeate himself through and through with the thought of not allowing Fascism to raise its head. It is necessary systematically and persistently to surround workers homes, publishing houses and clubs with a circle of proletarian guards. It is necessary as persistently to encircle the hearths of Fascism (newspapers, clubs, Fascist barracks) with a proletarian blockade. We must make fighting agreements with political, trade-union, cultural, sports, organizations and other working class organizations for the defense of the institutions of proletarian democracy. The more serious and thoughtful, the less loud and boastful character the work will have, the sooner we will gain the confidence of the proletariat, beginning with the youth, and the surer it will lead to victory.

That is the way I picture the basic characteristics of a truly Marxist policy for the coming period. In different countries of Europe this policy will, of course, assume a different form depending on national circumstances. To follow attentively all the changes in the situation and all the shifts in the consciousness of the masses and to put forth at every new stage slogans flowing from the whole situation—in this consists the task of revolutionary leadership.

News from Germany

... Little by little something worth while is rising to the top above all the confusion and from under the wreckage of the various groups. The old shop is completely in ruins. Of the Thaelmannists nothing remains and no one wants to hear anything of them. There is some talk about the Neumanists, but no one really knows what they want. They have no people with them. There is however one group that does concern us seriously: that is the group of the conciliators. They have put out a circular in which they play the role of "the old experienced ones" who always said what would happen. In the German question they say almost the same thing essentially as we do aside from several stupidities and slander. One stupidity: in their opinion it was not the seizure of power that stood on the order of business but the conquest of the majority of the working class; we had proposed opportunistic bloc policies while they had been for the united front with the middle layers of the S. P. G. Above everything else they attack us on the question of Thermidor without however taking any concrete position. Nothing but platitudes. They issued a thousand copies of this circular. In actuality to be sure, they have only a limited number of solid functionaries around them; they are merely putting themselves at the head of a universal rebellion in order to derail it, in order to hold together the last remnant of Stalinism and to parade as the saviors in step with the strains of the E. C. O. I. march music. In the circular they are very careful to absolve all the blame on the shoulders of the Thaelmannists. It does not breathe

a word about the E. C. O. I. or Stalin.

We also hear that Platinetsky has been gathering material zealously, cross-examining all people coming from Germany in preparation for an attack against Heckert.

(In the meantime Platinetsky has given birth to his scheme in the form of a pamphlet "The present situation in Germany" in which he admits several mistakes of the party to be sure, but only so as to emphasize the absolute correctness of its political line and tactics. Thus the crusade against Heckert has come as a sort of a second addition of a Heckert resolution.—Ed.)

That seems to be the hitch. You will be able to judge much better what it means. In general we say, aside from the fundamental polemics, that the whole hope placed in the new leadership is a deception. The illusion, because Joseph can not admit the mistakes in Germany especially if we are to judge from the capitulation of Zinoviev. In any case it is only a transitory stage for most of them.

Among those members half inclined to think there is a good deal of sympathy for us but a great thirst for material, especially with regard to questions of building further. (Trade Unions). We have over several very important people from the middle and higher party apparatus.

The Lynching Wave

IN THE outbreak of lynchings that swept the country, striking at three widely separated sections with the fury of a hurricane, an old American custom was repeated with some new and distinctive features which are of exceptional significance. In the present situation such orgies of mob violence as those in California, Maryland and Missouri do not fit into the old pattern.

Mob murder in itself is no novelty in the United States. In the South, as everybody knows, it is an established institution for the repression of the Negroes, operating all the time as an extra-legal supplement to the regular court procedure. In the North, also, lynching has been known before, but it is not "recognized" here as it is in the South and, except in isolated instances, has appeared only in connection with social disturbance.

The frenzied lynching bees of the recent days, however, had their scene in the northern part of the country, or on its border; white men as well as Negroes were victims; there was not one single lynching but three, and these in rapid succession; and the happenings precipitated a hysterical public controversy over the issue, with Governor Rolph, of California, and other prominent people, including—God save the mark!—a New York preacher (who later recanted), openly condoning the bestial actions of the mob. It is clear that last week's lynchings had special features of their own; they represent a new and somewhat different phenomenon, and they arose from a special combination of causes.

The three lynchings did not occur merely because of popular reversion at some crime of a particularly shocking nature. The California kidnapping was the match that set off the explosions of unrestrained morose hysteria and violence, but the explosive material itself for some kind of an eruption was already there. It consists of the unrest, and dissatisfaction of the people, primarily the ruined petty-bourgeois elements, their uncertainty and their sense of frustration which charge the social atmosphere like a leyden jar.

All of this has been accumulating during the crisis years. It presses for outlet and may readily find it in strange, irrational and violent ways. The lynching hysteria which has swept the country derives from the same source as the fanatical million-headed following of Father Coughlin, the demagogic priest. The real author is the social devastation wrought by the crisis.

The material out of which Fascist gangs, anti-Semitism, religious frenzies and morose lynching mobs all may be set in motion is at hand in the social tension which produced three lynchings within a week. The material for the rapid development of a revolutionary labor movement is there also in the bitter discontent of the workers but a leading force capable of organizing it is so far lacking. The disintegration of the Communist movement aids the one-sided expression of the general mass of social discontent in a Fascist direction.

The popular support received by Governor Rolph, in his stand as the champion of the mob, is a significant indication of the extent to which public opinion was stirred by the San Jose lynching, and even of the widespread vicious participation in it. Rolph, a demagogue of the first water, appears in this instance more as the reflector of petty-bourgeois mass prejudice and hysteria than as the authentic spokesman of the decisive sections of the ruling class. There is no foundation for the contention (Only Worker, Nov. 30.) that the mob violence was deliberately unleashed at command of the big capitalists and that Rolph speaks in their name. They will come to such a policy in time, of this there is no room for doubt, but it is no part of their design at the present moment. Just the contrary, as an examination of the facts will show.

The inflammatory utterances of Governor Rolph aroused a storm of controversy and revealed a division of opinion. This division, and its nature, must be perceived and understood, not ignored. The lynching governor was "showered with telegrams of approval". But, on the other hand, the capitalist press, led by the big New York dailies, and an imposing committee of "citizens", headed by ex-president Hoover, condemned him. The real present sentiment of the big capitalists was indubitably expressed by them. And for good reasons.

Unrestrained mob action is a dangerous fire to play with under the present conditions. The leading exploiters will not lightly instigate it. They do not feel the need of it yet. Mob hysteria might easily express itself in a different direction under the slightest incitement. As long as the rulers feel themselves secured by the legal processes of repression they will not deliberately encourage extra-legal mob actions. That is why the most authoritative representatives of capital frowned on Rolph's condemnation of them.

The psychological factors for a rapid transformation of the social conflict out of the realm of legality and parliamentarism into that of open mass violence, and for the lightning-like emergence of a revolutionary movement on the one side and a fascist movement on the other, have an exceptional strength in America; they are rooted in the tradition of the country as well as in the conditions of the present. The American people of all classes, by and large, have very little regard for "law and order" when it stands in the way of something they really want to do. (The almost universal disregard of the prohibitory law is an interesting illustration of this attitude on a wide scale.)

American labor history has been written in struggle violent and bloody. Many a strike took the form of armed conflict; few pass without violent clashes. On the other hand, the American capitalists never hesitated to go outside the bounds of their own legality when the exigencies of the class struggle required it. Frank Little was killed by lynchers. So also was Wesley Everest and many other labor militants. The radical workers were dragged into support of the war or bludgeoned into silence by unofficial lynching mobs which supplemented the legal compulsion of the state authority. A good half or more of the brutal violence against the workers in strikes is the work of unofficial thugs and gunmen. When the two main classes in this country get ready to settle accounts, and long before they come to the final account, the "legal" framework of the struggle will have been shattered to bits.

The reservoir of mass violence in America is a huge one, and the events of the past week have demonstrated how easily it can be tapped, and with what unbridled fury it can rage. The mob of humans turned into wild beasts who mutilated and killed the two helpless prisoners at San Jose, and that far bigger mob of vicious participants who applauded them from afar, have presented a spectacle of menacing implications to the labor movement.

The same mobs can be directed against the workers. They are the material out of which the murderous bands of Fascism can be organized when the big exploiters feel the need of them. The working class had every reason to take alarm at the spread of lynching and to raise a mighty protest against every official condemnation of it. But the bare appeal from mob violence to ordered legal processes—the smn and substance of liberal and socialist agitation—does not touch the heart of the issue. The problem is rooted in the social conditions of the class society just as the whole oppressive system of class justice is. The same class forces which administer the "law" need only to sense a danger to their rule in order to organize and bribe the dregs of society and hurl them against the workers with unrestrained violence. To rely solely on capitalist legal procedure in the struggle against lynching and other forms of illegal mass violence is to clear the way for the latter. Under different circumstances the force behind each is the same.

The movement of Fascism does not come into existence at the command of the capitalists. It arises out of the conditions created by capitalism at a certain stage of its disintegration as a social and economic system. Its troops, for the greater part, are the petty bourgeois elements, ruined and driven to frenzy by the crisis. The movement is aimed, at its inception, against big capital as well as against the labor movement. The former take over the movement and hurl it against the workers if the latter do not show sufficient strength to crush the movement of Fascism and gain the support of the petty-bourgeois masses for their revolutionary program.

These fundamental considerations should be kept in mind in connection with the various manifestations of incipient Fascism in America. The revolutionary labor movement and the movement of Fascism both grow out of the same social conditions. The devastating crisis of American capitalism has prepared the soil for both. What is most alarming in the present developments is the increasing number of signs that the restless and dissatisfied petty bourgeois elements are finding expression in various ways which, taken together, lead in the direction of a Fascist movement. The lynching orgy of the past week was undoubtedly such a sign—one of many. Of the revolutionary counter-movement among the masses there is hardly a trace.

For this one-sided development, which is fraught with so much danger to the working class, the conditions themselves are not to blame. All the objective requisites for the speedy development of a revolutionary movement in the working class have been maturing under the enormous pressure of the crisis. What is lacking to organize it and set it on its feet is a revolutionary Communist party. The disintegration brought into the movement by Stalinism has taken a fearful toll. Stalinism has destroyed the Communist Party. We must build a new one without delay. This is the imperative warning sounded again in the events of the past week.

L. A. Needle Trades Strike

adoption in order to "make it easier for our union members to do their work in the shops. Los Angeles has been so long unorganized we dressmakers must be content with whatever we can get." Which proposal the strike committee indignantly and unanimously voted against and demanded a strike immediately for the closed shop.

The season was almost over. Only a consistently militant strike would win. The leadership was forced to call a strike, and did so on October 12, after wasting three precious weeks, and laying plans in the meanwhile for the further carrying out of their class-collaboration policies.

Turn-Out of Strikers

From the first the turn-out of the workers was remarkable. Thousands of workers, unorganized, uneducated, 60% Mexican and 90% without understanding of unionism; nevertheless, responded to the strike call, with enthusiasm and militancy. The courage of the women strikers for they composed the bulk of the strikers, is a story that marks a turn in the history of labor unionism in Los Angeles. Scabs in other industries will do well to remember the experiences of the scabs in this strike.

In the midst of such militancy and after about two weeks of striking, an invitation to arbitrate was sent to the union and the bosses by the NKA officials.

At this first call, the bosses refused—but not so the leadership of the strikers. In such haste were they to collaborate, they called together a hitherto non-existent executive committee of the strike and with only one dissenting vote, that of the Left wing leader of the cloakmakers, I. Lutsky, voted for arbitration. Of all the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union leadership, Lutsky is the only one who has consistently fought for a militant policy with militant action and because of which was forced by the leadership to stay out of the dressmakers' strike and take care solely of the cloakmakers.

Workers Against Arbitration

At the strike committee meeting that night, it was clearly seen that the sentiment of the members of the strike committee was overwhelmingly against arbitration. It was pointed out by them that the only question to be arbitrated was the question of union recognition, inasmuch as the bosses conceded our other demands, and union recognition was the one point which should not have been arbitrated. On the basis of our militant struggle, our successful turn-out and our financial resources, as yet, we were in a position to demand union recognition and the closed shop. Add to that also, public opinion and the admission of the NKA Board that they were powerless to act on the hundreds of coded violations we had sent in. We resented placing our fate in their hands.

In the face of these arguments by the strike committee, Feinberg was forced to expose his hand. First, he explained that the acceptance of arbitration would never come to arbitration because the bosses would never agree. He explained that this was only a tactic to win over public opinion and sympathy. But the strike committee was not so easily hood-winked. Feinberg had to admit that no matter what the decision of the strike-committee was, he had orders from New York to submit to arbitration and that is what was going to be done. He attempted to calm the workers somewhat by urging them to be content to take a little at a time instead of stubbornly insisting for all their demands.

The Reactionaries' "Maneuver"

The stupidity of the bosses, fortunately for the leadership, saved them that night. In the midst of the uproar which greeted Feinberg's announcement, the morning papers were brought in with the declaration of the bosses refusing to arbitrate, and Feinberg, and Pesotta and Berg were able to crow, "I told you so, our maneuvers were correct!", forgetting that the workers still remembered that it was no mere maneuver but a direct order from New York which sent them to the arbitration board.

Taking full advantage of the situation, realizing it was a matter of hours before the bosses accepted the arbitration, the leadership called a mass meeting of the strikers for the next afternoon. Allowing no one on the floor, they triumphantly came to the membership to prove the correctness of their "maneuvers" and to ask for a vote of confidence. All but 10 of these present voted confidence in the leadership. The strike committee was powerless to act on the question of arbitration when finally the bosses accepted and a group of "fair-minded citizens" were chosen to settle the burning question of union recognition.

Arbitration Dampens Militancy

From the day the Arbitration Board met, can be marked the decline of the militancy and the lowering of the morale of the strikers. They were ordered by the leadership not to yell "Scab!" and to be "peaceful". When you see scabs walking into your shops, escorted by police and taking your jobs and you are instructed to peacefully and meekly allow them to do so, your spirit is broken and with it came a breaking down of the picket-line and the vigilance of the strikers.

When after a week of arbitration, the strikers were again ordered to be militant, few strikers responded to the call for no one felt like going to jail when the strike was already out of their hands. What few were militant were sent to jail and the strikers became cowed.

After two weeks of arbitration, the dress code was received and on the basis of the code, a "truce" between bosses, represented by the Manufacturers' Association, that participated on the Arbitration Board, and the Union was made. Approximately 60% of the strikers were affected. These 60% were to go back to the shops on the basis of the status quo existing 4 days before the strike and were to receive wages and conditions stipulated in the dress code. The rest of the independent shops continued on strike and the Arbitration Board was to continue meeting on the question of union recognition.

Disorganization of Union

When the workers came back, they were met with closed doors. The bosses pleading the slow return, refused to take the militant workers back into the shops. Workers were being discriminated against even more now than before the strike. They have lost time and wages and are rewarded with a disorganized union.

All during the strike the Industrial Union played their usual sectarian role. Instead of participating in the international as class conscious workers, they came in blustering of their membership in the Industrial Union, contributed little militancy on the picket line, and antagonized the workers by their dualism.

The class-collaboration policies of the leaders, the hypocrisy and opportunism of the Lovestones, the dualist sectarianism of the Stalinists makes the problem of crystallizing a Left wing in the union with the object the restoring of the morale of the members a difficult one. Yet the class conscious members of the union must courageously set their compass in that direction.

The Railroad Brotherhoods

Craft Divisions of R.R. Workers

As is quite generally known, the railroad workers are divided into 21 separate and independent organizations, in other words, one organization for each craft employed in the industry. The Engineers were first to organize at Detroit, Michigan in 1863, the Conductors followed suit in 1868, the Firemen came next in 1873, and the Brakemen launched their union in 1883. As the other seventeen crafts employed on the railroads matured for organization the fell in line one after the other until the railroad workers found themselves with one union on their hands for each craft in the industry.

New Methods of Transportation

This form of organization was naturally a progressive force as long as it was able to function in the interest of its members, when the railroad corporations were small and each one putting up an independent struggle for its own existence. But things have changed considerably since 1863, when the first railroad union was organized. Locomotives have increased in size regularly about every ten years. Trains have been lengthened in about the same manner. Repair and maintenance work have been improved and modernized by a constant installation of labor saving machinery. The small railroads have been merged into gigantic systems. Their ownership and direct ownership interlocked. Other modes of transportation, such as Motor and Air transport, came upon the scene, to say nothing about Pipe Lines and the Panama Canal.

However, amongst all this change and development in the field of

First of Series of Articles

The above is but a prelude to a series of short articles, which we hope to contribute to the Militant, between our working hours. In future articles on this topic we will try to point out the several progressive minority movements which are taking on organized form inside of the railroad unions and contribute what we can towards coordinating the efforts of these minorities in the right direction of a proper program.

In concluding this introductory article "On the Railroad Brotherhoods" we urge other railroad workers to contribute articles through the columns of the Militant on the problems of the railroad workers and their solution. Our own Journals and Labor are closed to the ideas of the progressive minority. To print and distribute your own ideas is forbidden by scabwags, Brother "Italks", we need a Minority Movement with a minority press in the Railroad Brotherhoods. Use the Militant to promote these ends.

Statement on Montreal Anti-Fascist Conference

To All Organizations Affiliated to the Anti-Fascist and Free Speech Conference in Montreal, To All Working Class Organizations.

Comrades: At the 3rd session of the Anti-Fascist and Free Speech Conference the delegates of the Left Opposition and Spartacus Youth Club were expelled. This was brought about by the Stalinists who are in control of the conference and who from its beginning made every effort to hush the voice of the Left Opposition delegates going even to the extent of trying to throw them out bodily before the first session opened. This is the conduct of people whose policies have been proclaimed bankrupt by living experience itself, who having no arguments at their disposal, are compelled to resort to such miserable measures to suppress a criticism they cannot bear.

It was these same Stalinists who in Germany before Hitler came to power proclaimed that there was no distinction at all between a capitalist democratic regime and Fascism, that it was impossible to form a united front with the Social Democrats against Hitler, that the socialists were Fascists and he who questioned such wisdom was a Fascist himself. It was these same Stalinists whose senseless policies rendered Hitler the greatest service who served him as a lever without the aid of which it would have been impossible for him to raise himself to power.

At present the conference is reduced to a Stalinist family gathering thanks to their strangulating hold on it. The three sessions held up to now have shown a sharp and progressive decline in attendance. The theories spun by the Stalinists to the effect that one must become a Communist before being able to fight Fascism are a rebalancing of the Red United Front—that notorious united fronting with ourselves that led to the German catastrophe. If this is what the Stalinists want then they have succeeded. The conference is, at present, a hulk void of anything but Stalinist faithfulness.

However, there exists an urgent need for an anti-Fascist and free speech conference in Montreal. Although the Fascist attacks on workers organizations have subsided for the time being, nevertheless, the Fascist threat remains. The internal consolidation of their ranks is taking place. Efforts are being made to organize a closely-knit party.

Against this many-sided attack upon the workers a genuine united front of the working class is needed with a program of united struggle for freedom of speech and organization and against Fascism, while guaranteeing the right of each organization to express its criticism in a constructive manner. We will fight for the formation of such a united front whether along the lines of reforming the present conference or if it should prove necessary by calling a second one.

The puny bureaucrats of Stalinism are far from all-powerful. Before an influx of working class bodies into the conference their strangulating grip should be definitely broken. We call upon the Verdun Workers' Association to take alarm at the abuse of the conference called by them, on the part of the Stalinists. We call upon workers organizations of every description to enter the conference and fight.

Notes of the Week

LYNCHING IS once again occupying the center of public attention. The mob murder of the Clarke kidnappers at San Jose and its public condemnation by California's Governor Rolph brought on its trail a wave of repercussions in mass sentiment. The spectacle of a "law and order" representative endorsing this highest expression of social lawlessness could not help bringing a new courage and new nerve to the dregs of American society engaged in the barbarian pastime. Aside from the repetition in St. Joseph, Missouri and the liberation of the Maryland mobsters, there were just as serious reactions of a more general, wide-spread character.

The Atlanta, Georgia correspondent of the New York Times has the following to report on the subject: "When Rolph's praise of lynching was printed, sentiments in line with the following utterances indicate the reaction of certain groups: 'California's my new address now,' 'Let's send all the niggers to California,' 'That California man oughter be President, etc.'"

The tragic heroes of most of the lynching bees in American history have been Negroes for the greater part. ("From 1880, when records of lynching began to be kept," says the N. Y. Herald-Tribune of last Sunday, "to 1932, 3,745 persons have been killed by mass violence....2,994 were Negroes"). The mob act has ever been a weapon of the white rulers of the South to strike terror into the doubly exploited masses of dark-skinned toilers. By his conduct of the "legal" trial of lynchwood Patterson, ruling class Judge Callahan assured all his fellow barbarians that it will not be necessary for them to "Send all the Niggers to California" to be lynched.

THE TRIAL of Patterson and the rest of the Scottsboro boys dramatized vividly and with striking clarity the social roots of the Lynch madness. The original framework, as is well-known, took place at a time when the black share-croppers of Alabama were stirring in revolt. The boss class and its liberal agencies are well aware of the social basis of the mob-murder phenomenon. The Southern Commission on the Study of Lynching has made some interesting observations on the causes.

In its reports, the Commission investigates the circumstances that lead a crowd of people into the killer frenzy against the Negroes. Some half-brained professors, it seems, explained "it all" as a sort of mid-summer madness. Lynchings do, to be sure, occur more often in the Summer than in the other seasons, the commission explains, but

"Working and living out of doors in warm weather, mid-summer unemployment, landlord-tenant relations in summer, and other factors greatly modify any all-weather explanation.... During the summer months, after cultivating is done and harvesting begins, there is little to occupy the time of Negro and white workers on Southern farms....Manhunts and lynchings—afford an avenue of emotional escape from a life so drab and unstimulated that any alternative is welcomed."

The honorable Commission has, willy-nilly, hit the nail on the head: "landlord-tenant relations"—that is what makes the Negro share-cropper the butt of the Lynch organizers. "A life so drab that any alternative is welcomed"—that is what makes the poor whites, de-classed proletarians, the instrument in the hands of the landlord Lynch organizers. Can the basis of this species of human rabies be abolished without abolishing the system of boss class dominance which nurtures it? Can the disgrace of Lynching be wiped out in this country without a working class movement to do away with a "life so drab that any alternative is welcomed"?

That is what every sincere fighter against Lynching must ask himself. The workers for their part must make the organized mass protest against Lynch-exponent Rolph and Lynch-lawyer Callahan a forefront task of their class battle.

TERZANI TRIAL POSTPONED WHEN 'GENERAL' SMITH FAILS TO APPEAR

Trial of Athos Terzani, accused of killing his anti-Fascist comrade, Anthony Fierro, was postponed until Dec. 11 when the prosecution declared it was unable to produce its chief witness, Commander Art J. Smith of the Fascist Khaki Shirts of America. The court was told that a subpoena had been served on Smith in Baltimore but that he had refused to testify.

Dist. Atty. Charles S. Cadden asked Judge Thomas C. Radin for time in which to get Smith to appear "by whatever means possible". Opposing this motion, Arthur H. Hays, chief of defense counsel, declared there was every reason to believe that Smith would never come to testify against Terzani. He asked Cadden to agree to call for dismissal of the indictment if Smith is still missing when the case comes up again, but Cadden refused to do this.

Mass Fight Needed in Scottsboro Case

the way they have been kept alive thus far. That is the only way they can be snatched free from the blood lust of the bourgeois tiger. There is no other way.

That is where the defense made a major strategic mistake. The mass movement which has kept the boys alive for almost three years has been allowed to die down. Here and there they get up a demonstration, but the militancy and the numbers of the early days of the movement are gone.

Playing Down Class Issue

The policy of playing down the class nature of the case was carried out in the courtroom. There was no talk of the misery of the southern workers which drove the nine boys to roam the country on freight trains looking for work to supplement the pittance their mothers' drudgery eked out. No word was said of the frightful oppression of the negro masses. It was all a strictly legal question with the defense. At least that is how they fought it.

On the legal plane it is all in favor of the capitalists. It is their court, their law, their judge. WE are there on sufferance because of the hard fight we put up for two years on three continents to save these innocent boys from death or life imprisonment. When we fail to bring that fight right into the courtroom we give the judge a chance to put on a show of a fair trial, we thereby say in effect that the capitalists are right, that justice is above the classes equal and impartial.

Change of Strategy Needed

Without losing any more time we have got to change this strategy. If the boys are to be saved the workers must be mobilized. How? There are four million organized in the A. F. of L. There are a million in the railroad brotherhoods, several thousands more in the T. U. U. L. I. W. W., independent unions, Socialist Party, Communist Party, etc. There are a number of defense organizations. We think that all of these organizations should be asked to come together in one united front movement to fight for the immediate, unconditional and safe release of the Scottsboro boys.

When the united front conferences are organized we will be there to participate in the work. And we are going to insist on one thing: the first duty of the movement is the mobilization of the workers in mass meetings, demonstrations, parades, in every form of protest that is known to the working class.

The banner of the working class is stained with the blood of Sacco and Vanzetti, with the blood of hundreds and thousands of its sons and daughters, done to death under the wheels of the capitalist juggernaut. It is woven of the sufferings of thousands more, of Mooney and the historic though, so far, unsuccessful struggle to set him free.

If the working class will inscribe on its banner the immediate, unconditional and safe release of the Scottsboro boys, and organize to fight for their freedom they can be set free.

Finished with Stalinism!

Another Leader of German C.P. Revolts

Editor's Note: After the open letter of comrade Maria Reese, we are in a position now to make public another document, no less important than the Reese letter. We offer to our readers the letter sent to Platinitsky the organizational secretary of the Communist Party of Germany and of the Communist International. From the first he has held important, responsible posts in the Comintern and gained thereby, a thorough knowledge of the workings of the apparatus of the C. P. G. and the Comintern.

Comrade Friedberg's break with the Stalinist apparatus is another heavy blow against Stalinism. We are sure that his letter will be received with the greatest attention by all party members and particularly among those who participated in the first years of the formation of the Communist International.

Up to August last, the C. P. of the Saar was for the return to Germany. The "leader" of the C. P. declared publicly: "Even if we will have to face the gallows in Hitler Germany, we want to return to the Fatherland." For this patriotism, he received the praise of Hermann Roehling over the radio from Frankfurt-am-Main. Let's not be deceived by him. In August Die Rundschau (official Stalinist organ—Ed.) of Basle made public the new position: "A Red Saar in a Soviet Germany." This slogan is just as

New Year Eve Masquerade Ball for the Militant

This New Year's Eve the Militant is giving its first masquerade Ball at Germania Hall, 158 Third Avenue (16th Street). It promises to be the gayest affair we have ever arranged. Comrades, singly and in groups, are already planning their costumes drawing inspiration from such historic events as the Paris Commune, the Russian Revolution, etc.

The spirit of bolshevik competition will be present for prizes are to be given for the best costumes—also for the worst. Take your choice but at all events—compete! A program of revolutionary dances specially arranged will be given by talented comrades and sympathizers. There will also be a fine singer of folk songs. Refreshments of all kinds will be served at low cost.

A special jazz band has been hired.

The admission is only 50 cents. Get your tickets in advance.

Comrades: Make no other appointments for New Year's Eve—celebrate with us the beginning of a big year for the MILITANT and the Communist League of America.

N.Y. Hotel Strikers Organize

Food Workers Union Strengthens Ranks

New York.—The strike of the Montclair Hotel workers conducted by the Hotel and Restaurant branch of the Amalgamated Food Workers, which we reported in last week's Militant still continues and picketing is very effective. The National City Bank which owns the Montclair is very stubborn in settling the strike with the Union. It employs numerous things who attempt to terrorize the strikers and also to keep the scabs on the job. In spite of this terrorism, the strikers were strengthened last Friday with an additional sixty-five workers from the dining-room and kitchen department.

They use every means to provoke and intimidate the strikers and their leaders. They arrested Organizer Cudis under the false charge of being the leader of a gang beating scabs. These charges, however, were dropped by the very worker who made them because he understood in the meantime that he was unconsciously becoming the tool of the bosses. Upon realizing this he also joined the ranks of the strikers. For the first time in the last 17 years a hotel in New York was forced to close its kitchen and dining-room departments. The bosses are forced to keep the scabs out and night because if they go out from the hotel they immediately fraternize with the strikers and become part of them.

This strike has already succeeded in bringing home to the workers as well as to Hotel Men's Association (but the Union, a branch of the Amalgamated Food Workers, is out in the field to secure decent working conditions for the hotel and restaurant workers. Already, many hotels like the Park Central, that up to now have refused to pay any wages at all to their waiters, are calling meetings of their waiters to discuss the question of wages. Many other hotels have increased the wages simply because they realize that the Union is organizing their workers.

Under the leadership of the Food Workers Union, which has brought with it the exclusion of the best revolutionary elements in the Soviet Union as in the Comintern. He repeatedly declared that the expulsion of Trotsky and his friends was one of the greatest crimes of the C. C. of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union.

The revolutionary strength of Max Hoelz was shackled by the Stalinist bureaucracy. His passionate will to struggle could not bear the tedious bureaucracy. He was kept in inactivity for many years through the chicanery of the bureaucracy. They refused to give him any productive work in order to paralyze his revolutionary energy.

He was a fighter for the emancipation of the proletariat whose militancy will be a pattern for us.

UNSER WORT.

Why I Did It

James McGovern, M. P. for the Independent Labor Party from Scotland has the following explanation to make of his sensational action at the opening of Parliament where he shouted defiance at the King. We quote from the British New Leader for November 24th, 1933:

"Knowing that the present session of Parliament would be opened by the reading of the proposed Government by the King, I thought I would like to hear these proposals at first hand, realizing that the new Insurance Bill would mean to the unemployed of this country."

"I arrived at the Bar of the House of Lords and gazed at the vulgar display of wealth—wonderful and expensive gowns, jewels and tiaras, worth hundreds of thousands of pounds, military and naval representatives of our own and foreign nations. Everywhere I looked I saw wealth, comfort and, self-satisfaction. I thought of the poor, wretched people outside who are to be the victims of future legislation and who, by their energy and sacrifice, provided all this wealth."

"And I could not remain silent. I looked upon the scene and, knowing that their favorite sport was chasing and killing foxes, I saw the workers being hounded down into the gutter, the grave, the asylum, and the workhouse by the legislation of this class. I remembered those who produced the wealth existing in rags, bootless, hungry, and sitting before empty grates or being evicted from their homes."

"Maxton and Buchanan (Independent Labor Party M. P.—Ed.) had for a number of years refused to attend the opening of Parliament because of their disgust with this show. As I saw the performance indignation overcame me when I recalled the human suffering outside, the Means Test, Unemployment cuts, and the destruction of the social services. Something within me rebelled and I lashed out at the enemies of the people."

"Did I do wrong? Is there any worker who believes that I did not voice the feeling of every decent human being? I feel that I spoke for the working class whom I represent."

St. Paul Packing Strike

Adventurist Methods Cause Bad Defeat

St. Paul.—The workers in the packing industry throughout the U. S. have for some time been dissatisfied with their conditions. The failure of the NRA to raise wages created a situation favorable for organizational work. (The press reports that local NRA officials attribute the "unrest" among the packing-house workers to the failure of the minimum wages schedules to affect any but a small number of employees.)

Strikes have been called in various plants in different parts of the country. In Austin, Minnesota at the plant of the Geo. Hormel Co. a strike took place. The workers, who were organized into Independent union which embraced the entire working population of the city, seized the factory and ejected the company officials. With the aid of the local farmers they held out for several days. State and Company officials then prevailed upon the men to return to work pending arbitration. Recognition of the union was granted. One of the main reasons why the bosses were able to accomplish this so easily was the absence of conscious Left wing militants in the union.

But here in South St. Paul the strike under the leadership of the self-styled "Revolutionary Vanguard," the T. U. U. L., yielded far more disastrous results!

Armour's Swift's and Cudahy's are the three large packing companies in South St. Paul. They employ approximately 3500 workers who have long been corralled into company unions. As a result of the terrific speed-up and part-time employment under the Roosevelt "spread the work" plan their wages were reduced to a starvation level. Despite the dissatisfaction of the workers here the A. F. of L., which has a negligible section of the men organized into the Amalgamated Meat-cutters and Butchers Workers Union, conducted no activity whatsoever.

Stalinist Strike Strategy

In the Armour plant the T. U. U. L. succeeded in organizing a small group of men into the Packinghouse Workers Industrial Union. At Swift & Co., a smaller group was formed. The rest of the workers in these two huge plants knew little or nothing of these activities. Instead of a campaign in the three big plants to organize a union capable of conducting a struggle, and, when such a union was formed, to strike the three plants and simultaneously, the union decided to call a strike at the Armour plant immediately!

On November 15th a committee from the Stalinist union approached the Armour officials and presented the following demands: A 10 cents per hour increase; a 32 hour week.

On the Death of Max Hoelz

On September 15th, Max Hoelz met with an accident in a boating trip on the Oka River (Soviet Union) and drowned. And with that the life of a fighter was extinguished, a militant who will continue to live on in the hearts of the revolutionary proletariat as the courageous one revolutionist who fought with determination and strength against capitalism and for the proletarian revolution.

The lessons of the revolutionary struggles of 1920 and 1921, which were led by Max Hoelz, have not yet been eradicated from the consciousness of the revolutionary proletariat. If there was only one member of the C. C. of the C. P. U. S. imbued with the spirit of Max Hoelz the disgraceful, capitulatory defeat of the C. P. G. could not have been possible. The functionaries who are whispering among themselves that Max Hoelz was not a Marxist, that his deeds and those of his group had little in common with the fundamentals of the class struggle are well answered by the fact that he was not that kind of a "Marxist" who hides his cowardice behind Marxism.

An Enemy of the Stalinist Bureaucracy

The news of the death of Max Hoelz shocked all the friends of the militant. It is not true, as the social democratic and Communist papers write, that his political career came to an end with his release from prison in 1918. Max Hoelz wanted to struggle on. He was an enemy of the Stalinist bureaucracy. The German C. C. covered with guilt for Hitler's victory—he hated and despised it with a violent passion.

During the prison years and the years of his stay in the Soviet Union Max Hoelz, through intensive study acquired a comprehensive Marxist education. These were to be a strong weapon for him in the coming struggles of the German proletariat. Max Hoelz's mind was set on returning to Germany to engage in new struggles. As late as last February, after Hitler had become Chancellor, Max Hoelz addressed a request to the Comintern to permit him to return to Germany. The Stalinist bureaucracy did not allow him to do so. In order to prevent him from leaving, he was forced to become a Soviet citizen.

Stood for a New Party

Max Hoelz shared the views of his friends Wolf and Wollenberg on the collapse of the German C. P. and the Comintern. And also, as early as March he proclaimed the necessity for the creation of a new party of struggle. At the beginning of March there were many discussions in his hotel room on the situation created in Germany and in the Comintern by Hitler's victory. Max Hoelz repeatedly expressed himself in this connection that the defeat of the German C. P. and the Comintern was caused in the first place, by the false policy of the Comintern in recent years and particularly by Stalin's false policy in the Soviet Union, which has brought with it the exclusion of the best revolutionary elements in the Soviet Union as in the Comintern. He repeatedly declared that the expulsion of Trotsky and his friends was one of the greatest crimes of the C. C. of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union.

The revolutionary strength of Max Hoelz was shackled by the Stalinist bureaucracy. His passionate will to struggle could not

THE LEAGUE FORGES AHEAD

We are now launching another program of expansion. Its main feature is expressed in our decision to assemble the forces for the creation of a new revolutionary party and, in preparation for this, to bring the League much more definitely into mass activity in the class struggle.

This declaration can signalize the beginning of a great upswing of American Communism. It can become the means of new inspiration in place of old disappointments which resulted from the bankruptcy of the official Communist movement alongside the manifest corrupting influence of social reformism. But it can also remain an empty gesture which will bring devastating consequences. The results to be attained depend entirely upon us and upon our supporters. Our proclaimed intentions can be proved only by deeds.

It is from this standpoint that we present our expansion program of today. It is a practical program setting up comparatively modest tasks which can and must be carried out. This Action Program we summarize herewith in brief form:

1. The transformation of The Militant into a popular agitation paper to be sold at a cheaper price

2. The establishment of a theoretical organ—The New Internationalist—to which the heavier and longer articles will be transferred.

3. The acceptance of members into the League on a broader basis than heretofore.

4. The systematic establishment of united front relations and joint class struggle activities with other workers organizations, in particular with those groups with which we have some points in agreement.

5. The formation wherever possible of peripheral organizations (workers' clubs, etc.) on a broad basis.

6. The systematic registration of the League membership for enrollment in mass organizations of various kinds, above all the trade unions which have a mass character.

7. The strengthening of the central apparatus of the League by provision for the full-time employment of qualified comrades and the maintenance of at least one field organizer.

We have set the sum of $1500 as a minimum requirement, provided it is collected by a concentrated campaign within a short period of time. On this score we can report some results already which will also be enumerated in the subsequent issue. Meanwhile we pass the question on to all of our supporters: Will you help us carry this program into life? With a response from you, such as can be expected from supporters of the Left Opposition, we shall be able to march forward to the building of a serious Communist movement in the United States. We shall be able to march forward to the New Internationalist.

Some of the points listed above have already been carried out in part. We shall make a report of this in subsequent issues. At this moment, however, our aim is to bring the Action Program to the attention of all of our supporters, so that they can express their views, make additional suggestions and fully participate with us in the further execution of this program. We proceed from the firm conviction that every step outlined can be attained. We want to hear your opinion.

The Railroad Brotherhoods The Rise and Fall of the Craft Unions

In our first article we touched briefly upon the origin of the railroad unions and their failure to adjust their structure and program in conformity with industrial developments on the railroads. In this article we will say something on the rise and fall of the Craft Union.

It is quite natural that when we first conceive of anything we do so on its narrowest base, and our understanding and outlook on any question broadens with experience. In harmony with this law of development it was, therefore, quite natural that the locomotive engineer who first conceived of organizing in 1863, should do so on a very narrow base or on the basis of his own craft alone. It did not occur to him to take the fireman, whom he often hired and fired, in with him. The conductor felt the same about his brakemen.

Often the fireman had to reward the engineer, the brakeman and the conductor for the privilege of working with them. The problems which confronted these early pioneers in organization work were small and simple when compared with the workers' problems of today. The railroads, as well as industry in general, were in a state of growth and expansion and needed more and more workers, and the organized craft was usually able to bargain with the small companies.

We think it can be truthfully said that the craft union functioned fairly well in the interest of its members until about the beginning of the present century, when the gradually growing problems of the railroad workers ushered in the idea of Craft Federation. The so-called "Big Four" would join hands in concerted wage movements, the Federated Shop Crafts would do likewise. The Eight Hour Day victory in 1916 was about the last successful stand of the craft union and its federation policy and this victory was aided very materially by the artificial war prosperity which was in full swing by 1916. In other words, during the era of industrial expansion when the railroads had a complete monopoly of transportation, the craft union was able to wheedle occasional concessions from the employers and even conduct successful strikes. But since the stand for the eight hour day in 1916, and more especially since the end of the World War, the craft unions have suffered one defeat after another, and the policy of its leadership has been one of continuous surrender and retreat. And despite the fact that each unit of traffic handler by each unit of manpower has constantly increased since 1920. The railroad workers have taken three smashing wage cuts and two of them were taken without the slightest resistance on the part of their leadership. The day of reaction and decay has definitely set in on the Railroad Brotherhoods. The only ones who benefit by the continued maintenance of the craft unions on the railroads are the swarms of high salaried officials who infest the entire craft system of organization.

In the next and future articles we will take up more in detail some of the symptoms of decay and discuss in the railroad brotherhoods and how to meet and overcome these conditions.

Until we can build a progressive Minority Movement and Press inside of the Railroad Unions, we urge the progressive railroad worker to use the columns of the Militant to express his ideas on the many needed changes in the Brotherhoods, whose reactionary and overpaid leadership cannot afford to grant us free expression in our own brotherhood press.

International Notes

GERMANY.

The Socialist Workers Party (S. A. P.) and the International Communist (Left Opposition) are continuing their close collaboration in the creation of the German section of the new International. They have just issued a joint draft of directives for the trade union work of the new Communist party in Germany. Extracts of this document, which is of exceptional interest, will be published in future issues.

YOUTH.

At the Amsterdam conference for a new Youth International, which is to meet early next January, there will be represented the Swedish Communist Youth Federation (formerly allied with the Brandierites) having within its ranks 8,000 members, the Youth Federation of the Norwegian Labor Party (18,000 members) and the Mot Dag group (the Norway group formerly affiliated with the Brandier tendency. The Marx-Lenin Group of Denmark is also expected to send a representative. The above groups are, of course, only recent recruits. French, German, etc. Youth were reported as represented in previous issues of the Militant.

SCANDINAVIA.

On the question of the new party the following have been expelled or have resigned from the Brandier International (I. V. K. O. International Federation of Communist Oppositionists): Communist Party of Sweden, the Mot Dag group in Norway, the Swiss section of the I. V. K. O. It is likewise at odds with the Brandierites, though no expulsions have as yet taken place. Comrade Bringolf, the Swiss representative on the International Committee of the I. V. K. O., expressed the following opinion at a recent meeting of that committee: the C. I. has been relegated to the position of being an instrument for Russian foreign policy; the C. I. has become a "hopeless case" for the West European proletarian.

The I. V. K. O. section in Alsace-Lorraine, one of its greatest sections, is having similar trouble with the center. In Czechoslovakia the Brandierites have almost disappeared from the scene. Only the Lovestones Group in America (after the split with Gitlow and the present differences with the Zam minority) and the Brandier Group in Germany remain firm with the I. V. K. O.

* A report from Ash, the Brandierite "stronghold" in Czechoslovakia says: "Only some 10 people still attend their 'mass meetings' in this industrial center, as far in stance on November 1."

A Statement to the Communist Party

To the D. E. C. of the C. P.

To the D. E. C. of the Y. C. L.

COMRADES:

For some time now, the undersigned comrades, members of the Communist Party or the Young Communist League, have been considering with growing alarm the development of the position of our movement in connection with recent events in this country and in Europe. We have in mind especially what happened in Germany before and after the seizure of power by Hitler, and the significance of the agreement signed at Washington between the representatives of the Soviet Union and the United States. You are undoubtedly aware that a great deal of confusion and uncertainty, doubts and dissatisfaction exists in the ranks of our Party and League on these questions. The aim of this letter is to arrive as speedily as possible at a clarification.

The German events were a distinct shock to us—this we cannot conceal. We were persuaded by the policy and the propaganda of the Communist International and our party here, that our brother party in Germany was making steady progress in driving back the Fascist gangs and winning over increasing sections of the social democracy. But the outcome of the historic struggle in Germany proved to be exactly contrary to all the forecasts that were made by our leadership. It has now become clear to us that what happened in Germany requires demands—on our part a thorough examination into the situation and the policy that was followed by us, and a drastic revision of our present course. Instead of a successful advance of our party in Germany, it has been defeated, and now lies crushed by the Brown-shirted monsters. Instead of the victory of the Red Front, we had the victory of the Swastika.

On top of all this, we were astonished to see that our party, with its hundreds of thousands of members, and millions of supporters in the elections, failed to strike a single blow at the Fascists in order to prevent them from coming to power. Our party proved, to our great regret, to be incapable of mobilizing any substantial section of the working class for the purpose of organizing their resistance to the advance of Hitlerism. To us this was evidence of a serious, fundamental weakness in our party and its policy, both of which are tested precisely in such moments as the crucial hour in Germany.

It is not that we are discouraged by a defeat, for we know that the proletarian movement will rise again regardless of temporary setbacks. Far from it. We remain today just as confident of our final victory on a world scale as we have always been. But the way to overcome a defeat is to analyze its causes and take the necessary steps to eliminate them or correct them. Far from doing this, our party and movement have been content to remain in a state of self-satisfaction. No attempt has been made to examine into the policy of the past to find out what was wrong. No attempt has been made to correct what we see now quite plainly to have been our radically false policy on "Social Fascism", or the "United Front Only from Below", or our incorrect analysis of Fascism itself. Everything that was done in the past, and the leadership which did it, has been approved without reservations. Consequently, instead of laying the basis for overcoming the defeat and rising again to victory, the basis still remains for the addition of new setbacks for our movement not only in Germany but throughout the rest of the world.

Short Dispatches from Fascist Germany

The Panther Affair. The affair of the British journalist, Panther, accused of espionage (as is well known he had communicated to the British press about a Nazi demonstration in Kelheim reporting military details) and incarcerated in Munich for ten days ended ignominiously for Germany after he was ordered deported. It is not so well known that he got the details regarding the armed strength of the S. A., etc., from a journalist employed by Hugenberg's TELEVISION, a certain Ackermann. The latter has likewise been arrested. Possibly the Hugenberg circles intended to spoil the good relations between England and the Third Reich.

In a telegram immediately after Germany's departure from the League of Nations and disarmament conference, the German munition and heavy industry magnates hastened to express their deepest thanks for the legalization of German rearmament. Krupp von Bohlen assured the Chancellor in a telegram that German industry, without any reservation, will support the nation on "its road of peace and honor" which the Chancellor has shown the German people. Krupp has every reason to send telegram of gratitude to Hitler. Comparison with last year: Comparing the prices of August 1933 with August 1932 we find an increase in sugar of 2.7 percent, vegetable 5 percent, beef products 4.3 percent, butter 6.5 percent, eggs 14 percent, oleomargarine 34.3 percent. In short the effects of "socialism" (aid to the eastern farm barons) are quite apparent.

Unemployment: The number of unemployed on October 1st amounted to 3,850,000, 150,000 less than the previous month. (As is well known at the end of January the figures stood at 6,014,000). The following facts however complete the picture:

1. The income from wage taxation remains below the level of last year according to the latest statistics of the Ministry of Finance wage taxation brought an income of:

In August 1932, with 52,224,000 unemployed, 60.9 million Marks. In August 1933, with 4,124,000 unemployed, 59.6 million Marks. The figures of those at work compare with those of the unemployed, according to state sick insurance, as follows:

August 1932: 5,224,000 unemployed, 12,284,000 employed. August 1933: 4,124,000 unemployed, 13,716,000 employed. Resulting in: 1,100,000 unemployed, 882,000 employed.

Montreal Stalinists Answer Marxist Ideas with Hooliganism

Montreal.—The last few weeks in Montreal have been rich in striking demonstrations of the lengths to which the Stalinists are driven in frantic effort to suppress the ideas of the Left Opposition. The organized rowdy attempt to disrupt our meeting a few weeks ago, the removing of posters advertising our meetings, the picket-lines before our doors, the ejection of our delegates from the Anti-Fascist Conference now shriveled to the dimensions of a Stalinist caucus—all these things points unmistakably to a hooliganism become rampant at the promptings of fear.

The workers provoked to thought as a result of these scandalous methods will realize that the question of working-class democracy cannot be relegated to the sphere of mere etiquette. Political bankruptcy breeds inevitably the methods of hooliganism. Gangsterism has long been the weapon of the reformist fakers, the trade union bureaucrats, against the Left wing. The Stalinists, unable to withstand a Marxist criticism, are introducing the same bag of tricks into the Left wing. Comrades alarmed by this foul stench revolting their nostrils will ponder and search until they unearth the cesspool of political cowardice from which it emerges.

A Stalinist Lecture on Germany

On December 3, S. Sarkin, a local mandarin of the general line lectured at the Jewish Cultural Centre on the tactics of the C. P. in Germany. With the contents of the lecture itself we will not concern ourselves here—a loud-mouthed rushing of the latest wisdom of Platinitsky, shrill with contradictions, based on the stupendous check of the speaker and on his speculation on the ignorance of the audience. A sample or two will suffice—"The tactic of the United Front was abandoned after 1922 (the year of the Fourth Congress!) because the Social Democracy became openly counter-revolutionary" (!!). "The defeat of 1933 was to be traced to the error made in 1920, immediately corrected and never again repeated, in withdrawing from the reformist trade unions." "The 15 years of systematic work within the trade unions climaxed with growth of the R. G. O. (1) to a strength (?) of 310,000 in 1933."

"The presence of three 'Trotskyites' at the lecture was enough to impart to it an atmosphere of tension which was worked up by the speaker to nothing short of a lynch-mood. The evening was prefaced by remarks from Sarkin promising a 'lively evening', 'acknowledging the presence of 'guests' (this at the 'non-factional' Cultural Centre), and the exhortation to the faithful to have 'their blood boil'. Never was there a more despicable example of ignorance

A. F. of L. and Mirror Workers

New York.—The Novelty Mirror Workers Union has again been defeated in its aims to constitute itself as a genuine trade union for the safeguarding of the economic interests of all the workers in the trade. This time the aims of the workers were defeated by the A. F. of L. bureaucrats of the International Pocketbook Workers Union, whose desire for fat per capita fees and whose genuine fear of any sign of militancy from the workers, cannot be questioned.

It will be remembered that the union, shortly after its formation, fell under the blundering leadership of the T. U. U. L. After an unfortunate strike—unfortunate in the sense that it was led by the Stalinists—that dissipated the energies of the workers, and almost robbed them of all confidence in trade unionism, it became comparatively easy to convince a majority of the workers that the loss of the strike was not due to a couple of "skunks" but chiefly due to the syndicalist, ultra-Left policies of the Nessin leadership which laid obstacles in the path of the strike and made a number of workers lose hope too soon, causing them to go back to work before the strike was ended.

Apply for A. F. of L. Charter Consequently, at a membership meeting—of 50 workers (out of an original 300)—sometime later called together, for the purpose of discussing the question of affiliation, a majority of workers voted to apply for a charter from the A. F. of L. The remainder still poisoned by Stalinist influence, walked out of the hall, completely disrupting the meeting, and causing a serious split. Immediately, a committee was elected—of which a member of the

A Trade Union or a Sect? The Stalinists succeeded in nullifying the former decision and pushed through a vote on a much smaller scale—to abandon negotiations with the A. F. of L. and affiliate with the T. U. U. L. It is worth mentioning that despite their activity, the vote was so slim that they had to resort to the method of denying a vote to the chairman—the chairman being a Left Opposition worker.

The workers of the Mirror novelty trade must be made to realize that to continue with their present intentions means the end of their union. Affiliation to the paper trade union center of the T. U. U. L. can help in no way to build a genuine trade union able to extend its influence throughout the trade and become a real weapon to better the conditions of the workers. What is needed is a union, not a propaganda-resolutions-writing club for the Stalin bureaucrats.

'Historical Analogies'

(Trotsky and Dan—Workers Age—December 1, 1933.)

The bureau of historical falsification under the leadership of Lovestone (Gm. 5-8903) has manufactured another "striking document". But we suspect that this time the job has been entrusted to an amateur.

That this is amateur's handiwork is evidenced first by the fact that only three pages (and consecutive pages at that) have been put through the Lovestone hopper for synthetic quotations (patent applied for by Stalin) in order to produce a quotation to match the "fundamental similarity" with two sentences written by Dan. An expert Lovestone "quoter" usually concocts a quotation out of a volume of at least 30 pages. In the second place, of the sentences which had been torn out of context and indirectly manipulated—only one has been directly distorted. Trotsky is quoted as follows: "The ruling apparatus enjoys a great relative independence." Here is what Trotsky really wrote, "Without having that absolute independence, the illusion of which lives in the skulls of many bureaucrats, the ruling apparatus nevertheless enjoys a great relative independence." (Only one direct distortion—that is almost a record.) But while amateurish in execution, this performance attains the lowest levels hitherto achieved by the past masters of slander and distortion.

What comrade Trotsky says in reference to the present plebeian regime in the Soviet Union is juxtaposed with Dan's statement in reference to the dictatorship of the proletariat. Trotsky's analysis of the political character of the Stalinist bureaucracy is passed off as the analysis of the class character of the state in the Soviet Union.

But perhaps we imply too much by inferring that the Lovestones themselves know the differences between the bureaucratic apparatus that has usurped the authority of the October Revolution and the worker's state itself. Is it after all, excluded that the Lovestones identify Stalinism with the dictatorship of the proletariat just as Dan identifies the dictatorship—'with its wide flung apparatus'?

Discussion Article

THE PROLETARIAN PARTY

(The writer of this article was for over 10 years a member of the Proletarian Party of America, serving for several years on its National Executive Committee, and for a year and a half, as its National Secretary. He has recently resigned from the Party as a result of the decisions of the convention held in September.)

This article is written with the intention to not only throw light on the recent controversy in the Proletarian Party but also to explain the part played by the organization in the American labor movement and to, as nearly as possible, appraise the Party's usefulness to the workers of the U. S.)

Immediately after the entry of the U. S. into the World War a tremendous amount of controversy naturally arose in the American labor movement as to the attitude toward the war. This controversy was most apparent in the Socialist Party, whose leaders, like the leaders of the European parties of the Second International, had betrayed the organization to the capitalist class. Opposition to the leadership became very strong and resulted in wholesale expulsion of the opposition groups by the militant machine. The expelled groups formed themselves into a Communist Party, a Communist Labor Party, a Proletarian Party, etc.

History of the Party

It can be safely said that the Proletarian Party group (known also as the Proletarian Party and later as the Proletarian Party) had the soundest position in regard to the two Russian revolutions of 1917, in the attitude toward the Imperialist War, and in Marxian theory in general. They were at that time good students of Marxism. Many of the numerous blunders of the other Left wing groups could have been avoided had they accepted the ideas put forth by the Proletarian Party group. But the objective conditions of that time were not conducive to careful study on the part of the majority of the Left wing members. The Bolshevik Revolution had just established the rule of the workers over one-sixth of the earth's surface. This great event had kindled tremendous enthusiasm and a keen desire for action in the breasts of the American workers but there was no corresponding desire for careful and painstaking study of the event. Most of the Left wing leaders declared that the time for study was past and the time for action had come.

As time passed the Communist Party and the Communist Labor Party became the Workers' Party while the Proletarian Party became the Proletarian Party. Later on the Workers' Party received the recognition of the Communist International and thus became the Communist Party of America. But the recognition of the C. P. A. did very little to correct the errors of the C. P. of A. It remained terribly "left sick." Its programs were grossly reformist and opportunist in character; (the LaFollette incident of 1924 is an example). But the Proletarian Party developed in the opposite direction and opposed to the antics of the C. P. of A. a program of "Education, Education and more Education." In its intense desire for correct Marxian understanding the P. P. learned over too far and became almost exclusively an educational organization. Both parties occupied extreme positions. The great need was an organization that would combine in Marxian proportions both education and action. But such an organization did not appear.

Proletarian Party and C. P.

It is difficult to estimate the part played by each of the two parties named. In driving the other to the opposite pole. Doubtless they exercised some influence on each other. But the objective factors were much more favorable to the growth of the Proletarian Party organization than the C. P. of A. The great working class sentiment in favor of the Russian Revolution was taken advantage of to the full by the C. P. of A. and resulted in a good deal of popular activity such as strikes, demonstrations, demands for Soviet recognition, etc.

In the Proletarian Party a firm and determined stand was taken against any sort of immediate or partial demands. Anything that showed signs of rallying any considerable number of workers to its support was frowned upon as opportunism or left sickness. It was a question only of education, first, and all the time, according to the leaders. The Party's programs were cold, dogmatic affairs and the tactics followed were stiff and inflexible. Party leaders prided themselves on this stiffness and explained their "temporary isolation from the masses" as a sure sign of the correctness of their position. "The masses are not yet ready to accept such an advanced position. It will take time to win a considerable number to this view." The Bolshevik Party was very small up to the eve of the revolution and Lenin himself said the revolutionary party might be small but good. Such were the arguments used by the leaders. They did not know, or they forgot, that at the time Lenin wrote this, the Bolshevik party had several thousand members in Petrograd alone and that the Bolshevik Party was relatively small but not insignificant so. At no time in its history did the Proletarian Party reach a membership of 500.

Organizational Weaknesses

But in addition to the programmatic and tactical weaknesses there were weaknesses of a structural and organizational nature that prevented the Party from becoming a true Communist party. These last were inherited from the Socialist Party. The Proletarian Party constitution is a typical Socialist Party document, the terminology being in many places vague and indefinite and leaving room for quite different interpretations. In some places there is a definite duplication of authority provided, and this too in the highest bodies of the Party.

This condition might have been remedied years ago when the principles of Bolshevik organization and democratic centralism, as outlined by Lenin, were still unknown to us here in America. But after that time there was no excuse for a party calling itself revolutionary holding to such a constitution. The recent controversy in the Party was based almost entirely on an attempt to have the constitution changed so as to conform to the principles of democratic centralism.

This attempt was not the result so much of deep thought as of changing conditions, particularly with regard to finances. From the time the National Office of the Party was moved from Detroit to Chicago in 1922, and John Keracher was made National Secretary, it was almost entirely a one man organization with Keracher as the one man. There were very few able men in the Party which explains the outstanding position of Keracher. A good deal of the work of the Party that should have fallen on the shoulders of the National Executive Committee was neglected by that body either on account of business or inability. This work was taken care of by Keracher, at least, after a fashion.

A One-Man Party

There was little attempt in those days to restrict Keracher or to criticize his methods of carrying on the work because such criticism would have required a willingness and ability on the part of the critics to undertake more work himself, as Keracher was always, obviously overworked with work. This willingness and ability did not exist anywhere in the N. E. C. except in a very limited degree. Naturally the Party became a direct reflection of Keracher; a reflection of his weak points as well as of his strong points.

Previous to his revolutionary career Keracher was a small storekeeper in Detroit. He carried into the Party work the same narrow, petty, inefficient methods that he had employed in his own business. His book-keeping and office procedure were something atrocious and as an executive he is on a level with the average small storekeeper. To place a man of this type in the position of chief executive, with almost complete control, was to condemn the organization to sure death.

Not only was Keracher incapable of any important constructive work himself but on those rare occasions when others of some ability tried to cooperate with him he proved quite incapable of working with them harmoniously. He would always oppose them and work for their downfall in the Party. He met honest criticism with trickery and deceit and also with attack on the motives of the critic, all with the object of removing the critic from his position in the Party and, if necessary, from the Party itself. This sort of thing has happened on more than one occasion.

The Peterson-Dixon Group

In 1931 an attempt was made by the Peterson-Dixon group, as members of the Executive Council, to instruct Keracher, as National Secretary, on matters pertaining to the expenditure of press funds. Keracher had no great difficulty in getting this group expelled from the Party chiefly because the group was poorly organized and because Keracher's personal character instead of sticking to the revolutionary principles of the Party, involved the controversy. But in the summer of 1932 another controversy arose in the Party, and as a result of the same conditions that caused the first.

Problems of the Cuban Revolution

CUBA AND MONTEVIDEO

The great importance of the Montevideo Pan-American Conference for the Cuban workers and their American imperialist masters can be seen in the latest developments in the world's former sugar bowl. At Montevideo the Latin American capitalists, supported and inspired by the English and Japanese imperialists, are maneuvering for advantages for themselves and Uncle Sam's rivals at his expense. The U. S. is sitting so tightly on the lid that about all they can do is, to borrow a word from the Blue Eagle general, chisel.

Just the same they have the American moneybags in a delicate situation. If he makes a misstep anywhere in Latin America while this conference is on they will squeeze him for all they can get out of him.

Strike Wave Rising Again

The news coming out of Cuba is fragmentary and unreliable, being either capitalist or Stalinist in origin. But it seems the Cuban workers understand that Uncle Sam's necessity for stepping warily gives them more latitude. The strike wave is rising high again. If Harry Gannes, head of the Anti-Imperialist Delegation to Cuba, is to be believed the workers of 30 sugar mills in Santa Clara province have been involved in strikes recently (Daily Worker, December 9, 1933). The scope of this struggle can be seen from the fact that, according to the Cuban Review of February 1932, there were 53 sugar mills in this province in 1926, nearly thirty percent of all the sugar mills on the island, producing seventeen percent of all the bags of sugar of that year.

Other strikes are taking place; tobacco workers are out in thousands; all the Woolworth Co. stores are closed, and have been bombed. Most important among the strikes is the strike against the Cuban Electric Co. of which Machado is a vice-president, an affiliate of the Electric Bond and Share Company. The Emperor of America, J. P. Morgan, is the big shot in both of these outfits. How big the Electric Bond and Share can be seen from the fact that its subsidiaries in 1930 supplied light, power, gas, water and ice to 1,520,000 Cubans, thirty-eight percent of the population.

Importance of the Strike

The importance of the strike lies not only in the size and importance of the company. The Martin government, government of the petty bourgeoisie, is using the strike and the temporary weakness of the American imperialists' position to consolidate its position and delude the masses of the country. The army high command told the Cuban Department of Interior delegates to the meeting of the electric workers which decided on the strike that it would not interfere with the strike. This is a bid for support by the masses.

At the same time it is part of a more comprehensive scheme. The government has issued an order to the Electric Company to reduce its electric and gas rates by forty-five percent and had forbidden it to reduce salaries or discharge workers in carrying through this necessary and insufficient reduction in the rates. In a previous article we gave the figures for electric rates: 17 cents a kilowatt hour in Havana and 20 cents in the interior; compared to New York which has a high rate of 6 and 5 cents a kilowatt hour. A second order struck at another Morgan outfit, the Cuban Telephone Company, a subsidiary of the International Telephone and Telegraph Company, also controlled by J. P. Morgan.

Strategy of the Martin Government

The attack on the utility rates is a sop thrown to the petty bourgeoisie who have had to bear the traffic; workers' towns in the interior have long without gas and electricity although equipped to use them. The threat to take over the American monopolies if they ceased operations in protest against the rate reductions is a gesture made by the government to the anti-imperialist sentiments of the workers and petty bourgeoisie. The order not to lay off workers or cut wages is part of the bid for support by labor.

Now the Martin government can afford this show of strength. It doesn't cost it anything now. It knows that only the most direct and serious threat to the stakes of Wall Street in Cuba will cause Roosevelt to risk arousing the whole of Latin America and playing into the hands of England, France, Spain and Japan by sending armed forces into Cuba.

At the same time the government is strengthening itself internally.

so that when the conference is over, or maybe before it all goes well, its bargaining hand for recognition by Washington will be a whole lot stronger.

Cuban Workers Need International Support

That is how the government figures the lay of the land. But what about the workers? They are still putting forward only economic demands. We take that as a sign of the absence of an influential revolutionary Communist party. A Marxist vanguard could take great advantage of the situation in the interests of the workers by consciously raising the struggle to the political plane under the slogan of nationalization of industry under workers' control of production. The weakness of the American capitalists' position now is also, in the last analysis, the weakness of the Martin government. The advancing workers' movement could also count on the weakness of the American imperialists' position, its present, necessary reluctance to assist the beleaguered petty bourgeois government.

The momentary weakness of the world's leading imperialist power should be exploited in another way to assist the Cuban revolution. An international protest movement demanding hands off Cuba, entering in Latin America, and on Montevideo would cause Washington great embarrassment and would weaken its position still further. It is in this connection and at this moment that we feel most acutely the collapse of the C. I. and the nationalistic organization of the Communist Parties.

It is not too late to build the defense movement. That task stands high on the agenda of international working class problems. The Stalinists have demonstrated their failure to understand the problem and build the movement. The Left Opposition together with all other revolutionary elements must take the initiative and issue the call to the masses of the United States and Latin America, and the entire world to organize the movement of support and defense of the Cuban revolution.

Draft Resolution on the Tasks of the Spartacus Youth Clubs Proposed by National Youth Comm. of the C.L.A.

We print below the draft resolution on the tasks of the Spartacus Youth Clubs adopted by the National Youth Committee of the Communist League of America. With the publication of this draft the columns of the Militant are opened for contributions on this question.

Comrades are invited to send in their contributions. Articles are to not exceed 750 words. The analyses of the causes of the rise and function of the Communist youth movement contained in the theses on the Youth Question of the 2nd National Conference of the Communist League of America (see Militant, August 15th, 1931) holds good in all its essentials today. Particularly is this true of the first three sections.

"1. Capitalism draws the youth of the proletarian families into the productive process. The cheapness of their labor power, their physical and intellectual immaturity, their lack of trade union organization makes them particularly profitable objects for exploitation. These same characteristics and the needs growing out of them—need for physical and intellectual development, for play, 'social life'—were left almost wholly unsatisfied. From a position of helpers and apprentices the youth were absorbed ever more into the general industries and process of capitalism.

"2. The Y. C. L. was founded in November 1919 out of a need for an organization which would attract the working youth towards Communism, win organize and train it for the Communist parties. 'The need for a special organization is called forth by the psychological peculiarities of youth—its immaturity and impulsiveness, its impulsiveness, its special activities—sports, 'social' affairs—and its physical and intellectual requirements. These can be satisfied only by particular methods, activities and organization.

"The Y. C. L.s are broad educational organizers of youth. Communist training and education requires the intimate linking up of the theoretical with the practical, the study-group with the field of the class struggle. The Y. C. L. is in the forefront of the struggles of the working youth; leads and organizes it for immediate economic and cultural needs and demands; struggles inside and outside the armed forces against capitalist militarism; develops itself in the struggle against the bourgeois and petty bourgeois (especially reformist) organizations and influences, as the cultural center and political leader of the youth.

League Subordinate to Party

"The League which aspires to be the leader of a section of the working class, the youth, is politically subordinate to the Communist Party, the vanguard of the proletariat as a whole. The strategy and tactics of the party are the strategy and tactics of the League. This political subordination is accompanied by the organizational autonomy of the League, i. e., its right to elect its own committees and officers, and regulate the League's inner policies and life. Political subordination is maintained by a capable party cadre inside the League, which directs and leads it, exchange of representatives on committees, and a sound Marxian policy in the class struggle which the Leaguers will readily follow. A thorough discussion of the party question affecting the League should take place during the latter's pre-convention discussion.

"The restatement of these elementary and fundamental principles of the Communist youth, laid down by the first three congresses of the Y. C. L. is made imperative by their revision in theory and practice, by the present leaders of the Communist Y. C. L.

"3. Limited experience with Communist youth work requires that youth tactics, demands, slogans and special organizational forms should be put forward not as dogmas or finished products which have universal validity, but rather with a view of testing them in practice, examining the results, and thereby laying the ground for more effective tactics, slogans, etc. The Comintern under Zinoviev and later Bucharin and Stalin converted the Y. C. L.s into factional pawns. Youth policies were completely subordinated to the factional requirements of the moment."

"2. The election of a national youth committee and the establishment of 'Young Spartacus' were two decisive steps which facilitated first, the organization of the youth in the Left Opposition, and second, the establishment of a number of youth clubs. A large percentage of the members of these clubs are for the first time in a working class organization.

A Uniform Constitution

"3. The action of the National Youth Committee in suggesting to the Spartacus Youth Clubs a uniform constitution which provided for the political subordination of the Clubs to the Left Opposition while organizationally autonomous and making the National Youth Committee the provisional national committee of the Spartacus Youth Clubs was a further step forward in our youth work.

"4. Our efforts have been progressively in the direction of a national Spartacus Youth League which would function as the Communist youth League in the United States. This League will undertake the tasks and assume the form outlined in the first three sections of our 2nd National Conference Youth theses (quoted above).

"5. This does not exclude the possibility of forming or cooperating with youth groups which are not Spartacus Youth Clubs, but steps in this direction, in certain localities where a S. Y. C. cannot immediately be formed. Under these exceptional circumstances the groups should bear other names than 'Spartacus Youth' and have the character of discussion groups or study classes. Our comrades form fractions within them and attempt to convert them into sections of our national organization. They should be considered as temporary organizations.

Position Towards Existing Youth Organizations

"6. Our attitude toward the Young Communist League is that it is a Stalinist organization incapable of effectively educating the youth to Communism or leading them in struggle. We continue our work within the Y. C. L. in order to win its members to our ranks. In all fields of activity our organized will appear as a rival of the Stalinist Y. C. L. while at the same time proposing to it and participating with it in united fronts.

"7. The ferment in the American Y. P. S. L. requires that we pay attention to winning the young Socialists to Communism and the Spartacus Youth groups. We should endeavor to build a Communist fraction within the Yipsels through which we can carry on our propaganda work in that organization. Around this fraction we should build a broader Left wing on the basis of concrete class struggle issues confronting the young Socialists. On definite class struggle issues we will attempt to form united fronts with the Y. P. S. L.

"8. It is essential that in the educational and propaganda of the Spartacus Youth Clubs and Young Spartacus, American revolutionary traditions, bourgeois and working class, play a predominant role. The revolutionary lessons of the American Revolution of 1776, the Civil War, the early American labor movement, biographical sketches of outstanding revolutionary leaders, and so on, should be stressed as an essential part of the education of the class conscious youth. For this purpose, popular pamphlets should be issued by Pioneer Publishers under the imprint of the Provisional National Committee of the Spartacus Youth Clubs (or National Committee of the Spartacus Youth League of America).

"9. A pamphlet under similar imprint should be issued as soon as feasible on 'Who Are the Spartacus Youth?'; this to be the first of a series of uniform pamphlets on the problems of the American young workers—covering youth and industry, youth and the school, unemployment and the youth and so on. Another series of uniform pamphlets on the biographies of outstanding international revolutionary leaders should also be begun under youth auspices.

"10. The Spartacus Youth Clubs (and League) should be extremely careful to avoid the mistake of the Y. C. L. in becoming a 'youth party', that is, assume the same organizational forms, tasks, activities and methods of work as the adult Communist organization. This is inevitable in the first stage of the organization when the initial cadres are being assembled. The Spartacus Youth Clubs should attract into their ranks youth coming to Communism rather than full fledged Communists whose place is in the adult organization. The youth organization should contain youth whose average age is 17. Older comrades should be drawn into the adult organization and gradually drop their membership in the youth groups. When the Spartacus Youth League is organized the age limits should be 15 to 23. Comrades over the age of 21 who have been in the Spartacus Youth groups for more than six months should join the adult organization.

"11. To avoid becoming a 'youth party' two dangers must be avoided: First, the danger of separating the economic work of the youth from the adult organization. Wherever possible the industrial fractions of the youth should work together with those of the adult organization. In this field especially, the youth groups are politically subordinate to, and should work closely with the adult organizations. Secondly, the danger of narrowing down the Spartacus Youth Clubs to advanced or conscious Communists by the formation of permanent periphery organizations. The youth, theses of the 2nd National Conference correctly stated that one of the reasons for the conversion of the American Y. C. L. into a 'youth party' was precisely its policy of forming youth sections of every auxiliary of the Communist party, youth clubs and groups of a permanent nature which duplicated the essential educational, cultural, and sometimes propaganda work of the Y. C. L. The formation of sports teams, dramatic groups and the conducting of social activities should be an important part of the work of the Spartacus Youth Clubs which will make them the cultural centers of the youth.

"12. Our aim should be to convert 'Young Spartacus' into a live and aggressive Communist propaganda and agitation paper which will attract the youth to Communism and the Spartacus Youth groups. We should strive to make it an eight page semi-monthly tabloid size paper which can actually reflect the problems and needs of the young workers, educate them in Marxism, and play an active role in the class struggle.

"13. We propose that the coming national conference of the Communist League (Opposition) empower the national youth committee, at an early date following the conference, call a national convention of the Spartacus Youth Clubs and all other youth groups which are sympathetic to Communism (as embodied in the program of the L. O.) and agree with the essence of our youth platform, to organize a

With Whom and How Shall We Build the New Communist Party

As far as the Left Opposition is concerned the necessity for a new Communist party has been accepted and has passed the stage of discussion. Though the idea of a new party came as a surprise to many members of the L. O., its advisability and necessity became so clear as the discussion developed that practically not a single voice was raised in opposition.

But, having accepted the idea of the necessity of a new party, we are immediately faced with the question: with whom and how to build the party. This question of course was partly involved in the discussion on the necessity of a new party but only incidentally. At present some more or less clear and definite answer must be given. Otherwise there is danger of our wasting valuable effort and energy without achieving any noticeable results.

If we answer the first part of the question—namely, with whom—the answer to the second part—how—will readily follow. The temptation is to take the easiest road. We want to organize a new party. There are several groups with strong leanings towards Communist principles. Why not enter into a discussion with some of them, win over as many of them as possible to our viewpoint and form the new party? Such a solution has a certain plausibility and, moreover, the path suggested by it presents no serious difficulties.

But to depend upon discussion and winning over of those who claim to be Communists or those who are traveling in that direction for the formation of a new party is to invite sad disappointments.

In the first place, the membership of the various Communist or near-Communist groups in this country is insignificant. So that, even if we should succeed in convincing a good proportion of that membership of the correctness of our ideas, we would not be much better off than we are at present. In the second place, the existing Communist and near-Communist groups have definite viewpoints of their own, viewpoints which they have clung to for quite a long time. It is folly to expect that because we change our position from that of considering ourselves a fraction of the official Communist party to that of a Communist group anxious to build a new party, we should thereby almost immediately succeed in winning these groups over to our point of view. Not so easy as that.

The only possible method of organizing a new party in the near future on the basis of the existing Communist and near-Communist groups is to permit all groups joining in the formation of a new party to lead a more or less independent life in the new party. This of course is out of the question. Whatever it might be it would not be a Communist party. It may be that some kind of a federation of Communist groups would be advisable as a step towards the formation of a new Communist party. This is exceedingly doubtful but not by any means ruled out altogether. At any rate, it would not be a party.

Does it follow then that we should cease discussing questions of principles and tactics with other groups for the purpose of ironing out differences and winning these groups or some of their members to our viewpoint? Decidedly not! We must merely recognize the limitations involved in such a method and recognizing these limitations emphasize another method which is more difficult but will in the long run yield far greater results.

The turn to a new party means a turn to mass work for the immediate purpose of gathering revolutionary workers for the building of a new party. Needless to say recruiting workers for the building of a new party cannot be successfully accomplished merely by explaining to them the correctness of the theory of permanent revolution in contradistinction to socialism in one country. Winning over workers to our side means participation in the workers' struggles. It means not only struggle but struggle on a correct basis with correct slogans. It means the gaining of the confidence of the workers in our ability to lead.

The superiority and correctness of our theories can be convincing to the workers through our successful activities in mass work. By this time this proposition should require no argument. A logical presentation of the incorrectness of the theory of socialism in one country, if not accompanied with practical revolutionary work in the trade unions, amongst the unemployed or amongst the unemployed will be met by a mere shrug of the shoulders. Effective work amongst the employed and unemployed workers will make them very sympathetic to the idea of building a new party.

To use comrade Trotsky's phrase of the two levers, one can say that there are two levers which we must use in preparing the ground-work for the new party. One is the short lever of discussion with those who have already accepted most of the fundamental principles of Communism and with those who are travelling away from the social-democracy towards Communism. The other is the long and more important lever of organizing employed and unemployed workers, participating and leading in their struggles and by such activities winning over new forces with which to build the new party.

A turn to real mass work will be a very valuable training for our members. It will mean that they will no longer confine themselves to the study and discussion of what might be termed purely Communist and international questions. Our members confronted with the task of talking to workers will learn a new language and will concern themselves, in addition to questions affecting the everyday life of the worker. Our members will learn the intimate connection between international and highly theoretical questions on the one hand and the more immediate problems of the working class.

The Leipzig Prisoners and the Boycott of Germany

AS the monstrous travesty of a trial at Leipzig approaches its denouement the workers of the world are called to solidarize with the Communist prisoners in the Fascist dock on an international day of protest December 19. We are for this action with all our hearts and bespeak for it the firm and unanimous support of the workers. Regardless of all differences of opinion or affiliation which may divide them, the workers of the entire world ought to stand united in a common bond of solidarity with the Leipzig prisoners and strive by all means in their power to save them from the executioner's knife that is poised over their heads.

The heroic prisoners at Leipzig, facing their Fascist accusers undaunted and proclaiming their Communist faith before the whole world, are the brightest symbols and most inspiring representatives of the liberation struggle of the proletariat. The international demonstration in their behalf on December 19 is a fitting occasion for the workers to roar a might protest against their assassination. We sincerely trust that no considerations of any kind whatever will prevent a united action of the international proletariat on that day.

But warmly as we support the protest demonstration we have to recognize that protest alone, no matter how loudly it may resound throughout the world, is not sufficient in this case. The wild beasts of Fascist barbarism care nothing for public opinion and will not be restrained by it. What is needed is a demonstration of power by the international working class. What is needed is an action that will strike directly at the Fascist regime and compel the brown shirt murderers to pause in their bloody course. Such an action, entirely feasible and possible and flowing with irrefutable logic out of the entire situation, is the boycott of transport and communication to and from Germany for a definite, limited time.

In the proposal for this boycott, which has been made by the International Left Opposition, there is nothing adventurous or unrealistic. Neither is it put forward with an exaggerated estimation of the results it can yield. The boycott is possible; all that is needed is an agreement of the various workers' organizations which will liberate the workers' will to act unitedly in the anti-Fascist struggle. The boycott will not overthrow Fascism—for that a re-vivification of the labor movement in Germany is necessary. But the boycott can deal a heavy blow to the Fascist regime. It can terrify the inhuman monsters with its menacing implications, and wrest concessions from them. It can save the lives of the intended victims of the Reichstag fire frame-up. And it can be an electric message to the tortured proletariat of Germany that it has friends in the world ready to help them to their feet again. The boycott can be a mighty force for the revival of the German labor movement in a struggle for the overthrow of Fascism on the road to Soviet Germany.

For the defense of the Leipzig prisoners and the beginning of a real international struggle against Fascism the transport boycott of Hitler's Germany stands on the order of the day. Let us press forward along this line. Let us make December 19th a day of united protest leading directly to a united front of action!

Cuba and the Comintern

WHAT is the opinion of the Communist International on the tasks of the Cuban revolution? What advice does it offer the Cuban workers for the solution of their complex and difficult problems? And, still more important, what is it doing in a concrete and practical way to help throw off the yoke of American imperialism? These are questions of the greatest importance at the present moment, and the revolutionary workers of the United States, as of Cuba and the whole of Latin America, are entitled to a straightforward answer.

It is no small matter. Cuba may very well turn out to be the Achilles heel of the Wall Street monster. The contradictions between its domination by U. S. imperialism and the life interests of the masses are at the explosive point there. For many weeks now the struggle has been blazing into a conflagration which the whole world could see. The workers on their own initiative have been taking possession of American properties and have even, in some instances, proceeded to the formation of local Soviets. The island is small, but the uprising of its people has an enormous strategic importance and moral power. The Wall Street handits justly regard it with apprehension as the peoples of Latin America and the conscious workers in the U. S. look to it with sympathy and hope. The U. S. handits stand ready to crush the revolt with the brutal force of armed intervention. The workers and the peoples ought to be shown the way to unify all their efforts with those of the Cuban workers for the frustration of these designs.

This is a problem on which the "General Staff of the World Revolution" ought to speak out clearly. The Comintern was organized for just such purposes, and that is the way it acted in Lenin's time. In such a case—under Lenin—it would have put the conclusions of international experience at the disposal of the oppressed and exploited in order to steer the struggle onto the right path. It would have brought the weight of its international authority to bear to unify the struggle and impel it forward. Remember the bold manifestoes of Lenin's Comintern on Ireland and India, the appeals to the Hungarian Soviet, to the German workers, etc. Or, closer home, recall Lenin's famous "Letter to the American Workers" and a dozen other letters and resolutions, openly and publicly advising how to organize the fight against American imperialism. In the present instance, filled with such great potentialities, the Comintern of Stalin remains as silent as the grave. And as for Stalin himself, the "best, disciple of Lenin," his mouth, as the saying goes, might be filled with water—he cannot utter a word of advice, encouragement or hope on the grandiose events in Cuba.

Is this "non-intervention" in the Cuban revolution a deliberate policy? Was an express promise to keep "Hands off Cuba" a part of the Washington agreement for Recognition? If not, please explain the precise meaning of the following clauses in Litvinov's letter: "4. Not to permit the formation or residence on its territory of any organization or group—and to prevent the activity on its territory of any organization or group, or of representatives or officials of any organization or group, which has as an aim the overthrow of, or bringing about by force of a change in, the political or social order of the whole or any part of the United States, its territories or possessions."

This treacherous pledge, which brings the blush of shame to every revolutionist, does not refer to some "territory" on the moon. It refers, directly and concretely, and at the present moment, to Cuba.

In our opinion, and we say it with blunt and brutal frankness, it was explicitly so discussed and understood in the negotiations. If our opinion is wrong, we stand ready to be corrected. The Stalin party has a way to do it. However, for this, bluster and fulmination, lies and boasts will not avail. Only a few simple actions are needed.

Let the Daily Worker print a manifesto of the Comintern on Cuba!

Signs of the Coming Storm

AMONG other characteristics the lynchings wave demonstrated a feature which can be compared only with tropical storms. Like its meteorological counterpart, the lynching wave appeared suddenly and raged with great violence. Like many a hurricane it may reverse its course and sweep back again. That remains to be seen.

Not alone the lynching wave comes up suddenly, and runs its course with unrestrained violence. These features are characteristic now of almost every large scale social event. The strike wave of last summer was marked, among other things, by the speed with which it developed and the violence which accompanied it. In nearly every large strike there was not only the usual capitalist routine of police brutality, but bloodshed: Paterson, Ambridge, the Pennsylvania captive mine strike, etc.

The farm riots of the middle West last spring against foreclosures also shot across the social-political sky like a meteor. They too were marked by violence. At Lemars, Iowa, the farmers dragged a judge from his court by a rope around his neck. The bitterness of the Iowa farmers and the violent enmity engendered by it is explicable when one understands that 60 percent of the mortgaged farms in the United States are to be found in Iowa.

As the capitalist system disintegrates further the social weather is going to get stormier and stormier. The great reservoir of violence which these events indicate is going to burst. Social upheavals, the like of which the world has never seen, are in store and will very likely develop with frightful speed. The events we have described are lightning flashes and thunderclaps that herald the coming storm.

The reservoir can burst in one of two directions: in the workers' interests or against them. Which direction the flood takes will depend on the preparedness of the classes—on whether the vanguard workers have constructed a revolutionary Communist party and established its influence. Without it the flood can engulf them. We have no time to lose. All revolutionary elements should devote themselves to the first task at hand: the building of a new and genuine Communist party in the United States.

The Scottsboro Struggle

THE efficient judge who presided over the third trial of Patterson and the second trial of Norris has sentenced both boys to burn in the chair. The trials of the others were postponed until next spring. The appeal of the defense to the Supreme Court of Alabama acts as an automatic stay of execution.

For nigh on three years the fight has been waged to save the Scottsboro boys from death and set them free. It has been a historic fight, involving hundreds of thousands of workers all over the world. At Chemnitz, Germany, in 1932 workers in a Scottsboro protest demonstration were shot down by police under a social democratic regime.

The execution of the boys was prevented so far only by this fight. That is true. But we are no nearer getting them off altogether. One has been tried three times and one twice; the others once, almost three years ago. Has there ever been a greater travesty on justice? It should be plain to every one that it is not at all a question of determining guilt or innocence. The boys are innocent of the crime charged against them; that is clear beyond a doubt.

The capitalists long ago demonstrated their intention of burning them in the electric chair. If they are still in jail it is our fault. We have not been able to build a mass movement strong enough to force their release. The movement has to be broadened. The trouble with it now is that it is composed almost entirely of Stalinist organizations. And that, today, is far from enough.

The problem is how to get the workers in the A. F. of L., independent unions, under the influence of the Socialist Party and the I. W. W., and all the defense organizations and liberals to get together behind the fight.

The first step is the convocation of genuine united front conferences with guarantees of democratic representation and conduct.

Either way there is no time to lose. The legal lull in the case is not a time to relax. It is an opportunity to work, to build a powerful protest movement.

Why?

FOREIGN COMMISSAR Maxim Litvinov was sneaked unobtrusively into the Soviet Union on December 9 when he arrived home after having scored the most signal "diplomatic victory" of his career in the agreement he entered into with Roosevelt at Washington last month.

Reported the New York Times: "There was no formal reception or demonstration. . . . The public was not informed in the newspapers that he would return today."

Why? Did the Stalinists perhaps shrewdly calculate that prior announcement of Litvinov's arrival might have led, not to a demonstration of welcome by the Soviet workers, but to a popular display of anger and disgust at the Stalin-Litvinov sale of the Third International to American imperialism?

Litvinov had to sink home, but Winston G. Bullitt, the American ambassador, who arrived a day after him, was officially greeted at the frontier and given a reception in Moscow. "It was the first time in the history of the Soviet government," the New York Times reported, "that any foreign ambassador had been met at the frontier or shown any attention whatsoever before arriving in Moscow."

Why?

Soviet Policy and Turkish Terror

Stalinist Diplomats Praise Oppressor of Turkish Workers as 'Best Friend'

The Daily Worker of November 30 reported that a delegation of Turkish workers in the United States would be visiting the local Turkish consul to protest against "the murderous persecution of revolutionary Turkish workers by the Kemalist government. The delegation will demand," it was announced, "the release of 200 Turkish Communists facing death in the Turkish dungeons and the restoration of the citizenship of 35 Communist leaders deported in 1926."

The C. P. organ concluded that the delegation called upon the workers of the United States "to actively support the struggle for the release of these prisoners, for the smashing of the brutal anti-working class terror of the Kemalist government, which is supported by the same Wall Street imperialists who today, under the 'New Deal,' are ruthlessly increasing their robbery and murder of the white and Negro masses of this country."

It goes without saying that every last member of the Left Opposition both here and in other countries, endorses this protest against the vicious Kemalist terror in Turkey, the Turkey that was "liberated" from imperialist domination in the early post-war period with the aid of Soviet arms. But we have a mind to recall to the memories of the Stalinist editors of the Daily Worker, and the readers of that paper, certain historical facts which indicate that the Turkish government enjoys not merely Wall Street support but also the support of the present Stalinist faction which dictates the policies of the Soviet government.

Karakhan and Pasha

It is recorded that at the end of 1929 Lev Karakhan, diplomatic representative of the Soviet government, made an official trip to Kemalist Turkey, where, even at that time, there was proceeding a "murderous persecution of revolutionary Turkish workers." Karakhan took occasion to inform inquiring journalists that the Turkish minister of foreign affairs, Tewfik Rüşdi Bey, has his "best friend" and "dearest respect" towards the president of the council, Ismet Pasha.

Conventional language of diplomacy? This attempted excuse is too feeble. For must not Soviet diplomacy be consistently distinguished from the diplomacy of other states, its proletarian character made always clear? And should it not be the duty of Soviet diplomats to avoid sowing illusions? Or did Karakhan really regard Bey as his "best friend"? If so he was unfaithful to represent the Soviet power. If not, why create an illusion and deceive the masses as to the true character of the Turkish foreign minister and his government?

But Karakhan had more to say. On his arrival at Ankara he said: "This city reflects the calm and firm security with which the new Turkey is built, which supports itself upon its own forces and PUTS ITS HOPES IN THE CREATIVE FORCE OF ITS PEOPLE AND THEM ALONE. What I have seen, especially in this regard, is not strange to me. THEY ARE THE SAME IDEAS AND THE SAME STATE OF MIND THAT PREVAILS IN OUR COUNTRY." We are building up our life, our material and intellectual culture, by basing ourselves on the creative power of the peoples of our Union."

The government, and the economic and social systems of Turkey have not changed since these words were spoken by Karakhan. It is therefore pertinent to inquire how the American Stalinists today can associate themselves with a protest action against a government which has the "same ideas" as the Soviet government?

The "New Turkey"

But let us pass on. The well-known Soviet writer, L. V. Nikulin, returned to Moscow in July of this year from an extended trip to Turkey—the same Kemalist Turkey about which Karakhan before him had enthused so fervently. His impressions of the country were published in the Soviet press without comment, therefore with approval. Nikulin was as enthusiastic as Karakhan had been. He compared the "old Turkey" with the "new Turkey," stating that "the obvious difference between the new Turkey, the Turkey of People's Palaces, schools, universities, industrial construction, and the Turkey of the lex, the yashmak, mental torpor and Arab criteria had become quite clear to me." From the words of both Nikulin and Karakhan, if they were accepted at their face value, the workers in the Soviet Union and in other countries might be pardoned for drawing the conclusion that there is no need for proletarian revolution in Turkey. Certainly, the American workers, deceived and confused by the Stalinist scribbles on the Daily Worker, may be excused if they exhibit surprise at the "discovery" that the Kemalist government—which includes in its ranks Karakhan's "best friend", which rules over a country

Adventurism in St. Paul Strike

The Armour officials, seeing that the overwhelming majority of the men were taking no active part in the strike, began to utilize the press to induce them to return to work. This was not without effect. The workers began to return despite the efforts of the pickets to prevent them. By Thursday, November 23rd, the men were streaming back by the hundreds.

Repudiated by the Workers
On the following day the union called a mass meeting of the Swift workers. About 250 were present. The union leaders demanded that these men go on strike. They were answered with boos and jeers. The men present then decided to continue to work.

The press reports that on the same day a group of men who claimed to be members of the Armour strike committee went to a South St. Paul lawyer, repudiated the union, and demanded that the "Communist leaders" Ilurwitz, Karlsen, and Schneiderman be run out of town. The lawyer swore out warrants for their arrest on the grounds that they were "obstructing public highways."

Whether or not this is true is hard to say but the fact remains that the police went to the union hall and arrested the three men. The workers present made no protest. Later, on their promise to leave town immediately, these "leaders" were released. At the Armour & Co. gates the few remaining pickets were dispersed by the cops in short order.

In this strike the official party has once more revealed that it can no longer play a progressive role in the struggle of the workers. In place of a realistic appraisal of the situation which demanded careful preparation and persistent work to create a sentiment amongst the workers for a mass strike, the method of bureaucratic ultimatum was employed. Pulling their hand off of followers out on strike they naturally expected the 3500 men in the industry to follow. "We are the leaders—therefore the workers will follow us!"

Fruit of False Policy
The results of such a policy should be carefully considered by every serious worker. The workers in the South St. Paul packing houses are now more than ever in the grip of the bosses' company union. Instead of engaging in militant struggles they are falling victims to the poison of class collaboration. The criminal adventurism of the party has served only to retard the movement of the workers and to discredit Communism before them.

That the South St. Paul workers will rise again in militant struggle against the bosses is certain. And what is equally certain is that as far as the Stalinist "Independent Revolutionary Unions" are concerned the workers in these packing houses are through for once and for all.

Notes of the Week

THE DOLLAR isn't all that's "baroney" under the NRA. Mr. Al Smith may have a broad wit but he has limited interests. Under his brown derby rests the cares of a member of the possessing class. They have the dollars. And they don't want them transformed into risky sausages.

What do we have? We have unemployment, cold weather, low wages, speed-up—and so far only a lot of nativity promises: about re-employment, jobless relief, a living wage and a 30 hour week. NRA speaks for all these dire needs of the working people but what does it do about them?

Section 7a of the Recovery Act grants the legal right of both individual and collective bargaining. "Individual bargaining"—that means, as so many of us have discovered—the right of the boss to lure and lure at will, to command you to work for a bowl of miserable soup or be thrown out into the street altogether. Collective bargaining—any worker who has successfully participated in the use of this weapon, will tell you—means organized union struggle; workers joining up in big bodies to put across their needs.

In his effort to wrest improvements from the boss, the laboring man has no strength other than the strength of his fellow men. The boss has the banker, the police, the gunman and the dollar on his side. And the employing class has made ample use of the provision for individual bargaining in NRA, not to speak of the many ways they have found for getting around any of the still too few and weak attempts that have been made by workers at "collective bargaining."

What the worker is beginning to feel more and more is the need for more and bigger "collectives" for genuine broad collective effort—so that the "bargaining" won't be all on the bosses' side. It is interesting to note that the first organized expression for this need comes from the employees in an industry that was among the first to be blessed with a NRA code—the textile industry.

THE UNITED TEXTILE WORKERS union, by decision of its executive council—the country's press informed us on Tuesday last—has decided to call upon the American Federation of Labor to prepare for a General Strike to bring about the 30-hour week and other union demands. The General Strike—that is the most effective weapon for "collective bargaining" there is. The fact that the reactionary labor skate McMahon has appeared as the chief spokesman for the U. T. W. in this move, is doubly significant.

When a McMahon speaks for General Strike—that is a sign that the textile slaves under him are pushing hammer and tongs for it. When a McMahon begins to give lip service to labor action—then that means that the McMahonocracy is holding in store for the toiling masses bearing down upon the advocates of class peace, a betrayal far greater than any of those in the past.

Watching his fingers closely, the workers who have determined to stand up in struggle against capitalist misery will use every measure to make McMahon and his ilk live up to their words. A sweeping country-wide collective strike is the best and surest way for labor to advance its interests at this stage. In preparation for it, practical and strategic problems loom up big: how to get together employed and unemployed, skilled workers and the unskilled, those already organized and those still unorganized. Men on the job will be discussing these problems in increasing numbers and with growing interest in the coming days. We will contribute our opinions in the general discussion.

GENERAL DEFENSE AFFAIR
New York.—Important additional musical talent has been enlisted for the General Defense Committee's annual Christmas Fund entertainment, concert, and dance. Three well-known concert soloists will sing—Aida Campenone, soprano; Vincent Tortora, baritone; and Vincent J. Nola, tenor. Accompaniments will be played by Paul Creston, pianist of note.

Class-war and classical songs are on the program, which is to be staged Friday, December 15, in Irving Plaza Hall, 15th Street and Irving Place. Proceeds will enable

Postscript to the 'Portrait of National Socialism'

The first anniversary of the Nazi dictatorship is approaching. All the tendencies of the regime have been taking on a distinct and precise character. The "socialist" revolution which appeared to the petty bourgeois masses as the necessary complement to the national revolution, has been officially liquidated and denounced. The fraternization of the classes reached its peak when the possessors waived their right to hors d'oeuvre and desserts on a day especially proclaimed by the government in favor of the dispossessed. The struggle against unemployment has culminated in dividing the existing half-starvation rations in two. There remains only the equalization of the statistics. Planned anarchy proves to be nothing more than just another stage of economic decadence.

The more impotent the police regime of the Nazis is in the sphere of economy, the more it is forced to place the weight of its effort upon the field of foreign policy. That corresponds completely to the internal dynamics of the so thoroughly aggressive German capitalism. The startling sudden turn of the Nazi leadership towards peace-loving declarations can astonish only those who are completely limited in their outlook. What other method than this has Hitler, at his disposal to throw off the responsibility for domestic misery on the shoulders of the external enemy and to pile up the explosives of nationalism under the pressure of the dictatorship? This part of the program which was outlined even before the Nazis assumption to power is being fulfilled today with iron determination before the eyes of the whole world. The date of the new European catastrophe is determined by the time necessary for the rearmament of Germany. It is not a matter of months, but neither is it a matter of decades. A few years suffice to stagger anew into a war, if the internal forces of Germany do not themselves stop Hitler in time.

Wall Street Rules at Montevideo Confab

Tariff Plan of U.S. Imperialism Designed as Weapon Against European Competitor Nations

Although the Pan-American Conference is not expected to adjourn before December 24th, it can be clearly seen already that American imperialism dominates the conference; and nothing will be approved that does not serve the interests of Wall Street. Criticism of American imperialism did break through the barriers, but the representatives and puppets of Washington prevented this criticism from jeopardizing the position of the Yankees in Latin America. Giraudy, head of the Cuban delegation, launched an attack against American intervention in Cuba. He correctly pointed out that intervention has taken place even though its form has become more subtle under the Roosevelt administration. Argentina's foreign minister, as chairman, defended the United States and prevented the criticism from developing. He prevented a Peruvian delegate from launching an attack on American imperialism, and guided further criticism from other delegates, who had taken courage, into safe channels.

Secrecy at Conference

Secrecy prevails at Montevideo as it does at all capitalist conferences. Some of the lesser puppets, who were not obtaining as much attention from the U. S. delegation as the delegation of more favored countries, because they had less that the exploiters of the north wanted, put up a protest against the secrecy, but to no avail.

Mexico led in the attack on the conference. This is not surprising. American relations and domination there stand at a more favorable position than in the past, and the Washington delegation desired to devote their time to more troublesome spot in Latin America. The conference itself is little more than a rubber stamp. The real work is conducted by means of audiences with the Secretary of State of the Colonies of the North. The steering committee, which is composed of those who enjoy this privilege, is the real conference.

In considering an action of the Pan-American Conference one must always keep in mind its structure. It was constructed by American imperialism for its own use against the other imperialist powers and against the weak capitalist countries and colonies of Latin America. One of the many jokers in the statistics of the Union, which assures American domination, provides that the United States Secretary of State shall always be the president of the Union.

U. S. Hits at Rivals

Many of the concessions and agreements for America's interest obtained at Montevideo will not be known. But the main proposal presented by Hull, horse traded by the Argentine delegates for the "Anti-War Pact", and since rubber stamped by the conference, is the Tariff Plan. The plan proposes reciprocal trade and tariff reduction in order to lower the present trade barriers. The proposal called for no treaties, conventions or legal commitments by the conference. It left this open for a free scramble. Such "Custom Unions" obtained by the United States will be another blow by America against Europe. The United States-Colombian pact has already been signed as a straight reciprocal agreement. Negotiations with Argentina and Brazil, for similar bilateral pacts, are already under way.

The Hull Plan also provides for safeguarding the internal struggle of the American imperialists through the NRA and similar projects. "The plan provides that the tariff reductions must not interfere with 'the operation of temporary emergency and other extraordinary measures compromising domestic recovery programs.' This plan for tariff reduction has stirred up discussion in the States. Some say it is a complete change in policy on tariffs while Moley, who just recently resigned as Assistant Secretary of State, says the Hull proposal contradicts the NRA. If the NRA is for the construction of a self-sufficient economy, of organized capitalism, or of 'intra-nationalism' minus its internal or foreign part, it is doomed to failure. But the real purpose of the NRA is something else; and so long as the capitalists supplement it with new measures at each critical turn it will more than justify itself as a breathing spell. The Hull proposal does not contradict the needs of the NRA at a certain stage. Neither does it run counter to the interest of American imperialism in general. It is admirably adapted for these capitalist needs.

Behind the Tariff Plan

The attempt to reorganize production on a higher level under the NRA at reduced cost and, at the same time to reorganize labor

Celebrate New Years at Gala Masquerade Ball

Keep New Year's Eve open for the gala affair of the season. The New York branch of the Communist League is undertaking to make this New Year's a day to be remembered for every proletarian within its reach. To be on hand at this event will be more than the chiming in of the new year and bidding the old one adieu. We are taking a lot of time and more trouble to give all our friends and sympathizers the times of their lives—and in a revolutionary way.

Firstly, there will be a red hot jazz band present to keep you moving to syncopated rhythm till the early hours of the morning. We are making arrangements so that you may dance to your hearts content and more if your feet will carry you.

And our new years affair will be a splendid one. Costumes of all kinds and varieties will be displayed and you are urged to come in other than your usual garb. A popularity prize—democratically selected—will be awarded to the best costume.

Don't forget New Year's, December 31, at Germania Hall, 16th St. and 3rd Ave. The admission is 50 cents. Be on hand with your friends.

Gangsterism Again!

The Stalinists are endeavoring to defeat the political work of the Communist League in Brownsville by methods of terror. Following the Hoffman Mansion meeting of Dec. 14th, they have systematically attacked our comrades. On Friday evening, Dec. 15th a group of six assaulted four members and sympathizers of the Communist League in front of the Brownsville Labor Lyceum after a Socialist meeting. A much larger group of Stalinists attacked our comrades who were distributing leaflets on Sutter Avenue for this Wednesday's Brownsville Labor Lyceum meeting.

Authentic reports inform us that a number of our comrades have been marked for physical assault. Individuals have been assigned to "lay" for Al Dasch, recently expelled member of the Brownsville section committee of the Communist party.

The responsibility for such actions rests on the shoulders of the leaders of the Communist party. They will be held responsible before the Communist workers and the working class as a whole for the consequences of this reactionary hoodlum campaign. We will take all the necessary steps for the defense of our comrades, organization and meetings. We call upon all workers and workers' organizations to join us in our struggle against these reactionary Fascist methods.

Informed by the fact that Al Dasch, former member of the Brownsville Section Committee of the Communist party, was to speak on the Comintern and the Soviet recognition from the platform of the Communist League, the Stalinists mobilized over fifty members to disrupt the meeting held at Hoffman Mansion, Thursday evening, December 14th. The meeting ended in a riot leading to the intervention of the police, called by the hall owner, who cleared the hall by swinging their clubs at everybody.

As the hall was filling with workers, there was a sudden mob rush of about 50 Communist party and Y. C. L. members to crash through the door. They demanded free admittance. After some commotion and exchange of blows, the staircase was cleared of Stalinists and the door leading to the street closed. The Stalinist hoodlums proceeded to break the glass of the door and used battering rams to force the door open.

When they could not make much progress, a representative of the mob was sent up to arrive at an agreement with us. It was proposed to them that twenty of their comrades would be permitted to enter free of charge on the condition that they maintain order. They agreed. Twenty were permitted to enter.

No sooner had the chairman, Joe Carter, opened the meeting than the Stalinists began a systematic disruption. A continual heckling ensued. One after another the clique of local Communist party leaders rose and recited his piece. Finally a motion was made and carried overwhelmingly that anyone interrupting the chairman or speaker given the floor would be ejected. Provocative heckling and disruption resulted in a free for all fight, with chairs and fists flying. For a while the cops looked on; then they wielded their clubs against all those present.

A number of serious casualties resulted on both sides. A Stalinist, Kirschner, called a cop to arrest one of the members of the Communist League. Although he went to the police station to press charges of assault, the case of so flimsy that the charges were dismissed.

Insisting on its right to hold a public meeting in Brownsville on the Comintern and Russian recognition, the Communist League has arranged for a meeting on that subject with the same speakers as scheduled for last Thursday's meeting, Max Shachtman and Al Dasch, to be held at the Brownsville Labor Lyceum, 219 Sackman Street, Wednesday evening, December 20th.

Various workers' organizations have been invited to send representatives to this meeting so that in case of a recurrence of the scandalous action of last Thursday's meeting, they will be able to place the responsibility on those to whom it belongs.

Nazis Demand Death Verdict for Torgler

International Solidarity of the Workers Alone Can Save Prisoners from Fascist Vengeance

Criminal Syndicalism Trial Ends in Hung Jury

Trial of Phil Chambers, leader of the cotton pickers' strike in the San Joaquin Valley, on the charge of criminal syndicalism ended with a hung jury. He was defended by the Civil Liberties Union attorney, A. L. Wirin, who in this case was also representing the International Labor Defense.

The case is of vital importance because of the effort of the prosecution to make the criminal syndicalism law cover all threats of violence made during a strike. In the past the California courts have sought to prove that the I. W. O. and Communist defendants were revolutionaries, trying to overthrow the government and transfer industry to the workers. Chambers was not accused of revolutionary radicalism but of leading a strike during which he was alleged to have recommended to the cotton pickers that they resist all arrests, even if they put some people in the hospital by so doing. Chambers claimed he had urged resistance only to illegal arrests.

The historic trial of the Communist leaders at Leipzig has come to an end and the Fascist judges are now in session deliberating on the verdict which is to be rendered any day now. The trial designated to justify the Nazi regime and give a legal cover for bestial terror campaign against the Communists was transformed into colossal exposure of the Fascist monsters before the entire world.

The heroic conduct of the defendants in court, the complete collapse of the case against them and the universal revision against the procedure of the Fascists in the case all combined to deal a powerful blow to the prestige of the Fascist beasts who rule Germany. They failed completely to establish any convincing proofs of the guilt of the accused and were compelled to acknowledge their failure in the case of three of the defendants—Dimitroff, Popoff and Torgler.

Despite that, the Fascist prosecutor demanded the death penalty for Ernst Torgler, leader of the Communist fraction in the Reichstag. The life of Torgler hangs in the balance, and the others also, for the Fascist press is already demanding "new proceedings" against them. The strong hand of international working class solidarity is all that stands between them and the executioner's axe.

All the defendants stood by their convictions, and in closing speeches to the court, affirmed their innocence of the framed-up charge against them. Dimitroff protested against the refusal to allow him an attorney of his own choosing and stated that he had no confidence in the Fascist lawyer, Teichert, who had been assigned to conduct his "defense". Continuing, he declared: "I am defending my political convictions as a revolutionist. That is why my language is sharp. My aim has been to prove that neither myself, my Bulgarian comrades here, nor Torgler, nor the Communist movement has had anything to do with the Reichstag fire."

Torgler said: "My whole life I have fought for the vital interests of the German working class. Neither the German Communist Party, nor any member, thought at that time of any armed uprising, because the necessary prerequisites were lacking. I did not have the slightest thing to do with the fire."

There is no doubt that the international exposure of the trial and the protest against the frame-up has partly upset the Fascist plan to proceed smoothly with the execution of the defendants. But the danger remains that they will go through with it in spite of all. The protest of the international working class must ring out louder than ever in the remaining days. The most effective blow that can be dealt to the Fascist murderers at this time, a blow that would free the prisoners, is a transport boycott.

RAILROAD ACCIDENTS INCREASE

While in 1932 one worker was killed in road service for every 1,907 employed, in 1931 one worker was killed for every 1,929 employed, according to figures released by the Interstate Commerce Commission. In train service, while in 1929 one worker was killed for every 810 employed, in 1932 the rate had gone up to one killed for every 736 employed.

The following letter from a worker written after the Binghamton wreck last month, gives the depleted maintenance forces as one reason for wrecks and accidents.

Library, Pa.: "There has been in the last couple of weeks an increasingly larger number of train wrecks due to negligence on the part of the railroad companies. The safety devices have all been neglected because of the furloughing of 750,000 maintenance men. This is part of the companies' plans of 'economies'. They lay off the men who maintain safety devices and safety signals. Those who are left at work have to do so much that they cannot take care of all the mileage or the trainmen and engineers cannot live up to the safety rules. It is easy then for the company to shift the buck to the worker involved and escape adverse publicity."

"Any railroader will tell that it's hell if you obey the safety rules and get your train late and it's hell if you don't and get in a wreck. The brotherhoods, to one of which I belong, seem powerless to do anything."

New Upheaval Shakes China

The Fukien Rebellion and Its Perspectives

Shanghai.—Fukien has rebelled. Prepared for several months, it came about all of a sudden as a bomb thrown into the Chinese politics. The public was startled by the radical character it assumed, in casting off the Kuo Min Tang mantle, denouncing its rule, turning such a round-about face towards the people, promising to fight for the abolition of unequal treaties and for tariff autonomy, undertaking to give land to the peasants and granting the right to strike to the worker, and freedom of convention, speech, etc., to the people in general. It claims to establish the producers' power, guaranteeing to such people absolute freedom and equality, "excluding those who are treacherous to the nation and who exploit the peasant and the worker" from enjoying such rights. To overthrow the feudal system and to develop national economy are also points mentioned in the declaration of the new government. What has actuated this independent movement, especially at the time of the low ebb of mass movement? What is its general perspective and relation to the Chinese revolution.

In spite of the fact that this government is called by its enemies as a product of the suchui democrats and "the third party", the former 19th route army regarded as the social-democratic fundamental military force, in fact we have no such a social democracy in China in existence, connected even with the people, not to say with the workers. The military and their politicians and literati may have conceived such an idea but it never existed in any tangible form. What is going on in Fukien is only a revolt of combination of ex-military men, the military rulers of that province, the politicians, the radical intellectuals and the right nationalists. There is a contradiction between the radical program and the composition of the government (military in majority). This shows clearly that the government gives chief attention to the military overthrow of Chiang Kai-Shek by means of combination and intrigues rather than to mobilize the masses for the anti-imperialist and anti-Kuo Min Tang struggle. The radical program and the confused ideology are undoubtedly due to the influence of the existence of the "red army."

It seems unlikely that military operations will begin in the near future because both Nanking and Fukien must have time to seek allies, and to get out of the complicated situation of being attacked in the rear. But the alliance between the peasant army and Fukien is an accomplished fact. This has a great significance. The blockade which Chiang Kai-Shek has enforced against the Soviet districts has broken down as the peasant army now can receive supplies from Fukien. Thus, the only success which Nanking has claimed for its anti-red expedition of the last two years has come to nothing. Further, if the "red army" alone could embarrass Chiang Kai-Shek so much that he is compelled to change the period for the liquidation of the "red army" from three months to three years, what if the combined strength of both the red army and Fukien would be presented to him? He must have given up the hope of eliminating the red army altogether. Besides, the Fukien movement, if not quickly suppressed, will set an example to the discontented militarists of other provinces who can also come out to denounce Chiang Kai-Shek's kow-tow before Japanese imperialism or to stigmatize the corruption of Kuo Min Tang rule. So in a certain sense we may say that the Fukien revolt spells the beginning of the end of the Chiang Kai-Shek regime.

There may be several perspectives upon before the Fukien government. If it can attain its main objective of overthrow of Chiang Kai-Shek in a quick manner by military combination, then it will degenerate and become conservative, throwing aside the present revolutionary phrases, otherwise it can be made dependent upon the mass movement and draw advantages from it. For example, the finance of the province will become ever more inadequate to feed the growing needs of the army and the way out must be sought in the seizure of the customs revenue and the realization of the tariff autonomy, in putting a stop to the officials' embezzlement and corruption, in relieving the burden of the petty bourgeoisie by diminishing the taxation on them and by a corresponding increase on the big bourgeoisie. All such needs open

Terzani Frame-Up Smashed

Athos Terzani was acquitted Dec. 13 of killing his anti-Fascist comrade Anthony Fierro, by a jury in Queens County Court which deliberated only thirty-two minutes. It was a victory against heavy odds, since the judge had been openly hostile to the defense.

Prosecutor Harry Huber centered his attack on Samuel Wein, former Khaki Shirts member, who testified that Frank Moller of Philadelphia, a former associate, killed Fierro in the fight at the Fascist Khaki Shirts meeting in Astoria in July. Wein had told the grand jury that the killer was a man in a brown suit, such as Terzani had worn, but said he did this because Commander Art Smith of the Khaki Shirts had threatened his life.

"General" Art Smith testified, charging again that Terzani shot Fierro. He swore he accused Fierro that night before Terzani identified Moller as the slayer. But Patrolman John Nolan, state's witness, testified that Terzani accused Moller five or ten minutes before Smith accused Terzani.

After the verdict had been announced, hand-clapping aroused the judge's anger. Summoning before him the culprit, Fort Vellona, cartoonist for the anti-Fascist daily, Stamp Liber, the judge cut short his apologies with "Don't lie to me. This case has been saturated with lies." The labor jury representing nine labor organizations delayed comment on the trial until a carefully considered statement could be prepared.

United Front at Minneapolis

Labor Organizations in Unemployment Fight

Minneapolis.—On December 10th two thousand workers met in the City Auditorium on call of the Minneapolis Central Council for Unemployed to hear about the need of an all-inclusive unemployed organization in this city. Speaker after speaker piled up arguments for greater unity, more organization, around a common program of demands covering the most elementary needs of the workers today.

A simple formula for a democratic central organization that would tie the unemployed together with the workers organized in the trade unions, labor political, and fraternal organizations was elaborated by V. R. Dunne, speaking for the Central Council. To a central council every trade union, labor political or fraternal organization, and cooperative shall send delegates on a proportional basis. This body in turn shall organize locals for unemployed workers in various districts of this city, which will be represented in the central body on the same basis. Thus every organized worker in the city shall be directly represented in the Central Council, which co-ordinates all separate phrases of struggle and all forces at hand for the most effective struggle against unemployment.

Growth of the Movement

Since the October 29th conference that launched the M. C. C. U. there has been steady progress in growth of this movement; new advocates, new forces, wider scope to its activities. Naturally, there has been much confusion, much talk, and also disruptive activities from the enemies of such a unifying movement, to put up with, but the fundamental correctness of this form of organization for labor's struggle against unemployment is proving itself every day.

The greatest confusion rises from the almost total lack of understanding of what is a United Front, due to the fact that there has never been a correct united front functioning in this city before. Added to this are the innumerable distortions of the united front indulged in by the Stalinists of the official C. P., which had prejudiced, misdirected, and finally liquidated section after section, group after group, of honest working class elements who had sincerely joined with the Party to effect unification of efforts. The ultra-left policy of the "united front from below" which keeps the C. P. outside this movement, fighting it, is doing yeoman service to the reactionary labor bureaucracy which is quietly working against the movement, behind the scenes, spreading pessimism, lies, and slander among the workers in the union and on the relief lines.

The narrow-minded upstarts in the leadership of the Party locally disgraced themselves by their antics in the October 29th Conference which formed the movement. They represented an insignificant minority of the workers represented there, monopolized the floor while they bragged and lied for two hours or more, booted and bailed when their ultimata were not accepted. Having issued a statement against the conference at the door, calling every one connected with it a "social Fascist", the C. P. then broke into the conference when it decided for the formation of unemployed organizations throughout the city, which of necessity would compete with the defunct, sectarian Unemployed Councils.

Thus the Stalinists with no united-front policy place themselves in a position that exposes them as disrupters and splitters of working class unity before masses of workers. With a correct united front policy the Left Opposition is placing itself in a position to unify the working masses behind simple necessary demands which they need, together with the accepted reformist leaders of the workers, who, if they falter, disrupt this unity, or betray the interests of the workers in the movement, will be exposed.

Incidentally the first group of leadership to disrupt this unity, and to betray the fundamental class interest of the workers for the sake of their immediate organizational interests (the miserable Unemployed Councils) are the Stalinists. The class-conscious workers in the Unemployed Councils should take stock of their leaders and their policies and draw the necessary conclusions. They should join the District organizations of the M. C. C. U. and in these bodies build up a constructive class consciousness and a policy of struggle that will be an aid in advancing our class to the next higher stage of struggle.—C. F.

PUSH THE ACTION PROGRAM

In our last issue we outlined a Program of Action designed to extend the political activities of the League. Some of the points have already been partly carried out. The national war of comrades Swabek has been completed. It was very successful. We have reduced the price of The Militant and made a beginning towards its popularization. At the same time The Militant circulation has greatly increased. Its influence is thereby undoubtedly extended, but the increase in circulation does not yet compensate for the drop in income by the reduced price.

Live workers' clubs have been established in a number of cities. In addition, language workers' clubs sympathetic to and supporting the work of the League are functioning among Italian, Greek and Jewish workers in Chicago and New York City.

But the real test today by which the influence of a revolutionary organization can be judged lies unquestionably in the trade union field. Progress there will have a decisive bearing on future developments. In regard to this we can record only initial steps. In carrying the Action Program to its completion this particular form of activity must be strengthened.

Hooliganism Spreads to Brooklyn

An Open Letter to the District Committee of the Communist Party

December 16, 1933.
District Executive Committee,
Communist Party, U. S. A.
New York, N. Y.

Comrades:
Last Thursday evening, a meeting was scheduled in the Brownsville section under our auspices at the Hoffman Mansion on the Subject "Does Russian Recognition Mean the End of the Third International?" The speakers announced to address the audience included our city organizer, Max Shachtman, and a member of the Brownsville Section Committee of your party, comrade A. Dasch.

Before the meeting actually began, a crowd of some forty to fifty members of the Communist Party and Young Communist League sought to break into the meeting without paying the admission fee and with the obvious purpose of disrupting the orderly conduct of the meeting. In spite of this, and because the subject of the meeting was of such deep concern to the revolutionary movement that we felt it only proper to have present as many comrades supporting your standpoint as possible, we finally proposed to a representative of the party section committee; we will allow twenty League and Party members to enter the hall free of charge if they will pledge themselves to observe the customary procedure and order of a worker's gathering. To this proposal, the party representatives finally agreed. Twenty were admitted into the hall in the manner described above and they took their places quietly.

But immediately upon the opening of the meeting by the chairman, the party representatives—one after another—began a series of violent interruptions calculated to keep the hall in a turmoil and to prevent the meetings from proceeding. Neither the chairman nor anyone else of our comrades was able to utter a full sentence without being heckled and interrupted by the constant interjections of your members. Despite the fact that—as at all such meetings (whether called by you by us, or by any other labor organization)—arrangements had already been made by us, your members presented the outrageous demand that the "workers present elect the chairman"; then that "one of our speakers should speak first and the other last"; etc., etc. These absurd proposals were of course rejected by us. A proposal was however overwhelmingly adopted by those present to the effect that anyone deliberately interrupting from the floor when the chairman had already granted it to someone else would be removed from the hall. The audience, composed entirely of workers, was indignant at the manifest attempt on the part of your comrades (who were obviously acting under orders from superior committees) to disrupt the meeting and prevent it from getting under way.

Tumult Brings Police
Worst of all is the fact that this tumult—especially unnecessary and condemnable in view of our announcement that the party representatives would be given adequate opportunity to speak in the discussion—frightened the hall prior to the police. We sought to have them leave, but they refused. The effect, in a word, was that your comrades brought the police who, under the pretext of "maintaining order" were intervening in workers' disputes with the club.

The upshot of this disgraceful procedure was that the police finally assaulted the entire crowd with drawn clubs and brought the meeting to an end. In view of the growing movement towards Fascist conduct upon the part of the bourgeoisie, the conduct of your comrades is all the more reprehensible. Instead of making it possible to discuss workers' disputes intelligently, that is, on the basis of workers' democracy, you introduce hooligan methods into the labor movement which alienate workers and facilitate the black work of Fascism.

We therefore call upon you to take proper and deserved action against the ringleaders of the group which caused the riot and brought about the disruption of the movement. Their names are Gilbert, Ross, Ruben, and Morris. More particularly, we call upon you to take action against those committees which are responsible for the mobilization of the Party and Y. C. L. comrades who were sent down to disrupt our meeting, for it is the superior instances which are more at fault than the comrades who are really the victims of their instructions.

We wish, further, to notify you that this Wednesday evening, December 20th, we intend to hold a mass meeting in Brownsville on the same subject, and with the same speakers. We intend to take all the steps necessary to prevent a recurrence of the scandal of last week, which was not, as you are well aware, the first time such attempts have been made by you to disrupt our gatherings. At our coming meeting, there will be representatives of various labor organizations whom we are calling upon to attend in order to render their judgment upon the responsibility borne by you or anyone else on any occurrences that may take place.

In conclusion, we feel obliged to declare that a failure on your part to reply to this communication cannot be considered by us as anything but a tacit affirmation of your intention to condone, which means to approve and repeat, the conduct of your members. In that case, we desire to inform you that we will be duty-bound to take up this question in another manner until it is satisfactorily settled, that is, we shall energetically bring this issue before every working class organization within the reach of our members and friends, before every noted front movement against Fascism and terror and persecution. There we shall have to demand of your representatives a public accounting for your conduct and your tactics given in the presence of workers, of whose attitude towards such methods we feel entirely confident. You must surely be aware that you, as well as every other organization, which is called upon to express its opinion on this question, will be held responsible by the working class for any position it may take.

Fraternally yours,
City Committee, Communist League of America (Opp.)

A Protest Against Stalinist Gangster Attacks

Editor of Militant:
I was present at a meeting of the Left Opposition, on Dec. 14th, Thursday evening, at Hoffman Mansion, in the Brownsville section of Brooklyn. The meeting had been called by the above group to discuss the Comintern and Soviet Recognition. In addition to this a former member of the Brownsville Section Committee of the Communist Party, Al Dasch, was to explain his views on the problems before the Communist movement.

The least the party and Y. C. L. members could have done was to come up to the meeting and discuss the matter intelligently. But—no, they chose the method of unliking mass hooliganism to force their way in, and then justified this action on the ground that they were invited by Dasch's statement, a personal attack on the speaker, a personal attack on the speaker, a personal attack on the speaker.

But once in, the party reps, Dolb, Morris, Gilbert, and Ross of the Y. C. L., showed that senseless bureaucratic suppression of thought, heckling, cheap denagogic tactics, attempt at controlling a meeting not their own. I defy, any Y. C. L. or party member to cite an instance in which any opposition was allowed to raise objections from the floor to the established procedure of a meeting.

It was clear to all present that the majority were against the disgusting party tactics, tactics which I have knowledge are carried through with the support of the party leadership. This terrible heckling, which brought remarks from workers, such as "in my reactionary union I have never seen such tactics", or "shut up, you rat", can have no other effect than isolating the party, embarrassing the good work it did, or could possibly do, and rendering it an odious sect. The panic created directly by the party leadership resulted in injury to outside workers.

All this, I am obliged to admit, yet being a close friend of the C. P., despite the bureaucratic handling of my case against the corrupt leadership (Walsh, Horvath and Co.), is a result of a whip being wielded over the heads of the rank and file, the crying death of political education which leads, in general, to a policy of cheap, street-corner gangsterism and the use of the fist instead of the brain.

Every reasoning Communist, every member of the C. P. or Y. C. L., can have no other response to make to the display of repulsive party methods than to urge in his mind a condemnation of the actions of the party at Hoffman Mansion, to press for a thorough-going discussion on the German situation and on Soviet recognition—for, to allow such tactics to continue is to sanction the growth of black reaction in the party ranks, is to stifle that rich energy which streams from true Communist thought, is to sign away the working class, hand and foot, to the police department, is to crush what the bureaucrats have left of the revolutionary vanguard.

Comradely yours,
—W. C.

An Open Letter to the International Labor Defense

Dec. 16th, 1933.
International Labor Defense,
District Office
739 Broadway
New York City

Comrades:
We are enclosing to you a copy of the letter we have just sent to the District Committee of the Communist Party, New York, which is self-explanatory. You will observe from the letter that we are inviting a number of labor organizations to sit on the platform with our speakers at the coming Wednesday evening, December 20th, mass meeting of our organization, for the purpose of giving an objective judgment on any outward occurrences that may take place at this meeting, such as a recurrence of the events of last week's affair.

We cannot impress upon you too strongly the depths of our feelings on this question. At such a time as this, when the labor movement should be giving its full attention to the introduction of the methods of reaction into the working class, it is tantamount to giving aid and comfort to the enemy when any section of the labor movement permits itself the practice of such methods as were pursued at last week's mass meeting. The International Labor Defense has as one of its declared aims the defense of workers' meetings from attacks and intervention from the police, and such an aim we and every other class conscious group heartily endorse. Such actions as the Hoffman Mansion meeting, which are directly responsible for the intervention of police in labor gatherings.

On this occasion, the police struck at us, as a small group. Tomorrow, they will use such situations in order to proclaim that no radical group may hold public meetings unless they are under police supervision; or else, they may declare that the radicals may no longer hold any public meetings at all.

It is your obvious duty to help avoid such a situation. We therefore invite you, as one of the organizations involved, to send a representative to our meeting for the purpose indicated in the enclosed letter. We look forward to an immediate reply to our office so that the necessary detailed arrangements may be made.

An Apologist for Litvinov

The November 25th issue of the Militant was one of the best numbers to appear in the last few months. The Militant was the only revolutionary organ which gave a true analysis from the international proletarian point of view on the issue of Soviet recognition by the great imperialist power, the United States. The editorial in this number, the article by comrade Shachtman, and the article by comrade Litvinov, will remain historical documents for the vanguard of the revolutionary movement the world over.

Without fear the Left Opposition contrasted the diplomacy of Lenin's days and the diplomacy of the Stalin faction for the last ten years. The Litvinov-Stalin bargain and the price paid for recognition by American imperialism is a dead blow to the international revolutionary movement. The Militant has pointed out clearly what points 3 and 4 of the pact mean from a Marxist point of view.

The Panic-Stricken Scribblers
As a result of this Stalinist messenger boys, the Freiheit staff, became panic-stricken. An article appeared every day last week by the great theoreticians against the "Trotskyists", the Left Opposition. I am only a worker. Therefore I will not go into a polemic with every one of them but will simply show what Moisseye Olgin writes in the Freiheit of Nov. 29th. "The counter-revolutionary Trotsky," he says, "wrote an article in 1931, and he predicted that the U. S. will become the strongest power in the world hegemony, and the U. S. dollar will be the dictator of the world over. After a year and nine months the world hegemony of American capitalism is now smaller, and the dollar at present is a weak dictator in the world market." According to Olgin all Trotsky's predictions fell through and were not correct.

I am not interested here to defend comrade Trotsky; this I will leave to Trotsky himself or to the editors of the Militant. But I would like to know, and thousands of workers would like to know from the Olgin: if the U. S. is so weak in the world hegemony why did Litvinov grant Roosevelt articles 3 and 4 which mean the partition of the Third International from the Soviet territory? More, why did not Olgin explain to the workers point 3 and 4 in the party? Why shouldn't the workers know about this? And again, if Olgin says that for the last ten years similar pacts were signed with other powers let him show to which country was given such concessions as in articles 3 and 4.

Olgin's "Explanations"
"In 1921," Olgin continues, "the Soviet Government under Lenin's leadership sent a protest note to England, France, U. S., Japan, and China, for not inviting the U. S. S. R. to the disarmament conference. In 1922 the Soviet Government was represented at Genoa at an international conference for the first time. From this we can see that the Soviets under Lenin's leadership did speak about working together with other powers, and were not afraid to participate in international economic and political conferences. This shows that the U. S. S. R. in 1922 did not make larger concessions than she is making now."

I want to say that Olgin is confusing the issue. Who ever said that the Soviets should not participate in economic and political conferences? Only idiots will say so. It is true the Soviets in 1922 participated in the international conference in Genoa under the guidance of Christian Rakovsky who is exiled by Stalin somewhere in Siberia. At the Genoa conference the bourgeoisie of Europe demanded that Russia should suppress upon her territory all attempts to aid revolutionary movements in other countries.

What was the answer of the Russian delegation to the capitalist powers? "Contentment" was ready to give you certain concessions, but hands off the Communist International. Of course this was the epoch of Lenin and Trotsky in 1922. What the imperialist powers could not get from Russia in 1922 during the famine period Roosevelt got from Litvinov in 1933. Is this because the Soviet government is today stronger than in 1922? Why did not Moisseye Olgin explain to the workers the stand of the Soviet delegation at the Genoa conference? Why falsify? Why not meet the issue in truthful manner? Why confuse the workers more and more?

What the Workers Said
After I read the Freiheit articles I went down to the market where the Jewish workers assemble. I wanted to hear their reactions on these articles, so I asked some cloak and dressmakers about them. They laughed, and when I asked them what was the joke one of them said, "Trotsky is a counter-revolutionist just as the Freiheit writes correct labor news every day." The next day I was with Millinery and Pocketbook workers and when I asked them what they thought about the "counter-revolutionary Trotsky", one of them pulled a Militant out of his pocket and said, "This is the first time I buy this paper; if these comrades are counter-revolutionaries I will soon be in their company."

Is it a wonder the last number of the Militant was sold out and is still in demand? The Freiheit articles were good propaganda for the Militant and the Left Opposition.

Impressions on a National Tour

On my recent tour through the country I gathered impressions of a multicolored variety. In the first place one cannot fail to notice that after deceptive glamor of the early appearance of the New Deal the crisis has returned. One does not encounter so much the traditional misanthrope, the traveling salesman, but the countless long freight trains still carry their loads of unemployed workers and homeless tramping youth roving from place to place in quest of some new way of getting by. The aristocratic appearing New England towns radiate the screaming colors of the blue eagle signs, proceeding westward. However, these become rather scarce. Here and there emerge little "Buy Now" banners. But the attempts to stoke them daily fall flat. The throbbing hum of a busy industry is absent. Within the forest of smoke stacks in the Pittsburgh and Gary steel regions only a few hunch forth their pallid clouds. In Buffalo and

League Member in L.A. Demands Proof for Slanders

(Sent to the Los Angeles Section Organizer of the Communist Party)

Los Angeles
Dec. 12, 1933

Fellow Worker:
There has come to my attention within the last few months a constantly repeated accusation against me made by a number of well known party members, namely that I am a police spy.

You are no doubt aware of the incalculable harm that can be done to the working class movement as a whole by the spreading of irresponsible rumors about active participants in the labor movement. You must also be aware that the branding of honest revolutionaries as police spies results in demoralization of the workers ranks and makes it exceedingly difficult to expose real provocateurs when it is necessary to do so.

Because this is generally recognized by all responsible working class organizations there are certain rights allowed to all workers who are so accused.

Also it is well known that no revolutionary organization worthy of the name should encourage the spreading of such rumors simply because they had political or factional differences with the person so victimized, that such action must eventually result in the complete exposure of those who spread such rumors.

When accusations must be made they should be made openly with supporting proof and the accused worker be afforded the right to a trial before his fellow workers. This goes without saying is a generally recognized custom among honest revolutionaries.

In the interest of the movement as a whole and in consideration of the above I demand the following: That Austin Sullivan, Harry Rice, Cope, Lawrence Ross, Stapleton and others who have made a practice of accusing me behind my back be called by the proper party authorities and be asked to submit proof of their accusations and to make them openly in my presence. That, if they are not willing to make such accusations openly that they be disciplined for their dishonest behavior. That a thorough investigation as to the source of these rumors be made because it is a quite frequent tactic of provocateurs in the ranks of the workers to originate rumors of this character in order to spread confusion among workers organization.

I have a right to expect a reply in a reasonable time stating what you intend to do in regard to this matter. That is not a matter to which the party can remain indifferent. No revolutionary organization worthy of the name permits important members of their organization to spread such rumors on their individual responsibility without calling them to task. Hoping to hear from you very soon, I am,
Very sincerely yours,
FRANK HAINSTEIN.

A Panorama of Present Conditions of the American Worker

Niagara Falls, however, the war industries and allied chemical industries are running full blast.

Decline of "New Deal" Illusions

Here one of our comrades told me of his work in the plant producing the means of chemical warfare for Uncle Sam. "Three days of work in one stretch is all a man can stand," he said. "After that must follow at least two days in a completely darkened room to avoid instant blindness." But jobs are scarce today. Yet the lifetime of a worker in such an industry is exceedingly brief. The eyesight gives out. Such are some of the blessings of modern capitalism.

But all is supposed to be well with the New Deal policy, although the defenders of its redeeming features, as a means of recovery, say it is at its cross roads. This is true in more than one sense. "Oh, yes," they agree—both supporters and opponents among the agents of privilege—"its social relation features are of positive significance."

They mean by that the code and arbitration board regulations which represent the attempts to tie the workers within definite bonds of collaboration with capital, entirely to the latter's advantage. That aspect has not yet become clear to the workers in general. But it is noticeable throughout, and more apparent as one reaches westward, that of the former implicit confidence in the NRA, which made it synonymous with recovery, with jobs, there is at least only a thin veneer left. What stands out the more clearly is the readiness to organize and the direct response from the workers to organization efforts.

Surge Toward Unionization
The first big "recovery" strike wave had just about reached its ebb when my tour began. Organization activities were no longer at their former height but neither had they entirely petered out with the blasting of the recovery illusions. The truth is that the overwhelming numbers surging towards the existing unions, and decidedly towards the conservative unions, represented the instinctive mass reaction to the opportunities afforded by the NRA, collective bargaining clause, supplemented by the heavily increasing economic pressure upon them. It came about with such a rush that the A. P. of L. leaders were taken by surprise. In fact it was not at all due to any aggressive action on their part. They served as an impediment, gladly collecting the initiation fees which came rolling in but resisting and subverting organization at every step.

In Kansas City, for example, one of our comrades began to undertake organization in a plant of industrial mass production. He collected an imposing list of applicants but found it impossible to pry the trades and labor council loose. He could get no attention from that outfit so entirely oblivious to interests of expansion and growth. What could one expect then from the higher echelons of the hierarchy? It is true that the glutinous mandarins heading the New York garment workers union had a special interest in organizing the whole industry as a means of wiping out the U. P. of L. union in the field. But elsewhere no such competition existed as a serious factor, and their worthy associates did their level best to drive the workers back from struggle for union organization and for union recognition.

Fayette County Miners

That was the case with the Fayette County coke miners in their strike against the steel subsidiary of H. C. Frick and Company. Several times the glib-tongued, expert horse-traders in the class collaboration field, from John L. Lewis downward, pleaded with these miners to return to work and to trust to them and to Mr. Roosevelt to preserve the interests of union organization. But the miners stuck to their own rights and made their own fight for a union, and at that for the very union headed by Lewis and the others. Not that the miners were fooled by this gentry. On the contrary. When William Feeney came on October 3, to address a meeting near Uniontown of 15,000 strikers he was greeted with the shouts "You sold us out in 1922".

"Throw him out." He was unable to speak and left the meeting.

Even this very early stage of the "new deal" for the workers heralded the coming deep conflicts between the rank and file and the reactionary union leadership. The distribution of the roles in this case showed the miners defending the principles of unionism against the officials of the very union involved. It may be argued that this is not a new phenomena in American labor history. That is true. But by occurring at this time it has a special significance for the future. To say the NRA class collaboration machinery is based upon arbitration boards which tomorrow will be turned into means of suppression of strikes and, thereby, suppression of the very life of the trade unions. With this machinery the union officials remain sewed up, for today and tomorrow, because they are agents of capitalism. And with this the rank and file interests will come into ever more decisive conflict. It is from conditions such as these that the coming great labor struggles will and must reflect within the unions in serious revolts against the reactionary policies and against the officialdom. Thereby the path will be prepared for a new unionism.

Failure of Stalinist Unions

That this path will not be found through the U. U. of L. unions only further verified by the most recent experiences. Today one can find no trace whatever of the National Miners' Union in the important fields along as far west as Illinois. The thousands of miners of Pennsylvania and Ohio, who two years ago struck under the banner of the U. U. of L. union, were this time striking, and just as militantly, under the banner of the A. P. of L. striking for the rights of union recognition which the NRA was supposed to grant.

With the NRA came the rising curve of commodity prices the effects of which are felt very directly. "The NRA is just so much bunk," has now become a quite common expression, not only amongst those who still tramp the streets in vain search for jobs, but amongst the employed as well. For them the low wage standard resulting from the crisis is a serious reality. It is difficult to make ends meet. A grim determination is beginning to make its appearance within their ranks. One feels perceptibly that the present lull after the first strike wave is the calm before the next storm sure to break soon with the force of a hurricane.

Conditions of the Unemployed

And the unemployed? Amongst them are many signs of a sluggish adaptation to the low subsistence level afforded by the miserable relief rations. But these do not predominate. Most of the various mutual self-help enterprises, based upon begging and upon barter of labor for goods, which flourished for a time in several smaller cities, could not survive the realities of class society. Instead relief work or "working for the city," as it is called by some who hope to invest it with a non-existing dignity, is becoming a regular institution in many cities. It means to do regular work for a relief pittance either, in cash or in groceries bearing no semblance to a wage. And often it is on such projects that regular wage labor is directly eliminated. Yet it becomes compulsory for those who need the grocery basket.

In spite of all this there is no sign anywhere today of an all-embracing unemployment movement. What exists is only the isolated local groupings; and of them there are few. In Minneapolis the Left Opposition has infused new life into the unemployed movement. In Chicago one finds still the Workers' League and locals affiliated to the Bonkers Committee. On a whole the issues of the unemployed receded into the background for a time with the advent of the NRA bubble. The movement, such as it was, experienced a decline. But that does not tell the whole story.

Catastrophic Position of Official Party

Alongside of the decline is recorded the failure of the movement or the tendencies within, mainly those of the official Communist party and of the social reformists, to at any time seriously aim for the indispensable united front. From this the movement is now suffering the consequences. The unemployed councils, directed by the official party, which first emerged with the powerful spontaneous demonstrations, with the auspicious opportunity, during the early part of the crisis, have either entirely vanished or, went amounts to the same thing, lead a purely paper existence.

In general the decline and the sinking into disrepute of the official party is so outstanding as to be catastrophic. In city after city, not in the least in the mining and steel regions, I made the same observation. The official party is discredited to the extent of reflecting unfavorably upon the ideas of Communism in general. Again and again I would hear reports of workers saying, "I am through with Communist Party", or, "I quit the Daily Worker some time ago." How clearly did this illustrate the reactions thousands of workers who have been repulsed by the emasculated party of Stalinism. For the Left Opposition this means more emphasis on the duty to build anew a revolutionary party in the United States. Our part in this task will be reported in another article.

THE NEW DANGER OF WAR IN THE FAR EAST

Press dispatches from the Far East point to the imminence of a fresh military campaign by Japanese imperialism, intended to carry a stage further the grandiose plan of colonial conquest designed by the late Baron Tanaka. With the military accomplishment of each successive phase of this plan, which is the guiding plan of the Tokyo warlords, the danger of war against the Soviet Union approaches increasingly nearer.

With the signing of the Tangku truce last May 31, resulting in the "demilitarization" of approximately 5,000 miles of Chinese territory south of the Great Wall, there ensued a period of comparative quiet. The Japanese army withdrew to the Great Wall but continued to hold all the strategic passes into Manchuria and Inner Mongolia, including the important gateway at Shuankuwan. The past six months have witnessed intensive preparations for a fresh military drive. Heavy Japanese troop concentrations took place at Mukden and Changchun late in September on the time-worn pretext of "bandit-suppression." Now it is reported that Japanese forces have undertaken the conquest of Inner Mongolia, the next step from which is an intervention against the People's Government of Outer Mongolia, meaning war against the Soviet Union.

Japan Aims at War

All the facts of the present situation in the Far East point indubitably to the clear-cut intention of the Japanese imperialists to push their military might against the Soviet Union without unnecessary delay. The Tanaka plan calls not only for the conquest of Manchuria, sections of China proper and Inner and Outer Mongolia, but also for the forcible seizure of all Soviet territory east of Lake Baikal territory richer than Manchuria in such basic raw materials as coal and iron and possessing mineral and other riches which Manchuria does not possess.

The principal danger spot for the Soviet Union has shifted recently from Russia's western frontiers to the Far East, Germany, as the Left Opposition organ in that country, Unser Wort, recently asserted, is in no position to make war on the land of the Soviets. Years of preparation are required. To those who contend that Japan is not adequately prepared either it must be stated that, given the present balance or relationship of forces, Japanese imperialism is as prepared ed for war on the Soviet Union as it can ever hope to be. The difference between the two is that in any absolute sense, prepared for war, but they embark upon war nevertheless. In the case of Japan, the danger of war is in certain respects is lost in the general psychosis of invincibility, stimulated by the military campaigns of the last two years and the still-unforgotten victory over Czarist Russia in 1905.

Attack on the Workers' Fatherland by the Japanese Militarists Imminent

Effect of American Recognition

American recognition of the Soviet Union has lessened the danger of a Japanese attack on the workers' fatherland, we have been told. This facile contention, embodied in the diplomatic jargon of Stalin-Litvinov and slavishly echoed by Stalinist scribblers who seek to justify a Soviet "peace policy" that involves the desertion and virtual repudiation of revolutionary internationalism, will not bear the test of examination. American recognition of the Soviet Union, insofar as it affects Soviet-Japanese relations, will more probably hasten the onslaught of Japanese imperialism on the Soviet Union. There is no prospect of any improvement in Japan's internal situation, and the hopes of the Japanese imperialists of a successful war against the Soviet Union can only become dimmed by delay in delivering the attack (we are not discussing here the actual possibilities of Japan's winning out in a war on the Soviets in the Far East). Moreover, Japan cannot hope to force a united imperialist front against the Soviets by the methods of diplomacy. Fifteen post-war years have proved that impracticable. But Japan does expect to find allies in the west once she has started the fight.

Sharpening Japano-American Relations

American recognition, while tending to hasten a Japanese attack on the Soviet Union, will sharpen Japano-American antagonisms—in fact has done so already. It was announced from Tokyo on December 8 that the Japanese fleet is to be reorganized on a war basis. The fleet is not needed for war on the Soviet Union. Only a few ships would be employed for an assault on Vladivostok. The move is clearly intended as a "hand-off" warning to the United States. Japanese officials are said to have revealed that "secret conversations" have taken place in Tokyo with Manuel Quezon, leader of the Filipino bourgeois independence movement.

Japan will in all probability decide to strike the first blow before the Soviet Union has the opportunity to take advantage of American credits, expected to follow recognition. This view was expressed succinctly enough by George Brown, head of the $30,000 a year American adviser to the new state of Manchukuo—that is, Japan—in a letter to the New York Herald-Tribune on November 18. He declares that: "If recognition is followed by huge credits or loans which will enable Moscow to rush through its plans in central Asia and Siberia, then the outlook for peace is far from bright." As a result of such loans or credits, he goes on to contend, "the jaws of the Communist nutcracker will begin to close and Japan will have to fight for her life."

Quezon, reportedly sought Japanese aid and discussed linking the Philippines to the charter of Japanese imperialism. It must be remembered that the Tanaka memorial envisages the seizure of the Philippines in order to round out the Empire of the Rising Sun and establish Japanese hegemony in the Pacific.

That Japan's first target is the Soviet Union and not America is indicated in a report from Mukden last week, which stated that the exiled Turkish prince, Abdul Kerim, is now en route from Tokyo to Sinkiang (Chinese Turkestan) on the Soviet borders, to head a puppet government that Japanese agents are trying to set up there. The prince has been the guest of the Japanese government for almost a year, being held in readiness to fill in Sinkiang the role that the ex-Manchu emperor, Henry Pu Yi, fills in Manchukuo. Japanese intrigues in Sinkiang are part of the preparations for the coming assault on Outer Mongolia. Hence, while it is indubitably true that Japano-American antagonisms are growing sharper, the reported reorganization of the Japanese fleet on a war basis, coupled with the whisperings concerning the Philippines, should be construed as a warning rather than as a threat.

Japanese Militarism in a Hurry

If Japan is not yet fully prepared for a war with the Soviet Union, she is not even at the beginning of preparation for a war against her powerful Pacific rival, a Japanese war against the United States.

The Proletarian Party -- Position and Prospects

Both these disturbances were a direct result of the depression. During the "prosperous" days, when money was comparatively plentiful, no one in the Party seriously questioned Keracher's judgment and ability as custodian of the Party's funds. This is proved by the fact that his books were never audited. But as the depression advanced money got scarcer and scarcer. It became necessary to not only count the dimes but the pennies too. Some of the bolder spirits even questioned whether Keracher was handling the Party funds in the most advantageous manner. They became very inquisitive and discovered that the different Party funds were mixed together quite indiscriminately. All the money was put into one pot. Press funds, membership dues, organization funds, local rent, C. H. Kerr Co. funds, were all put together and whatever need came along first got whatever money was available. This could perhaps best be described as financial opportunism.

New Opposition in 1932

About September 1932, comrades Anderson, Knight and Novak, as a majority of the Executive Council, undertook to instruct Keracher in the handling of press funds, and when he ignored the instruction they elected Knight as Press Fund Secretary, and instructed him to open a separate bank account for the press funds, which he did. The majority of the Executive Council did not take the stand that under no circumstances could press funds be diverted to other purposes and later restored, but that this should be done only in emergency whereas Keracher did it as a habit. Keracher appealed the decision of the majority of the Executive Council to the N. E. C. as a whole. He made his appeal on the basis of the Party constitution which, while it says "The N. E. C. shall have full power to carry on Party work between conventions", it also says "The National Secretary shall supervise the accounts of the National Office", and also that "The National Secretary shall be elected at the same time and in the same manner as the N. E. C."

On the matter of this appeal the N. E. C. as a whole, under the influence of Keracher's correspondence, decided that the constitution gave complete control of Party funds to Keracher and that the press funds should be returned to him. They agreed with Keracher that, having been elected by the same body as the N. E. C., namely the convention, he was not only not subject to the Council but was not even subject to the N. E. C., but was on an equal footing with it. He contended that not even the NEC had power to take funds out of his hands, and the N. E. C. agreed. To illustrate the attitude of most of the N. E. C. members it may be said that one of them moved for the abolition of the Council and the placing of the National Office affairs entirely in the hands of the National Secretary till the next convention. Another N. E. C. member moved that the resignation of Novak and Anderson from the N. E. C. be requested.

Questions of Organization Principle

Under these circumstances members of the Party for the first time took up the study of democratic centralism and Bolshevik party structure. Anderson, Knight and Novak soon discovered that the principles of democratic centralism require the election by the convention, or congress, of a Central Committee which shall really have full power over all party affairs till the next congress, and that this committee shall elect from its members a secretary, who shall be the Secretary of the committee and at all times subordinate to the committee. The Secretary is not elected by the congress and gets no power from the congress. The Central Committee elects a Bureau to carry on the day to day work (to which the Executive Council of the Proletarian Party is comparable) and this Bureau is also under the control of the Central Committee, but is entitled to make decisions for the committee between meetings of the committee. The secretary of the committee is also the secretary of the Bureau. This is democratic centralism as outlined by Lenin, the fundamental principles of which must be incorporated into the constitution of any organization calling itself Communist. There is little room for dualism in such a structure. Under the Proletarian Party has been organized in this fashion Keracher could never have carried the Party in his pocket for so many years even though the intelligence of the rank and file was very low.

As an example of the loose and careless manner of carrying on the Party work and of the complete lack of criticism of the leaders by the rank and file it should be stated that although the Party had for over ten years a functioning body known as the Executive Council, consisting of those members of the N. E. C. who lived in, or happened to be in, the city of Chicago where the National Office was located, and although this body was understood by the rank and file to be the executive and representative body of the N. E. C. as a whole, yet there was never a word in the Party constitution about even the existence of such a body till the convention last September when the opposition group, after a hard struggle, succeeded in forcing into the constitution a modest definition of its powers and functions.

1933 Convention

Since a convention was scheduled for 1933 and a period of pre-convention discussion was approaching, Anderson, Knight and Novak, decided to lay the whole matter before the rank and file. However, with a hostile secretary in the National Office, through whose hands all correspondence must pass and who supervised the issuing of the discussion bulletins, this was not an easy matter. Keracher used all the tricks in his bag (and it's a big bag) to prevent this matter from reaching the membership. After much struggling on the part of Anderson, Knight and Novak, it did get into the pre-convention bulletin but it was at the tail end, just a short time before the convention opened and the membership had too little time to properly consider such fundamental questions and instruct their delegates on them before the convention opened.

But in spite of this the proposed changes in the constitution almost carried. The vote was 12-11 against them, and even this was only accomplished by a pre-convention maneuver on Keracher's part by means of which two prominent members of Local Detroit, Schock and Landgraf, who had proclaimed themselves favorable to the proposed constitutional changes, were suspended from the Party for three months on a minor charge and thus excluded from the convention. For the first time in Proletarian Party history the fundamental principles of Leninism were discussed on the floor of a convention. But the majority still supported Keracher, finding it impossible to believe that a man they had trusted so many years should really have been untrustworthy.

Social Democratic Viewpoints Most of the decisions taken at the convention were of a Social Democratic character. More so than those of any previous convention of the Party. The decisions on the farm question, the Negro question, partial demands, the Communist International, were all characterized by evasion or obvious misunderstanding, such as for example the decision that the farmer is not a worker and should not be seriously considered by a revolutionary party. Keracher was re-elected, as National Secretary with all of his former power intact.

Anderson resigned at the convention and Knight shortly afterwards. Also a body of about 20 others, members of Local Detroit, have left the Party as a result of the convention decisions. There are indications that those still in the party are progressing as a result of the controversy. Many of them have, for the first time, taken up a study of Leninism. This will probably result in other attempts to change the Party line and doubtless there will be other splits, resignations or expulsions. There seems no reason to hope that the Party leaders will be able to change their position and become revolutionary. It appears that whatever usefulness the organization had in the past has definitely disappeared and the Party is now nothing but a hindrance to revolutionary development.

Workers should be able to gain some understanding from such events as these. One conclusion to be drawn from this controversy is that we should never cease to be critical of our leaders. We must have leaders, and the rank and file must have confidence in those leaders, but those extending the confidence must not be deaf, dumb and blind but always alert and critical. Previous to this conflict in the Proletarian Party it would have been quite impossible for me to conceive of a great leader like Stalin playing any dirty tricks on his fellow party members or in any way failing to serve the best interests of the international working class.

Leaders and Rank and File

While there is little comparison between the size of the Russian party and the Proletarian Party it can be understood that if workers who for years had prized themselves on being super-critical could be so easily deceived by a Keracher it might be possible for good Bolsheviks to be deceived by a Stalin. The actions of our leaders, national and international, must be watched at all times and nothing taken for granted. While watching our enemies we must also watch our friends. If we fail in this important matter we shall pay as the workers of Germany are now paying.

In addition to this very important lesson there is another which deserves attention. That is that parties and individuals cannot be understood apart from their backgrounds. The Proletarian Party's over-emphasis on education, and failure to accomplish anything in practical every-day organizational work, was to quite an extent a reaction to the stupid ballyhoo of the Communist Party, though it was partly due to the conservative tendencies of the leaders inherited from the Socialist Party. The utterly un-Communist Proletarian Party constitution, with its paralyzing effects, must be considered definitely as a Socialist Party heritage.

We must learn to critically analyze our tendencies in the light of past and present influences and to shake off mercilessly all outworn dogma and tradition. Eternal vigilance is the price of success in our work.

—JOSEPH KNIGHT.

ters into the general drive for domination of China—a general drive of rival imperialisms in which Britain and France also have most important interests and roles.

But in the phases of this drive which reflect specifically Japano-American rivalry Japan is in the lead, diplomatically, economically and strategically. Tokyo's overtures to Nanking—to that government which time out of number has declared it would never enter into direct negotiations with Japan—have already produced concrete results. The Chinese bourgeoisie, represented politically by the Kuo Min Tung government at Nanking, has moved steadily toward rapprochement with Japan during the year now closing. Hoping for much from renewed relationships with the Soviet Union, Nanking abandoned all such hope when, to its utter amazement, Moscow declared its readiness to sell the Chinese Eastern Railway to Japan. Ever since, with clumsy attempts at secrecy, Nanking has been dicker with Tokyo.

Relations of China and Japan

Nanking's present position vis-à-vis Japan has been defined with a clearness that precludes misunderstanding by the Peiping correspondent of the New York Times:

"Remarkable development has occurred during recent months in the relations between China and Japan. Although the Nanking government has not yet chosen to risk public displeasure by entering into formal diplomatic negotiations with Japan for the settlement of the Manchurian and related issues, Japanese diplomacy has made important gains through informal dealings with the North China political faction headed by General Huang Fu. It has been scarcely half a year since the Tangku armistice brought an end to Sino-Japanese hostilities. Yet, in that brief period, the attitude of the North China administration toward Japan has been transformed from one of bitterness to one of utmost friendliness and cooperation. Anti-Japanese elements in the administration have been gradually weeded out. Intimate relations have grown up between Japanese military and diplomatic representatives and the North China government. Within the last month Japan has become particularly assiduous in sowing good will."

N. Y. Times, December 10.

The correspondent goes on to relate how, as evidence of the "new spirit" he describes, there took place a "strange spectacle," when Chinese and Japanese troops, which a few months before had been at war with each other, joined forces to quell the Chinese rebel, General Fung Chen-Wu. But what is of especial importance and significance is the Japanese view of the strengthened influence they have gained in Chinese government circles. It is considered "an important factor in the event of Soviet-Japanese complications," says the correspondent.

Nanking's Deal with Japan

It is plain that Nanking has made at least a tentative deal with Japan—a deal that is directed, obliquely at any rate, against the Soviet Union. This development is very largely the by-product of Soviet diplomacy, which retreated step by step before Japanese aggression during the past two years. The humiliating act in this retreat was the decision to sell the Chinese Eastern Railway.

Current developments in the Far East demand the closest vigilance of the revolutionary movement and of the working-class movement generally. A war by Japan against the Soviet Union, in which the Kuo Min Tung government would be the ally of Japanese imperialism, would undoubtedly engender the profoundest repercussions in the ranks of the Chinese working class and in the broad layers of the poor population. The Chinese workers are still confused and disorganized, largely passive. They have not yet recovered from the catastrophe visited on them by the Stalinists.

in 1927. But there are signs of their revival, indicated in the rising strike movement in the industrial centers.

Tasks of Chinese Communists

The Chinese Communists are obligated by their revolutionary tasks to penetrate the ranks of the workers, aid in the work of reorganization, give sound political direction to the movement. The official party still maintains its false course toward the armed uprising, predicating it upon the existence of peasant guerrilla warfare in remote rural areas in the heart of the country. The raising of democratic slogans around which the city masses can be mobilized for action is still denounced as "counter-revolutionary Trotskyism," although only nine months ago the Provisional Soviet Government at Jukih—that government of which Moscow is still not officially cognizant—advanced a series of democratic demands in an official manifesto. Pressed by political needs born of activity, this peasant government, which the Stalinists point to as evidence of the "mistakes" of the Left Opposition, advances a program of demands which the Chinese Communist Party and the Communist International even to this day denounce as counter-revolutionary.

Democratic Demands

What were these demands? They are embodied in a declaration issued to the people of China on April 15 this year over the signature of Mao Tse-tung, president of the Provisional Government of the Soviet Republic of China. Toward the end of the declaration we read the following—note it carefully, you who denounce the democratic slogans of the Left Opposition as Menshevism:

"The Red Army is ready to enter into fighting operative agreements with any army or military detachment in the fight against Japanese invasion under the following conditions:

1. Cessation of the advance against the Soviet Districts.
2. Granting of Democratic rights to the people of China (free speech, free press, rights of assembly, demonstration, organization, release of political prisoners, etc.)
3. Arming of the people, the creation of armed volunteer detachments to struggle for the defense, independence and unity of China."

For A New Party in China

If we add the obviously requisite demand for the National Assembly there is nothing to cavil at in this program. Put forward by radio from the bottled-up Soviet government at Jukih it reached nowhere. As the program of the Chinese Communist Party its slogans could become the slogans of the workers in the cities and acquire a tremendous significance. But it is hopeless to expect anything of the Chinese Communist Party, decayed beyond repair by its own vices. The Chinese oppositionists must construct a new party which will enter into its tasks correctly, seriously and conscientiously, mobilize the masses for the third Chinese revolution and simultaneously for the defense of the Soviet Union. These twin tasks converge and supplement each other. The new party must bury the rubbish heaped upon the Chinese revolutionary field by the Stalinists. It must oppose itself directly to the Chinese ruling class and its government, enemies of both the Chinese masses and the peoples of the Soviet Union, and not lose itself and disperse its forces in nebulous activities against imperialism in general.

In the measure that the Chinese working class, led by a new Communist Party, is successful in furthering its own revolution by fighting the Kuo Min Tung and the Nanking government, and the class forces represented therein—to that extent will it be discharging its share of the task of defending the Soviet Union. The Chinese workers are confronted by great tasks. They must receive the unstinting support of the workers of America and other countries.

The Collapse of the Brandler Movement

(Editor's Note.—The interesting account of the disintegration of the international organization of the Right wing Brandlerists is translated from Die Neue Front, organ of the German Socialist Workers' Party.)

L. V. K. O. is an abbreviation for the Internationale Vereinigung der Kommunistischen Oppositionen (International Union of Communist Oppositions). Until very recently the IVKO consisted of KPO-Germany, KPO-Switzerland, KPO-Austria, KPO-Danish group in Norway, KPO-Sweden, the Lovestone group in America and a small group in Czechoslovakia. For some time already sharp differences have manifested themselves in the IVKO. They have now culminated in the declaration of Brandler, made at the Oct. 24th session of the Central Committee of the Swedish Independent Communist Party, to the effect that it is excluded from the IVKO. Thus, the already shaking structure of the IVKO lost its strongest prop.

The immediate cause for the expulsion was the participation of the Independent Communist Party of Sweden in the Paris Conference. But just as in case of the differences in the KPO-Germany the main question revolved around the attitude to Stalinism. The fact that the Norwegian Mot-Dag group answered the call to the Paris conference, and would have participated had not external circumstances prevented it, can be interpreted only that the Mot-Dag group feels itself in solidarity with the Swedish group, so that its official break with the IVKO is not far off.

New Rifts Developing

But with the loss of the quantitatively and qualitatively best elements of the IVKO the process of disintegration did not reach its end. It seems that a rift is also brewing with the KPO-Switzerland, and with the group around Brandler. At any rate the declarations of comrades Placmann and Bringer made at the enlarged session of the bureau are entirely in the spirit of the former KPO minority (present S. W. P. leadership—Tr.). In fact, comrade Placmann pronounced himself in favor of a new party in Germany. Comrade Bringer at one time made a statement that the KPD deviates from fundamental Communist principles, that the C. I. has been degraded to an instrument for the furtherance of Russia's foreign policy and that as far as the West-European proletariat is concerned the C. I. is "absolutely hopeless."

For some time already the relations between the Alsace opposition group and the leadership of the KPO-Germany have been very tense. As we see, only the Lovestone group in America remains steadfast and loyal to Brandler-Thalheimer. But information reaches us that also in America there are currents "against the stream", so that the group, which is approaching the point of view of the Left Opposition and the S. W. P., has broken with Lovestone.

In face of this mass of ruins we can only hope that the C. C. of the IVKO will clear the path for the international unity of all Communist groups who have recognized that a correct policy today can be carried on only against the C. I. and its sections. Inside of Germany the isolation of Brandler and Thalheimer will undoubtedly hasten the winning over of the best elements of the KPO-Germany for the building of a real Communist party.

Disintegration Also in Bohemia

We have information from Czechoslovakia which shows to what extent the SPD and KPD have been losing and are still losing in influence. Orientation towards the Left Opposition is especially marked among SPD workers. The idea of building a new revolutionary party is gaining momentum.

On the KPD the report says: "Our Brandlerites have almost disappeared from the face of the earth due to their cringing policy before the Stalinists. A half a year ago they were still rather strong. They have since driven the majority of their members to indifference. While formerly they had been much stronger than the Left Opposition, now the L. O. is almost twice as strong. Thus, at the Nov. 1st meeting of Asch only a mere handful of no more than ten participated."

It would be unjust to blame the Asch KPO comrades for this defeat. It is the inevitable result of the opportunist policy which the leadership of the KPD has embarked upon. The workers say to themselves and with absolute right—if the internal and foreign policy of Stalin corresponds to Communist interests, this must also be true as far as the Stalin Comintern policy is concerned. And from this they draw a conclusion, absolutely logical, from their point of view, that the existence of the KPO groups is absolutely senseless.

First National's Wild Boys of the Road is the first socially serious picture to be made since the crisis hit us like one of Moses' plagues. It tells the story of the tens of thousands of boys of all ages who are driven from home by the pressure of the crisis on their families; how they live; and the brutal treatment capitalist society gives them.

The break-up of working class families is faithfully recorded, but the scenes on the freight trains as the boys fight with and lick the railroad bulls by throwing fruit at them were written to order in the studio, not copied from life. None the less some effort was made to paint the police as the brutal ruffians they are. They are shown in action swinging clubs against kids. For once they don't appear as moralizing protectors of society.

In the last scene the boys who are hauled up before a juvenile court judge explain how they came to hit the road. They fix the blame on society and make themselves out to be its victims. The words they use are obviously put into their mouths. The sentiments they express are way beyond their understanding. On the other hand this is a new kind of talk for the moving pictures.

The producers vitiated their indiction of capitalist society by their treatment throughout the picture and, particularly, by its conclusion. Whenever a scene threatens to carry a biting sting and reach the spot in a man's heart where outrage lives the producers put in some light touch to set the audience laughing. The audience sat with did just that.

Most of them that got by this trick fell for the end. The juvenile court judge turned out to be a kind hearted fellow who let the boys off got them jobs, and told them everything was going to be alright and their folks would get jobs so they could go back home. They left out only the American flag and P. D.'s face. In this way the picture made the whole thing out to be one of those temporary dislocations in society which recovery will set straight. And in this sense the picture is false.

On the other hand the faithful presentation of much of the brutality and suffering which these young workers and workers' children are made to experience by the breakdown of the profit system gives the picture a positive value.

Building the New Movement

IN breaking finally with the Stalinist party and Comintern, and in striking out an independent path toward the building of a new party, the Communist League has taken a step which flows with irrefutable logic from the realities of the situation; it corresponds completely to the burning needs of the working class and the political movement of its conscious vanguard section. The political wisdom of this decision will be verified in life, as in a certain measure it has already been verified, to the extent that we steer a resolute course on the new path.

Our break with Stalinism, its organizations and its treacherous policy, is irrevocable; there is no turning back. The time when the faction struggle within the ranks of the Comintern occupied the center of our attention is behind us. The main weight of our activity has to be shifted now directly into the broad class struggle. Delay or hesitation with this radical transformation of our work can only militate against the movement and our own influence in it.

It is not enough to recognize the logic of this decisive turn and to accept it formally. The next problem—and it is a crucial one now—is to assimilate the idea, with all its implications to the very end, into our blood. A complete break with narrow factional activity and the psychology engendered by it is an imperative necessity. Only then will we be able to translate our decision into action. A check-up of our activity and its results since the publication of our resolution on the question of the new party, which is in order now, will convince us of this.

One of the most conspicuous examples of the fruitful results of the new orientation of the League is to be found in the experience of the Minneapolis comrades in the unemployment movement. For a long time there, as elsewhere, while we maintained our position as a faction of the Stalinist Party and of its peripheral organizations, the League members and other revolutionary workers attempted to participate in the Unemployment Councils of the Stalinists. A futile task and a waste of time, as experience demonstrated. These Unemployment Councils, like all other Stalinist "mass organizations" are narrowly-constructed family affairs, isolated from the actual movement of the masses and serving the special interests of the bureaucratic machine. They far more concerned to keep "Trotskyites" out than to get workers in. The attempt to work in the unemployment movement under such auspices became a notorious process of sneaking into the so-called Unemployment Councils and being thrown out again. The more the burden of mass unemployment pressed the workers toward action the more the Stalinist clique blocked the way. A resolute break out of this vicious circle became the condition for a real activity among the masses on the issue of unemployment.

An independent course of action was commenced by the Internationalists in this field. The sterile "Councils" were left to stew in their own juice. Unemployed workers and workers' organizations were approached with a program of united action. This tactic brought gratifying results in a comparatively short time. The will of the workers generally to get together in the fight against the scourge of unemployment was shown in the widespread response to the initiative of our comrades. The relative insignificance of the Stalinist clique in the broad movement, and the absurdity of their claim to a "monopoly" of leadership, were likewise revealed with striking force.

Several conferences, embracing the bulk of the workers' organizations, have already been held; a big mass meeting on the unemployment question has taken place; the movement is growing and broadening in scope and the decks are being cleared for a real demonstration of working class unity and discontent that will wrest concessions from the masters. The developments to be seen in Minneapolis already are a heartening sign of the moving power that resides in the slogans of struggle against unemployment once they are taken out of the closed circle of a clique and made an issue of the class.

In the broad united front of the real workers' movement in Minneapolis the Stalinists appear only as a small minority of disrupters. The workers turned against them. Before the workers, who are concerned vitally with the united fight to make the conditions of their lives more bearable, the Stalinists appeared as enemies of the movement, resentful of its success and bent on disrupting and disorganizing it. In this way they convince the workers, on the basis of their own experience, that the Stalinist Party, which serves the special interests of a bureaucratic clique, is a sabotaging obstacle to the development of the workers' movement.

These lessons derived from experience are not the least of the benefits accruing to the general movement from the wide-scale unemployment activity which is being unfolded in Minneapolis. The members of the Communist League, while proceeding with their constructive work in the forefront of the movement, are true to its interests in exposing the fundamental meaning of the Stalinist tactics and aiding the workers to draw the necessary conclusions. Nevertheless, it appears to us, that too much time and effort should not be devoted to this aspect of the problem. In the broad movement of the working class it is most important to see things in their true proportions. We should be careful not to carry with us too many relics of the internal faction struggle that dominated our activity for so long a time.

The completely independent course in the class struggle, which our preparations for the new party enjoin upon us, gives us at the same time the opportunity to contrast our policy to that of the Stalinists before the workers in actual practice. This is the most effective way now to complete the task of annihilating Stalinism and liberating the vanguard labor movement from its disruptive influence. Our strength in the broad workers' movement will grow most rapidly if we appear there, in relation to the Stalinists, not as one faction fighting another, but rather as the representatives of the fundamental interests of the class opposing a policy of sabotage and disruption based on interests alien to those of the class. That, in fact, is how the conflict stands in reality. It is up to us to make it clear, in practice, in the whole course of our activity, as well as in words.

That is the way to ensure success in our aim to establish a new and genuine party of Communism without too much delay and to line up the forces for a great forward leap of the revolutionary movement in America. We have not yet set our feet firmly on this path—this we must acknowledge. Our long years of existence as a small faction fighting to restore the line of Marxist principle—a position inseparable from a certain tendency toward sectarianism—have left marks in our habits of thought as well as in our method of work. We have broken with the old position as a faction. Now we must break with the psychology of a faction and appear in all our work as the banner-bearers of an independent party.

BOOKS FOR WORKERS

TEN YEARS—History and Principles of the Left Opposition by Max Shachtman. 79 Pages. 10c. Pioneer Publishers, New York.

At last a pamphlet on the history and fundamentals of the Left Opposition! A serious handicap in educating the newcomers to our movement has been precisely the absence of such a historical sketch. The simplicity and lucidity of style and presentation makes it interesting and informative reading even to the uninitiated.

In reality the pamphlet is a history of the ten years' struggle of the Russian Bolshevik-Leninists against Stalinism in the Soviet Union, as well as internationally, in England and in China. The proof that the "Russian Question" is in reality a problem of world Communism is clearly presented by the author's well-knit story of how the basic theories of the Stalinist bureaucracy flow from the defeat of the West European working class; and the logical consequences of these theories in the Centrist zig-zag of Stalinism in its policies in the Soviet Union, England and China.

"Ten Years" commences by a clear explanation of why a militant worker should be interested in the factional struggle which has wracked the world Communist movement: the absolute indispensability of a revolutionary vanguard organization of the working class, as Comrade Shachtman points out in the introduction. Comrade Shachtman then proceeds with the struggle in 1923 for party democracy in the Russian Communist Party. The struggle is placed on the background of the economic and social difficulties of the Soviet Union. This method, of connecting the political conflicts with their social conditions, and the employment of well chosen quotations from leading spokesmen of the official regime, make the struggles realistic and easily understandable.

The controversies over "The Lessons of October," the theory of socialism in one country, the Anglo-Russian Committee and the British General Strike, and the Chinese Revolution, are so analyzed that, despite the brevity of the sections, all the essentials are expounded. The highly complicated problem of the danger of Thermidor and Bonapartism in the Soviet Union is explained in very simple language.

Because of the highly difficult task of condensing the ten years' struggle of the Left Opposition in a small pamphlet, a number of important omissions are to be expected. In discussing the Opposition's criticism of the draft of the First Five Year Plan, it is essential to stress the contention of our comrades in 1927 that the Plan of the Stalinists meant industrialization at the expense of the working class, rather than at the expense of the non-proletarian elements in Russia; that the living conditions of the workers should increase with the development of industry. These points cannot be overemphasized; the stupendous gains in production of the First Five Year Plan were achieved, to a large degree, at the expense of the living standard of the workers—to a far greater extent than was necessary.

In speaking of socialist planned economy, it would have been well to include a brief paragraph contrasting scientific planning, with constant check-up and experimentation, as against the bureaucratic planning of Stalinism. In this connection, the reference to Trotsky's prediction, in "Whither Russia," on the possibility of a 20% annual increase of production is insufficient. A few words should have been added on how he arrived at this figure; in that way it could be made clear why his figure was realistic and superior to Rykov's and the State Planning Commission.

The Sixth Congress of the Comintern (1928) is handled inadequately. The "third period" of the Sixth Congress was as different from the "third period" of the 10th Plenum (1929) as the views of Bukharin-Lostovets differed from those of Stalin-Molotov. Comrade Shachtman states in reference to the 10th Plenum of the Executive Committee of the Comintern: "It was the Plenum par excellence of the 'third period' which was at first denounced as an opportunistic idea by the Thaelmann-Neumann delegation to the Sixth Congress" (Page 66).

Hardly! The German Stalinists were not inconsistent! Bukharin's "third period" stressed the fact that European economy had exceeded its pre-war level the strengthening of capitalism economically; the conflict between the imperialist powers which would lead to war. According to this theory, the "war danger" was the paramount factor which accelerated the class struggle. Who is there who was in the American C. P. in late 1928 who does not recall how every strike was called a "manifestation of the war danger"?

Molotov's "third period" was a "horse of a different color." The emphasis was on the weakening of capitalist economy, the growing strike wave as a result of "inner contradictions"—Lodz (Poland) strike, Ruhr miners strike, etc. The "third period" became the period of the revolutionary upsurge of the masses, the "final period" of capitalism!

The Sixth Congress was compelled to criticize the policy of Communist building workers' and peasants' parties. (This did not stop the Stalinists from building such parties in India a few months after the Congress!). The Sixth Congress not only accepted the theory of socialism in one country for the Soviet Union, but for the first time divided the countries of the world—and the tasks of the Communists in these countries—according to whether they could build a complete and isolated socialist economy or not! This is important because such is the theoretical basis—despite inconsistencies—for the slogan of "democratic dictatorship of the workers and peasants."

"Ten Years" was written about a year ago, before the victory of Hitlerism. Comrade Shachtman's preface briefly explains the consequences of that fatal event. It would be well if the present pamphlet would be followed by others, on Germany, united front, trade union policies and problems of the American workers. "Ten Years" should be read by all workers who want to understand the conflicts of the past decade in the world Communist movement; so as to better equip themselves in the struggle of today.

Comrades should note a typographical error in the pamphlet. The eighth line of page 6 "Ten Years" should be the last line of page seven; the last line of page 7 should be the eighth line of page 8.

great fields for the revolutionary agitation among the masses in demanding the real democratization of the government and the arming of the people. It should be our task to put forth the democratic slogans in a most energetic manner to support the government so far as its practical steps are really anti-imperialistic, to criticize the tendencies toward compromise. Much can be done if we utilize the declaration of principles of the new government to deepen the anti-imperialist and anti-Kuo Min Tang movement among the masses. It is usual that the violent collisions of the ruling factions give rise to revolutionary movement. What is now lacking is revolutionary leadership. Let us hope that the political crisis created by the Fukien movement will rouse the

Conditions in the Soviet Union

An American Worker's Report on Labor and the Five-Year Plan

Some time ago, a criticism appeared in The Militant for publishing experiences of delegates to Soviet Union on the ground that it would make a bad impression on the average casual reader against the Workers State. Maybe so, but that is just where our weakness lies. Can one fight against disease successfully if he hides its symptoms? I spent almost two years working in the Soviet Union, mostly in meat industry; and even though I wasn't much developed politically one could not help seeing the disastrous effects of the adventurous policy which undermined all the principles of the October revolution. If you will permit, I will give a short sketch of my experience in the Soviet Union.

In August of 1931 I started from New York. On the boat I met a worker from Chicago who also was going to work in the meat industry of the Soviet Union. He was a member of the Communist Party and, just like many of Stalin's followers, he went to the Soviet Union to get a nice soft place and stay there for good. Arriving in Moscow we were taken to a hotel, and, after a little rest, went out for a walk passing by numerous broad fields. My friend, in his disillusionment, always managed to avoid passing by them. After one week of our stay in Moscow we were sent to a city called Amvovir in the Caucasus. There we started to work in the meat packing house. At that time the working week was four days' work, fifth day rest, 8 hours day. But because the 14th anniversary of Red October was near it was decided at the trade union meeting that we all work four Soviet weeks (20 days) straight (with no rest) and 9 hours day. The aim was to fulfill the quota that was given to our plant for the months of October and September.

Labor Conditions in Factory
Going to work in the morning we often passed groups of about 150-200 peasants dressed pitifully, some of them bare-footed in the cold winter, escorted by 10 to 12 police officers back to the house of correction (Prison). They are kulaks, said my foreman with whom I walked to work.

Again a new quota was given to our plant to produce a certain minimum number of tons of meat in the next 2 months. A meeting was called after work which was attended by all workers (the guard at the gate will not let anyone go home until the meeting is over). The speaker reads the new plan from the center and tells the workers not to be frightened by the big task given to them, since there is nothing too hard for real Bolsheviks. A functionary proposes that we add to the quota 25%. Does anyone oppose that? Silence. Accepted. The political papers next day bring reports on the great enthusiasm of the workers for building socialism; they not only accept the plan given them but add a 25% stretch plan; the factory works 9 to 10 hours a day until the plan is fulfilled.

Stalinist "Political Education"

A couple of days later the workers in my department complained that they are getting pigs as small as 25-40 pounds and with that they cannot fill the share given them. It can't be helped. The government brain quota was so big that the kollektives had to give all their grain to the government and there was none left to feed the pigs, cattle, etc. When in the end of two months our plant fulfilled the plan 85% too much counter-revolutionary influence in the factory and our plant got on the black list.

At the political school which is held in factory two times a week and three classes are taught, my friend tells about Trotsky's counter-revolutionary propaganda in America. He should have been killed, said one of the functionaries. Why don't American Communists kill him, asks another. Then my friend explains that Trotsky is in Turkey and not in America.

The New Wage Policy
Again there is turn in line of wages. Comrade Stalin says there must be a wider difference in wages between the professional and non-professional workers. Many Party members who hold responsible jobs cannot be enthusiastic in fulfilling their tasks because the wages of Party members is limited to only 250 rubles a month. From then on there is no limit to the wages of members. (The lowest wage for unskilled is 45 rubles a month) and the wages of lower status should be fixed according to his own efficiency. A few days later I noticed a man with book and watch standing behind me and checking up the work performed within certain period of time. It reminded me of an incident when a revolutionary union controlled by Stalinists in America issued a call to the workers of Chicago parking houses to strike against such enslaving methods (bonus system).

Then came the fever of liquidating classes. Some local newspapers declared that by spring, 1933, the classes will be liquidated. (I did not read Pravda because I did not receive it although I subscribed to it). The Police used Stalin's methods in liquidating classes by throwing in jail those peasants that tried to sell their produce in the open market. That often led to violent outbreaks and often the peasants got support from the workers in the struggle against the red Police, the workers knowing that the bazaar is the only place where there is still something to buy.

The following liquidation of

"Gimme a Match"

The timber trunks of the Diamond Match Company are located on the steep slopes of the Nevada mountains. Here workers daily risk their lives in the dangerous task of felling the trees for the miserable wage of three or four dollars a day. In addition to this they are employed for at least five months out of the year due to the heavy snows which make logging impossible for the winter months.

They are forced to live in camps or "barracks" hastily and poorly constructed. Built low and of third grade cut lumber, they are not in summer and cold in winter. There are no bathing facilities and the workers can use their rest (Sunday) in "bathing" only. For this they must use our old tin can or bucket they can find. The bed clothing consists generally of old, ragged blankets which have been in use for years; since the camps are seldom or never fumigated bug bugs and other vermin abound. The food served is of the poorest quality.

In the box factories of the company in California women and girls are employed doing the same work as men but at a much lower wage. In the match factories proper the exploitation of children is common, the match companies being one of the worst for this.

But "the picture of life's other side" in the case of the Diamond Match Company is quite different. While the workers toil at these low wages and under such inhuman conditions the company reports net profits of nearly $2,000,000 every year since 1927 and in 1928 announced undistributed profits of $500,000. The Capital Stock of $16,000,000 is held by about 3500 stock holders.

No starvation here. No heart-breaking back-breaking toil for these. No sleeping in filthy vermin infested bunks for these parasites. They may live in palatial homes, take vacations to Europe and marry their daughters to the counts and no accounts of the degenerated nobility of the Eastern Hemisphere. And to the latter at least they are welcome.

The Diamond Match Company is opposed to labor unions and all other "anti-American" organizations. They believe in the "freedom" of the individual. For the maintenance of this "principle" they are willing to spend thousands of dollars which they have squeezed from the hides of the workers. So long as the workers remain merely as "individuals" the profits of the company are not endangered. But when the workers organize and conduct their struggles against their exploiters as one man it will be time then for the bosses to march forward with the American flag in one hand and a club in the other and try to drive the workers back into line.

What is true of the Diamond Match Company is true for all the others of the American boss class. That is why they are for the industrial control bill and the NIRA. They want to make strikes and labor unions illegal. That is why the workers must solidly organize today to be ready for the big fight tomorrow.

power and obtain greater control over it, encounters the necessity, at a certain stage, of new markets for capital and commodities. This the Hull Tariff proposal seeks to prepare for. In fact the most urgent need of American imperialism is a greater share in the already divided world. Otherwise the decay will be faster and the class storms more violent. No matter which road America follows she cannot avoid these problems.

The administration knows what is needed in relation to the internal reorganization attempted under the NRA. Besides the Dollar-Pound struggle, Washington is taking four other important steps. Two of them are well under way. They are the recognition of the USSR and the Hull Tariff proposal and Tariff agreements with other countries in Latin America and Europe. The two others are the plan to establish a privately owned export credit bank, through which the RFC intends to finance American exports, and the setting up of export expansion machinery with George Peck in charge. Each step listed is a part of a general plan to cope with the above burning problem of American imperialism.

American imperialism must do things in a big way in order to maintain her dominating world position. At the Pan-American conference the U. S. handles a whole continent which she hopes to place more firmly under her domination.

Notes of the Week

"FORTUNATELY, I think," thinks General Electric's Owen D. Young, "it will be easy to persuade our people that it is their duty to consume luxuries in order to provide an import balance so that our cotton and our copper may be exported. Such a personal sacrifice for the public economic welfare can be safely predicted."

Mr. Young made this warm spiel for a cold winter evening in the New York Times last Sunday. As luxuries he classes: Coffee, tea, fruit, wine, bananas, etc. Considering all sides of the question very carefully, we cannot help reaching the conclusion that the G. E. S. man is not too unduly optimistic. We know at least half a dozen unemployed ourselves that would readily make the sacrifice, in course, in line with the worthy gentleman's "division of consumption" theory of economy, and corresponding to current codes of fair competition, the American unemployed might ask, in return for the conviction that it is their duty to consume luxuries—the concession that it be their privilege to consume also some necessities: Such as bread, butter, pork chops and potatoes, for instance.

But until the necessary arrangements for this sort of a square business deal are concluded, we must unfortunately content ourselves with the luxury of Mr. Young's ingenious philosophy. We could not quite make the sacrifice of consuming it whole. Yet we will nibble at it.

The gist of the idea is that the old conception of world economy being based on an international division of labor has gone haywire. Modern technique, communication, transportation have made it possible for every country to build up its own manufactures, its own industry. And, as a matter of fact, Mr. Young rightly finds, most countries are quite content that this should be so. This is called the new trend to nationalism.

Of course England needs India's cotton and France the Saar's iron ore and Germany the potassium of Alsace-Lorraine. But that lies in the realm of a division of consumption rather than of labor. And in this same realm of the division of consumption, our nation is the most advantageous. Its labor is to consume the luxuries and to furnish for the consumption of the others, our cotton and our copper. Out of pure goodness of heart we will also offer for consumption to the budding national industries our motors and generators and dynamos.

So much for the general outline of the future. The whole plan is based on an augury that Mr. Young has plucked from his own intellectual Olympus that we have been wrong in thinking that a compressed world—compressed by the material rapprochement offered by wireless and radio and aviation—breaks down national barriers. It raises them instead. An ordinary mortal might be inclined to ask, how? This is because he is not acquainted four-dimensional approach of Mr. Young, however.

Still, if our oracle leaves us in doubt as to how—we can be made quite clear as to why it should be so. American business stands to gain all around by the new nationalisms. While fostering cultural exchanges with the other countries, American big business, in addition to the philosophic satisfaction of nurturing all the new nationalisms, can, as a sort of a by-product find a market for its capital export. And if the different nationalisms come to a clash of arms in their consumption of cotton, potassium or iron ore, that's just too bad. But Uncle Sam will always be there to pull the remnants out of the fire and the big boys of Wall Street will be expecting the American masses to lend a hand—it will all be for the sake of doing their duty to consume more luxuries.

Finally, as an illustration that it is possible for a nation militated in the old order of industrial nations to build up a national economy all its own without dependence on the rest of the world, Mr. Young offers as the example of Russia. If, by some mystic or messianic formula socialism can be built in one country, why can't capitalism. Another big victory for Stalin's diplomacy.

In the meantime, since the "re-adjustment in this field (the new division of consumptive power) may not be abrupt," Owen Young consoles us, "Russia... will provide a cushion, temporarily at least, for diminishing trade in manufactured necessities."

Proletarian Party Youth Group Out

(Editorial Note.—The crisis of the labor movement, which affects all workers' organizations more or less, is seizing the Proletarian Party, a sectarian offshoot of American Stalinism, with particular devastation. Now it is bringing a convulsion in the Proletarian Youth League, the youth section of the Party, as the following statement of resignation signed by thirteen members, reveals.)

PROLETARIAN PARTY
Detroit, Michigan
December 5, 1933.

Comrades:
Following is a letter that was submitted to the P. Y. L. (Proletarian Youth League) of America, local Detroit on Thursday, Nov. 30, 1933; severing our connections with that organization. We are sending this letter to The Militant, Workers' Arg, Proletarian News, and Daily Worker for the purpose of showing our reasons for resignation:

Comrades:
Due to the following conditions existing in the P. Y. L., we the undersigned do hereby resign from the above mentioned organization:
1. The P. Y. L. makes no attempt to become the revolutionary vanguard of the working class youth. This is proven by its failure to participate in the everyday struggle and the demands of the workers, the means by which they can prove to the workers the correctness of their position.

2. The P. Y. L. maintains that there is no Negro or Agrarian problem and that the approach taken toward them should be the same as that taken toward all other workers, which means that the P. Y. L., in presenting no demands for these groups have no way of contacting them.

3. The P. Y. L. as an organization does not give its members the right to formulate its activities, even on the principles laid down by the parent organization, the P. P. (Proletarian Party). Instead, the Proletarian Party insists that the P. Y. L.'s entire N. E. C. be composed of members of the Youth League who are also party members, which is an open attempt by the P. P. to establish a bureaucratic element of P. P. members to control the problems of the P. Y. L.

4. Although the P. P. has a member sitting in on all business meetings of the P. Y. L., a non-party representative of the P. Y. L. cannot sit in on any meeting of the P. P., even those in which the problems of youth are discussed.

We feel that because of the P. P.'s absolute control of the P. Y. L.'s business, it is our duty to either join the party, so that we can help formulate the line of action which the P. Y. L. shall follow, or else leave the youth league.

Therefore, the principles and organizational structure of the P. P., being of a sectarian and bureaucratic nature, which makes it impossible to serve as the political party which will emancipate the workers, we, as Communists, hand in our resignations.

Philadelphia Gripped by Transport Strike

NRA and Labor Leaders Combine to "Outlaw" Workers' Fight for Bread

Philadelphia.—Philadelphia is labor's latest battlefield. Class struggle looks horns with class collaboration and outright strike-breaking. The movement of the workers demonstrates its inherent strength, unspent vitality and capacity for struggle by breaking out of the bonds set for it by labor administration "friends" and "leaders". And, also it is refuting those disciplines who for years have been shouting "all is dead in the A. F. of L. company unions." Pushing upward against tremendous pressure 15,000 workers in various fields of transportation are out on strike. The entire police force is on "riot mobilization," howls are up for U. S. Marines, the leading gentry of the National Labor Board plead for "peace and patience," the local "friendly" Record shouts "Do Not Strike". To finish it off in classic manner, Daniel J. Tobin, International President of the Union denounces the strike as "outlaw".

Causes of the Strike

What is this strike? In short it is a revolt against the conditions the NRA is defending. With inevitable logic the organized workers found their way to class struggle. The urgent need of labor to protect itself and its organizations made this action imperative. The NRA is demonstrating the hollow-ness of its impartiality and defense of labor. Facing the realities of class conflict it can betray and betray, but not with impunity nor for long without a crack-up. This is what is happening.

Three weeks ago the drivers of the "Yellow," "Quaker" and "Brown and White" Taxicab companies went out on strike in defense of their union, one hundred percent. The cab companies are all part of Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co.—the transit trust here—backbone of the open shop and company union (Mitten plan). The taxi men are organized into the Taxi Drivers Union of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Stablemen and Helpers of the A. F. of L. and the socialist influence. A militant strike policy and sympathy of the city's workers found the P. R. T.—bankers—Vare machine combine adamant. Attacked from all sides—police and gangsters on one hand, and pressure of the National Labor Board on the other, the union agreed to arbitration. The P. R. T. rejected the offer and refused to reinstate the strikers to their jobs.

Hold Torgler Despite Fire Trial Verdict

The Leipzig Supreme Court has found Torgler, Dimitroff, Popoff and Tanev not guilty in the infamous Reichstag fire-trial recently concluded in Nazi Germany. The flimsy character of the frame-up against these comrades was clear to all. Even the world capitalist press was compelled to admit the innocence of the defendants.

The decision of the Leipzig Court is a maneuver to quiet the rising wave of protest against Hitler terror. It further attempts to whitewash the German Fascist Party, which according to all available evidence, is directly responsible for the notorious Reichstag fire. The verdict does not mean the freedom of Torgler, Dimitroff, Popoff and Tanev. Their lives are still in danger. The Nazis blood-bath will release these working class prisoners only under the greatest pressure. Already, reports in the press tell of Hitler's plan to put Torgler on trial for "high treason". The threats of Goebbels, Rosenberg and other Fascist murderers against the four defendants can only be frustrated by the active protest of all workers and workers' organizations.

A movement has been set on foot which demands "the immediate and safe release of Dimitroff, Torgler, Tanev, and Popoff into the hands of the International Committee now in Leipzig." The existing "National Committee to Aid the Victims of German Fascism" should be broadened into a genuine united front of all workers' organizations which will be able to arouse the American working class in defense of Torgler, Dimitroff, Popoff and Tanev.

Roosevelt's "Planned Work" A Worker's Report

"Six months of this and I'll be fit for the lunatic asylum"—this remark of a former taxicab driver sums up the attitude of the C. W. A. workers to the diabolical nonsense which they must go through in order to qualify for the Roosevelt Dole in Prospect Park, Brooklyn.

It is not that we are forced to do hard work, for long hours at low wages. No, we spend 8 hours a day going through the motions of work. Shovelling dirt on a truck only to see it dumped back exactly where it was taken from. Carrying sand in shovels for about 25 yards while wheelbarrows to say nothing of trucks are going idle. Then being told "don't take a full shovel, that piles got to do you, men, for the rest of the day"—Then when we get into a group to talk to the foreman again speaks. "Say boys, don't stand around talking, you'll be getting me in wrong. Take it easy but act as though you were doing something." So, we start to "work"—push the shovel slowly into the pile of dirt, lean upon it for a while, pick it up, dump half the dirt off and with slow and measured tread carry a couple of hand-fuls of earth some 25 yards.

What the Workers Talk About

We walk back in a group and the mental confusion of the unemployed is revealed in the conversation. "Father Coughlin is right. What we need is to bring silver back." "You know Roosevelt is using some of Stalin's ideas." "What this country needs is two or three Mussolinis." In two things the great majority are agreed. 1. Roosevelt is doing his best for us. 2. The bankers are fighting Roosevelt and are also responsible for the crisis. The third most popular illusion is the wisdom, courage and militancy of Father Coughlin as a champion of the "people".

Our gang started to work November 1, just before the city election. We were all "relief cases". We are assigned to Prospect Park. Since our transfer to the C. W. A. we work 8 hours a day, three days a week and get $13. The tasks are varied. Gathering leaves, planting trees, spreading a compost of earth and manure around trees, digging ditches, sweeping streets, etc., etc.

One of our first tasks under Roosevelt's "Five Year Plan" is characteristic of the rest. We were put to work on a pile of manure. The pile was quite large and of irregular shape, high in the center and sloping down towards ragged edges. A couple of men, with an "engineer" in charge, took stakes and cord and marked the pile off into a rectangle. Then with shovels and forks our gang of 25 went to work with a will. At the end of the day the manure pile was a beautiful rectangle, edges square and straight as a die, and of uniform height throughout.

A Pedestal of Manure

A pedestal of manure! A statue of the author of the New Deal from the same material would have completed the picture. Two or three days later the pile was carted away. "If you all take an interest in this here work, they'll promote you to the lunatic asylum," said a Negro worker after that incident.

"There'll be no work on Christmas but you'll have to come in another day to make up for it," we were told. "Give me some real work to do, and I'll make up for a work of Christmases in the next two hours," said an old man.

Former building trade workers, chauffeurs, bakers, clothing workers—we stand and question our own sanity for putting up with this nonsense. There is nothing to do, it is cold and miserable and we wait learning on our shovels, waiting for quitting time. A whistle blows, we stop doing nothing and start for home.

At first we were under the jurisdiction of the City but have since been transferred to the C. W. A. Two weeks passed without pay. The word was passed around—"No pay, no work", and in short order a parade of about 50% of the entire crew were marching to the main office. There, with plenty of police around, the cause of the delay was explained. Similar and much more dramatic action by other groups in the City and also throughout the nation show that the spirit of the unemployed is not at all broken and also reveal a deep dissatisfaction with the nature of the "work".

Vandals Wreck League Hall

Brooklyn.—In recent weeks two attempts were made to destroy the Brownsville headquarters of the Communist League. Last Wednesday morning, Dec. 20th, the banner on the wall reading: "For a New Communist International" was burned; the wall itself displaying black marks of burning. No other part of the hall was touched showing that the vandals were frightened by their own deeds.

Wednesday, Dec. 27th, another raid of the headquarters took place. Banners, articles on the bulletin board, and pictures of Lenin and Trotsky were torn from the wall. The picture of the latter was torn in shreds. The tea-cups in the kitchen were broken, open, Mil-litants and pamphlets ripped, thrown over the floors and some stolen. Again some fear of discovery must have ended the raid at this point.

There is little doubt as to who is responsible for these raids. It is not the first time that the Stallions have broken into headquarters of the Communist League and have stolen or destroyed some of its material.

Amalgamated Union Formulates Program of Demands

A LETTER FROM MOONEY

California State Prison
San Quentin, Calif.
November 18, 1933.

My dear Comrades and Fellow Unionists:

During the month of January of this year, I issued a call for a United Front of all working class organizations to send delegates to the Free Tom Mooney Congress, held in Chicago, April 29 to May 1, inclusive.

Under my direction and instructions, the Tom Mooney Molders' Defense Committee spent almost $2,000 to organize that Congress. It was not my intention with the Mooney case. Such a procedure would naturally cause confusion in the minds of the working class, receiving appeals from two separate organizations, from two different parts of the country, for the same purpose.

No Report of Congress

Out of the Free Tom Mooney Congress came the NATIONAL TOM MOONEY COUNCIL OF ACTION, with headquarters in New York City. This information I learned several weeks after the Congress adjourned. During the Congress, I received one telegram. I never did receive a report from the Congress, or any one connected with it, as to just what took place. I did not receive a copy of the Congress resolution, until three weeks after its adjournment. No one attending that Congress has taken the trouble to make a report to me of what actually happened there.

A month after the Congress adjourned, I was told that a debt of $2,000 connected with the Congress, was still unpaid. From another source, I learned that each of the delegates to that Congress were pledged to return to their home organizations, and collect their quota to pay off that debt.

During the latter part of May, the National Tom Mooney Council of Action organized a National Tom Mooney Tag Day, using the organizational machinery of the International Labor Defense to carry this work to a conclusion. The first object of this Tag Day, was to liquidate the Congress debt of which I was first informed to be $2,000, and which I have since been informed, by Roger Baldwin, the Treasurer of the National Tom Mooney Council of Action, to be only $1,500.

Want to Hear from Delegates.
Since the Free Tom Mooney Congress adjourned, and the formation of the National Tom Mooney Council of Action, the activities of the Tom Mooney Molders' Defense Committee has been suspended for the lack of funds to carry on the fight. Whether this was deliberately planned or not, I am not now prepared to state, but I would like to get the actual feelings of all of those delegates that attended that Congress—a sort of personal report from each of them as to just took place there—what was the spirit of the delegates towards me, personally, and also towards the Tom Mooney Molders' Defense Committee. Also telling me what sum was raised by you and your organization in the National Tom Mooney Tag Day Campaign, and what other sums have been raised by you or your organization, as pledged as your quota to liquidate the debt left from the Free Tom Mooney Congress and the later sales of Free Tom Mooney stamps.

The Tom Mooney Molders' Defense Committee is penniless, with a debt of $4,000. I have just 60c to my credit on the prison books, and have not been able to order any prison commissaries for the past four months. In spite of this tremendous obstacle, my defense committee is now having prepared a 132-page booklet, exposing this foul conspiracy against me. It will tell the story that I had hoped to tell in my recent trial, but was prevented from doing so by the powerful bankers and industrialists who are in complete control. Just as soon as my defense committee can secure the necessary funds, this booklet will be published. Will you help me do this? I want to circulate these booklets by the hundreds of thousands.

Appeals for New Campaign

Some time during November or December, my attorneys, Frank P. Walsh of New York City, and John F. Finnerty of Washington, D. C., will attempt to secure my freedom on a writ of Habeas Corpus in the United States Supreme Court. A tremendous wave of agitation, demanding my freedom, should precede this move. The United States Senators and Representatives from your state, together with the President and the Attorney General of those United States, should be appealed to cooperate in this move to secure justice for an innocent man.

The efforts of the hotel and restaurant-workers of New York City to obtain a serious improvement in the intolerable conditions now existing in their industry through building up their union, the Hotel and Restaurant Workers' branch of the Amalgamated Food Workers, have now entered on a new and higher phase. Up to now, the major tasks have been to gather forces, and to lead the workers away from the illusions of the NRA and toward a militant policy based on the formulation of concrete demands and the struggle for their enforcement. The new phase consists of the preparation for the enforcement of these demands through a general strike.

Substantial successes are being achieved by the organization drive; thousands of workers have joined in the last few months, and hundreds more are coming in every week. What is still better, the number of workers coming in has been increasing still faster in recent weeks, and particularly since the beginning of the stubbornly-contested strike at the Hotel Montclair.

Big Hotels Organized
Considering the total number of the unorganized workers in the industry, much still remains to be done. But a magnificent beginning has already been made, particularly in the kitchen and dining-room departments of the large hotels, dozens of which are 70% to 95% unionized. In this field, the task is to complete unionization. In those hotels where the union already has members, to organize the houses where the workers are becoming attracted to us because of our consistent program and our activity, and particularly, to broaden the base of the organization among the hundreds and thousands of smaller restaurants now that the peaks of the industry are well on the way to complete organization.

As to the NRA and the codes, the workers are increasingly realizing that they have nothing good to look for in that direction. Both the hotel and the restaurant codes are understood to be nothing but blows directed at the workers, and the apparatus of the NRA for the enforcement of any provisions which seemed to offer some protection for the interests of the workers, has been proved by living experience to be nothing but a hollow sham. The workers now realize that only their own organization can do anything for them.

Demands of the Union
The first step in the new phase of the development of the union was taken last Friday, December 22, when meetings of the dining-room and the kitchen departments dis-by sacrifice of principles can never operate to disillusion workers.

Brooklyn Brotherhood to Come In
Paul Sal-aggio, originator of the planning board and the leading spirit for amalgamation in the early days of the movement, was honored by the assembled delegates and it was unanimously voted to constitute his sisters' local of Boston as Local No. 1 in the new United Shoe and Leather Workers' Union in recognition of his pioneer efforts that culminated in the amalgamation.

The Brooklyn fraternal delegates representing the Brotherhood of Allied Shoe Crafts with 10,000 members announced that they would join the new union very soon, that they had been double-crossed by their leaders and that one local had already torn up its charter. In anticipation of trouble with defiant officials of the old union whom it was voted to depose, the planning board (the original rank and file body) was directed to continue its existence until the last bolt is in place. As matters stand at the time of writing certain officials of both the National and the Protective have expressed defiance of the order directing them to give up January 15, but it appears that this time the momentum of the amalgamation movement is too great for them to resist.

It was voted to hold the next biennial convention in St. Louis on the first Monday of November 1935. —SHOE WORKER.

Shoe Workers Amalgamate Unions at Historic Convention at Boston

Boston.—The amalgamation convention of independent shoe workers' unions which has been meeting in Boston since early December came to a close on the 21st after a stormy but successful session of 10 days. This convention transformed amalgamation from a hope to an accomplished fact by bringing into being the United Shoe and Leather Workers Union. It was marked by threatened sabotage from out-going reactionary officialdom on the one hand and by disruptive maneuvers of the Stalinists on the other, but repulsed both determinedly. New hopes of strength in unity have been aroused.

Resolutions of a political nature adopted by the convention are the harbinger of a more developed political consciousness in the minds of the American worker. Already bitter experiences have stripped bandages from the eyes of this group of workers concerning the NRA and its paraphernalia.

60,000 Workers Represented

A group of 184 delegates represented some 60,000 shoe workers of 5 formerly independent unions with locals from Maine to Missouri. The National Shoe Workers' Association had 79 delegates, the Shoe Workers' Protective Union 59, the Independent Shoe Workers' Union of Salem 16, the Shoe and Leather Workers' Industrial Union of New York 28, and the Brotherhood of Greater New York 2. In addition there were fraternal delegates and observers from other independent unions in other parts of the country.

The Shoe and Leather Workers' Industrial Union, affiliated with the Trade Union Unity League, furnished the first discordant note in the convention by their shameful attempt to back-down on their previously written agreement with the provisional committee, which was that they would attend the convention as an independent union like the others, that they would sever their connection with the T.U.U.L.

Bitter Fight over T. U. U. L.

A bitter fight on the floor followed their attempt to have the question decided by referendum. Their plea of misunderstanding the terms of the agreement was completely exposed as the lie it was by two members of their own delegation who subsequently took the floor. The first, Frank Costello, secretary of the resolutions committee, dramatically offered his resignation in view of the attitude of the leaders of his New York delegation who obviously placed the interests of the T. U. U. L. ahead of amalgamation. This was a high point of the convention as this worker tore his badge from his chest, declared any communist leanings and declared himself "in fact a regulation catholic". As he prepared to leave his place, he was surrounded by agitated delegates who, with cries of "No! No!" persuaded him to remain.

He was quickly followed by another member of that delegation who seconded Costello's views, and made clear to all delegates that the New York rank and file were overwhelmingly in favor of amalgamation. He stated further with some bitterness that the principal cause of the delay in their joining the amalgamation movement was their being misinformed as to the attitude of the New England shoe workers toward the A. F. of L. As far as he was concerned he was "against the A. F. of L., the T.U.U.L. or any other hell"—which sums up the disillusionment of most of these workers. The Industrial Union delegation was finally forced to comply and pledged itself anew to sever its connections with the T. U. U. L.

Old Officers Removed

A resolution to abolish all offices of the several independent unions on January 15 and to elect a coordinating committee of 15 to handle the affairs of the new union until newly elected officers take up their duties in April, was adopted by an overwhelming majority. This body-blow to deposed salaried officials of the old unions set off fireworks.

W. B. Mahan, general organizer of the National Shoe Workers' Association openly defied this convention decision in a statement published later in a newspaper stating that he would not give up control of his organization, unless so instructed by the Lynn Shoe workers, and if the new coordinating committee expected him to comply then they lacked intelligence. A Mrs. McGee, official of a Lynn Stitches' local, unsuccessfully attempted to recall that local's delegates at a meeting the same night. Officials of the Shoe Workers' Protective Union at a similar meeting decide likewise to resist being supplanted.

When this news broke on the floor of the convention the next morning the anger of the delegates threw that body into an uproar and the hooting and jeering of Mahan's name bodied ill for any attempts of old union officials might make to sabotage the amalgamation about to be realized after a difficult year's work. There was no mistaking the temper of the rank and file.

New Constitution Discussed

With the opening of discussions on the floor of the draft of a constitution prepared by the constitution committee a difficult part of the convention's task started. A 53-page document it was first decided to discuss and vote on each article separately. After a day and a half it became apparent to all that such a procedure would require several weeks to complete consideration of the entire document. The major cause of the slow progress lay in the petty obstructive tactics of the Stalinist delegation of the New York Industrial Union. Their extended criticism of petty details in each article acted to further discredit them. As a consequence they failed to arouse sympathy and support for the really meritorious proposals of industrial unionism when it was put forth.

The role of the T. U. U. L. delegates as impediments to rapid progress was recognized by the convention when a motion was finally made and carried to recommit the draft to the constitution committee which should confer with 2 representatives of the New York delegation and iron out further differences and then return the document to the delegates for consideration. This was done. The constitutional committee reappeared before the convention the next day with the results of their conference. The two added delegates had requested and were granted changes amounting in all to twelve words!

Local Autonomy in New Union

Following further consideration by the convention delegates of certain parts of the proposed constitution it was voted to submit the proposed constitution to referendum of all locals for discussion and amendment or approval.

As finally adopted for submission to referendum the constitution incorporates certain features of a progressive nature compared with this industry's old unions. Among these are provisions for including in their ranks workers in industries closely allied to them: leather workers, counter-makers, wooden-heel makers, last and pattern-makers and workers in foot-wear industries generally. There is also provision for the recall of officers by vote of 5 locals of a District. Provision for local autonomy means no local charter may be revoked except after trial by other locals of its district, and means also that the form of organization shall be decided by each district. Thus the New York Industrial Union may retain its present form. General officers are to be a General organizer and a General Secretary-Treasurer. A general executive board of 21 members will represent 3 major districts.

Contradictory Resolutions

Among the resolutions adopted by the convention were these: (1) Condemnation of the NRA as not operable to the interests of workers (2) Demand for the freedom of the Scottshoro boys. (3) Demand for the unconditional release of Tom Mooney. (4) For unemployment insurance, cost to be borne by the government and employers. (5) Petitioning the National Recovery Board for an appropriation by the Federal Government of $25,000,000 for the purchase and distribution of shoes for the needy. (6) All labor leaders should withdraw from the National Recovery Board and the Labor Advisory Board. (7) Against compulsory arbitration. (8) For reopening consideration of the NRA shoe code and a demand for the 30 hour week and minimum weekly wage for unskilled of $18. (9) In commendation of Father Coughlin, the radio priest for the good work he is doing for the workers!

In connection with this last resolution it must be told that Israel Zimmerman, a well-known Lovestonite, voted in favor of the Coughlin resolution. This rankst kind of opportunism that fails to tell the workers, for example, that the inflation program advocated by Coughlin is the most vicious attack on the income and the welfare of the working class, cannot be roudminded to be a General organizer and a

The Reactionary Union Officialdom

In discussing the rise and fall of the Railroad Unions in this series of articles we want at the very beginning to make ourselves clear on a few questions. In the first place we not only admit, but point out to the workers repeatedly, that every thing we have got so far such as shorter hours, better wages and working conditions, have been brought about by the craft unions on the railroads. We further admit and also point out that the craft union was a progressive force as long as that kind of organization was in a position to function to the interests of its membership. It was only when industrial development outgrew the craft system of organization that the Brotherhood leadership and program gradually became more and more reactionary.

We must bear in mind that no human institution ever became so useless and reactionary that it did not benefit a few who live on special privilege. This was true of chattel slavery and Czarism, and it holds equally good in Fascism. This fundamental principle now operates in the railroad brotherhoods. A few, the well paid officials, benefit by keeping the railroad workers divided in 21 independent unions in one industry, while the members, the many, suffer by this arrangement. It is just on account of this development that the interest of the brotherhood officials becomes more and more separated from that of the rank and file, and we run into the contradictions which flow from these conditions constantly when we are trying to introduce needed changes in the structure and program of the railroad crafts.

We find the officials against us on every turn because they benefit by keeping things in the railroad unions as they are. Their fat and easy jobs depend upon keeping the railroad workers divided and ignorant concerning their best interest. That is the reason why such leadership must protect itself from the rank and file by gag laws and a censored labor press. A craft union official cannot afford to permit progressive ideas to circulate freely among the membership. It would be detrimental to his interest no matter how beneficial it would be to the members.

It is to the interest of the R. R. unions to amalgamate, but it is against the union officials. It is for the best interest of the railroad workers to have free expression in their unions, but such a change from the present gag rule would be destructive to the special privileges enjoyed by the craft bureaucrats.

Any proposal for concerted and aggressive action for wages, pensions or working conditions and shorter hours by the railroad workers would be against the best interest of the officials because the craft system will prove itself out of date in such a movement and its leadership would be compelled to expose its bankruptcy to lead in such a struggle. In other words, we have arrived at a stage of development in the railroad brotherhoods where the membership will find its leadership arrayed against them on every constructive proposal.

It is to the interest of every railroad worker to understand this and act accordingly. But we cannot remedy these conditions by leaving the union and doing nothing. We are only entitled to criticize the performances of others when we propose something better ourselves. We must stay with the organized workers wherever they are and do good and faithful work behind constructive proposals and, by this practical method in dealing with every day problems of the workers in their unions, show them the needed changes in the program, leadership and structure of the railroad unions.

—A. E.

The Teachers and the Class Struggle

One reason teachers have been slow to struggle is that they constituted an aristocratic stratum of the working class. Their wage level was higher than the average wage level of the workers. They enjoyed job security to a great extent and all sorts of perquisites of the worker in minor or factory never had under capitalist rule. And on top of that they are permeated with bourgeois ideology to a degree that places them, in this sense, at the rear of the class.

But all that is beginning to change now. The crisis is affecting them ruthlessly. The signs point to resistance by them against the attacks on their teaching and living conditions.

Teachers' salaries in New York and elsewhere are fixed by law and are changeable only by legislative action in the state legislatures or local governmental agency. In the first three years of the crisis prices fell precipitately. Teachers' wages, consequently, which apparently remained fixed actually rose in purchasing value. This appreciation together with the yearly increments made mandatory under the law in some cities, constituted a more or less steady improvement in their condition.

Only when the crisis began to interfere with the smooth functioning of this ideal set-up, as in Chicago where no wages were paid for the better part of a year, did the teachers put up some kind of a fight. In New York the state legislature cut wages about six percent. Five hundred teachers joined the Teachers Union in New York City in the period of the wage cut fight. Schools everywhere are closing or curtailing their terms. Teachers' wages are in arrears and are piling up. Further wage cuts are impending. The conditions for organized resistance are maturing.

In New York the defense fight is centering around the attempt by one means or another to prevent legislative reduction of wages and reduction or abolishment of increments. In itself this fight is correct. But it is not sufficient even from the point of view of defeating attempts to cut wages.

Wages are reduced in other ways than by legislative action. The government is making determined efforts to drive prices up to, at least the 1926 level. With wages fixed up by legislative action the rising cost of living will constitute a wage cut. If the government resorts to currency inflation to accomplish its purpose the real wage cut will be drastic.

The experience of the inflation of 1918-19 is very instructive. Teachers' wages then were fixed by law. Within that period the average wage of the teachers on a national scale was increased by 37.4 per cent. But, as a result of the currency inflation prices rose 116.8 percent. Consequently, teachers' salaries, measured in terms of their real purchasing power, fell to 62.3 of the 1918 basis a practical wage cut of 37.7 per cent.

It follows that even a successful fight against legislative reductions of wages will not, necessarily, prevent wage cuts. That does not mean that this fight should be abandoned. It means that it should be broadened.

Just as the workers struggle for higher wages to keep pace with rising prices so should the teachers organize and fight for higher wages to meet the increase in the cost of living.

Successfull Meet in Brownsville

Defying and protesting the threats of the Stalinists, over 500 workers, including several dozen Communist party members and sympathizers, and a labor jury representing five workers organizations and the American Civil Liberties Union attended on Wednesday evening, December 20th, the Brownsville meeting of the Communist League on Russian recognition and the Communist International. This meeting was held after the disruption by the Stalinists of the previous Thursday evening's meeting on the same subject. The workers' guard was well prepared to insure an orderly meeting. In addition, representatives of the Conference for Progressive Labor Action, the Jewish Workers Party (Left Poole Zion), the Industrial Workers of the World, the Workers Unemployed League, the 22 A. D. Branch of the Socialist Party and the American Civil Liberties Union were present as a workers jury to place the responsibility for any attempted disruption of the meeting.

Two speeches from the floor attracted much interest. First, that of a Jewish worker who prefaced his criticism of comrade Shachtman's speech by condemning the hoodlunk tactics of the Stalinists which he witnessed at the preceding Thursday evening meeting. Second, that of a young girl, former member of the Young Communist League and Unemployed Council, who is well known to the Brownsville Left wing workers for her militancy. She stated that she did not agree with the program of the Communist League, but strongly condemned the members of the Communist party who had criticized A. D. Schachtman's record in the C. P. She sharply scored the disruptive hoodlunk tactics of the Stalinists in breaking up workers' meetings and cited the previous meeting of the Communist League, at which she had been present, as an example. Her speech was received with great enthusiasm by overwhelming majority of the workers present. They showed their approval of workers' democracy. The Communist League scored another victory in Brownsville. It will nonetheless remain on guard.

A Picture of the League Today

A look at the League today, in its palpitating growth throughout the country and the excellent types of serious fighters in its ranks, offers a really encouraging picture. It is a far cry now from the time when those who expelled us from the official party scornfully dubbed us the "three generals without an army." Still, there is no intention at all on my part to exaggerate our numbers and influence or to create false impressions of a greater strength than actually exists. But the League is making a place for itself the conditions now developing in the country.

Growth of the League

With a total of 28 branches spread today from coast to coast, including Canada, we have more than doubled our membership since the last National Conference two years ago. On the recent national tour larger audiences than before were attracted to our meetings. Including those held in New York City, a total of over 4,000 advanced workers participated in the meetings and heard our proposal for a new party. We can say today that the League has definitely become the standard bearer of the future revolutionary party. It reflects not only this new current but steps on the scene as the herald of the future upward curve in the working class movement as a whole. That is why the revolutionary youth responds so readily to the extent that the Spartacus Youth movement has grown up within the last year, and a half from almost nothing to about a dozen live active branches. It is also the explanation of the particularly frantic onslaughts upon us by the Stalinist bureaucrats.

What a glaring contrast this presents. On the one hand the League surging forward, teeming with life and vitality, attracting to its banner the more conscious Marxist students; the League surging forward in accordance with the trends and direction of future struggles. On the other hand the Stalinist party, belonging to the past, bringing out from the arsenals of reaction the methods of gangsterism which have long ago been properly branded as a curse to the American labor movement.

The Youth on the March.

In Chicago where the Stalinist party, infuriated by the progress we had made, came organized in large numbers to break up the meeting held on my tour, two new League branches have since emerged. That is a most fitting answer. To it can be added the fact, which augurs well for further progress, that in Chicago our youth movement is perhaps the most active of any place in the country. Two live Spartacus clubs already exist there. The Chicago Workers' School, directed by comrade Goldman has become an excellent supplementary institution reinforcing the Marxist foundation of the movement. With a total of over one hundred enrollments, the school is now expanding and forming branches in various parts of the city. The Friends of the Militant Club and an influential Italian workers' club complete the Chicago picture.

To the misguided workers who participated in the Stalinist black-jack expedition these developments should be telling proof of the falsity of such methods. They will only produce the kind of repercussions which return to annihilate their instructors. In the final analysis the issues of the movement, and the positive ideas which grow out of them, will always have to be considered squarely. Personally, I noticed that those who performed the hoodlunk role in this instance were not at all enthusiastic about it. On the other hand the League members and other workers who defended the meeting were in high spirits. They were defending the principles of democracy and free speech in the labor movement. This is something worth making a fight for. In this the League already today performs a service which will be of much greater importance in the future sharp conflicts to be fought with the capitalist agents in the ranks of organized labor.

Test of Political Position

Will the League play a serious part in the grandiose perspective for rising labor militancy speeded on by the structural changes of American national economy? That, after all, is the decisive question. For a young organization there is no great tradition to point to. But there is such a thing as a test of political position in the crucible of events. In this respect we have found our position standing firm as a rock.

There is the great hope for the future. Still we are today very small for the big job ahead. In recognition of this one of our comrades, a well drilled from Oregon, wrote us the other day asking the very pertinent question: "In the awakening which is now beginning will not our forces be too small? There is so much to be done. Will we not be altogether too late?"

Today we stand before the coming storms. A few recent strikes, notably the Philadelphia transportation strike, indicate the resistance which is gathering against the pressure of degrading working class conditions. And we need not expect in advance that international union officials or the N.R.A. labor boards will in every case succeed in smothering the light. On the contrary, even the very conservative unions will be forced to take some steps forward. In preparation for that the League is also taking its first steps towards its announced objective of rebuilding the Left wing in the trade unions.

The Trend of the Future.

The accomplishments are modest so far. Not only that, but it must be said that in view of the imminence of the job ahead our own weakness in this field is all the more apparent. The steps which have been taken are reflected in The Militant. In union and strike activities of our comrades in New York, Minnesota, Los Angeles, and elsewhere. But, as an indication for the future, it is noteworthy that in two separate points in the Pittsburgh steel region members of the League have already taken the initiative and become the most active organizers of newly established local unions of the A. F. of L.

The Unemployment Movement

A further good indication for future trends is afforded by the examples of the Minneapolis comrades. They have been in the very

Militant Builders

We want to address a few remarks to our builders. It is upon them that The Militant depends for extension into new and wider fields. It is to them also that the planned transformation of The Militant into an agitation paper will have great significance. It will facilitate their work.

We aim to popularize The Militant, to develop it into an authentic spokesman and guide of the American working class in their daily struggles. We mean to make it more plain spoken, more understandable to the workers in general and, above all, more directly concerned with the problems of the class struggle as they unfold in the United States at this time. In that sense it would be more "American." It will translate the language of Marxism into terms understandable to the American workers.

We can take steps in that direction now. We have already made a small beginning, but the complete transformation will come with the establishment of our theoretical magazine to which the heavier articles, now printed in the Militant, can be transferred. That is on the way. Meantime we must organize our forces to build our circulation. The larger the circulation the greater the influence of the paper. The larger the Militant circulation the greater will be the revenue, the sooner it will solve our financial problems, the sooner we will have the theoretical organ and the transformation of the character of The Militant.

What we need above all today is an active staff of Militant builders throughout the country—live comrades who will take bundles of Militants under their arms, go out to sell them at working class gatherings or in working class neighborhoods and solicit subscriptions. We need more of them. We consider essential that these builders constantly renew their activities and continue without let-up. We have a number of actual builders already but we are now preparing plans for a much wider extension of the Militant circulation. In anticipation of this we ask all those comrades who are ready to enlist amongst the staff of active Militant builders to notify us by mail.

PIONEER PUBLISHERS

"There can be no revolutionary movement without a revolutionary theory"—said Lenin. A revolutionary theory cannot be spread effectively without the help of a publishing house.

The problem now is to develop our work on a broader scale. An efficiently functioning publishing house is indispensable. Every conscious worker, every sympathizer of the revolutionary movement, every anti-Fascist has, therefore, to do his utmost in the building of such a revolutionary publishing center. Here is a practical way for you to help. Buy a $5 certificate in Pioneer Publishers. This will entitle the holder to get any book published by us at a 40% discount and books of other publishers at a 20% discount.

P. S. All comrades who have previously made full or partial payments for certificates should send them in their names. Properly signed and sealed certificates will be sent to those who have paid $5 or more.

forefront organizing the local unemployed movement and founding it firmly on a trade union basis, thus establishing the unity between employed and unemployed, with the unions taking up the fight for the needs of the unemployed. There was a similar example in Toronto, Canada, although somewhat different in its nature. In that city our comrades were leading and moving forces in a united front Anti-Fascist demonstration which brought out between 15 to 20 thousand workers in a demonstration coupled with a strike of brief duration. It became a powerful thrust against the infamous Section 98 of the criminal code and restored free speech in Toronto.

In the unemployed movement the League is entering a broader field of activity. It is now collaborating directly with the Workers' League of Chicago to extend this organization to the unemployed to other centers. Despite the general sag in the unemployed movement it has maintained several branches intact with more than a thousand members and a few additional hundred members outside of Chicago. The Communist League is cooperating in the work of this organization with a serious determination to help revive the unemployed movement.

New Forces in the West.

On the Pacific Coast our new branches in San Francisco, Oakland and Vancouver were almost entirely recruited from forces coming over from the official party. In New York City, where we have our largest membership, there are at this moment considerable new forces also taking the step from the official party to the Left Opposition. Within the official party itself there is a dead calm, all the more ominous after the Soviet recognition "baggage." Unquestionably many of its members feel very uneasy and there will be new forces turning away from Stalinism to become supporters of the new party. This was already indicated by the official party organizer in New Castle, Pa., when he attended our meeting of my recent tour. He said, "Yes, the Left Opposition rests upon a sound foundation and it has excellent forces while the official party in New Castle is dead."

MANIFESTO OF THE SPANISH BOLSHEVIK-Leninists

Madrid, Dec. 5, 1933.—The calling of the recent elections for deputies to the Cortes (Spanish parliament—Ed.) coincided with the period of the reorganization of the Spanish Bolshevik-Leninists in the light of the decisions adopted on an international scale concerning the new orientation towards new parties and the new International of the working class. In line with the radical change which has taken place in our international organization, we decided to participate in the elections in complete independence and under our own banner. The following are the most important decisions adopted.

1. Being unable in any way to justify abstention from elections so important as those which have just taken place, we decided to support the candidates of the official Communist party, despite the deep-going differences which separate us from them, in such places where it was impossible for us to present candidates of our own. Naturally, while recommending to the workers the support of the candidates of the official C. P., we did not forget to raise all the differences which we have with this party. On the contrary, the election campaign has been an occasion for us in which to make the Spanish proletariat understand the urgent necessity of organizing a real Communist party, inspired by the doctrines of revolutionary Marxism, and in the traditions of Bolshevism-Leninism.

2. In accord with the line of struggle followed in the elections of November 19th, we recommended voting for the workers candidate having the greatest opportunity of election, on the second run. It was opposed to the tactics of the Stalinist party, which maintained its own candidates on the second run, even where the Socialist candidate had the greatest chance for election. Even in this case, while recommending to the workers to vote, on the second run, for the socialist candidates, our criticism of the policy of this party did not cease to be the sharpest.

We are in the process of gathering the details of our participation in the election struggle. But now it is well known that reaction emerges from this struggle strengthened by the victory of the Right wing. For that reason we see the great urgency in making known the position our organization adopted toward the present reactionary threat. This position is summarized in the following leaflet distributed in tens of thousands of copies throughout Spain.

TO THE WORKERS

Reaction has taken a great step forward. A mortal danger faces the proletariat.

But the situation is not hopeless.

The treasure of energy and combativity of the working class is not exhausted. But this energy and this combativity must be organized and directed. There is only one road for that: the formation of a solid bloc of all workers organizations to oppose an impossible front to reaction. The immediate aim of this bloc should be:

1. Not to tolerate the least attempt against the conquests of the working class.
2. The defense of the workers organizations.
3. To make the assembly of the elected Cortes impossible by means of formidable movement.

WORKERS

This is a decisive hour. Demand the immediate constitution of the united front.

There is no time to be lost. Each lost minute is an hour gained by reaction.

To make the assembly of the elected Cortes impossible by means of formidable popular movement is the immediate rallying slogan of the Spanish section of the League of Communist Internationalists (formerly the International Left Opposition—Ed.), issued in order to block the road to the return of reaction. The new Cortes must be dismissed through the pressure and the anger of the popular masses grouped in organizations for anti-Fascist struggle. In this struggle our organization will take its place in the front ranks and point out the roads to be followed to save and broaden the democratic conquests of the toiling masses.

in order to make them conform.

Thus Chang is convinced that a necessary feature of Communist society is the disappearance of the division of labor. He reaches this conclusion by misinterpreting Marx's statement to the effect that in a Communist society the subjection of labor dependent upon the present division of labor will disappear, and that there will be no opposition between brain and manual work. To Chang this means that the division of labor itself will disappear. (Marx's own words are: "when the slavish subordination of the individual to the yoke of the division of labor has disappeared, and when concomitantly the distinction between mental and physical work has ceased to exist...") Chang then bolsters his misinterpretation, by reporting that Engels agreed with him. Engels (according to Chang) held the view that the division of labor "lies at the basis of the division into classes." (The point being that since classes will disappear as will the division of labor!) Here is what Engels actually wrote. "It is, therefore, the law of division of labor that lies at the basis of the division into classes." Of course, the enslaving subordination of the individual under the division of labor as it exists in class society is one thing, and the division of labor itself is something else again. Among the outstanding characteristics of Communist society is that it frees the individual from subjection under particular types of the division of labor; but the Communist society itself has no intentions of doing away with division of labor. It is based upon international division of labor. And of course the law of the division of labor is one thing, and the division of labor is another. But Chang is law unto himself, and having confounded so many things, and understood so little, he confounds Marxism with himself.

A Typical Ph. D. Thesis

What has been said is sufficient evidence that Chang's thesis is a typical Ph. D. performance on the American standard, pretensions, presumptions, and second-hand. From the Marxist viewpoint it is worthless. We caution those who, seeking the easy way, would use this book as a source book of quotations. For one thing, Chang quotes Lenin through Stalin. But then what else could be expected, from one indebted to Bedacht, except to cite Stalin as "one who follows Lenin's theory of the proletarian dictatorship very closely"? Is it astonishing that Chang therefore lists as minor extensions of Marxism, Lenin's "theory of colonial revolutions and the theory of the unequal development of capitalism." And that he also includes among Lenin's contributions to Marxism "the theory of the possibility of the victory of socialism in one country." For a summary of all these minor extensions, he refers the readers not to Lenin but to—Stalin. But the good doctor is not being funny, he is serious!

In all respects, his performance qualifies Chang not only for a doctorate but for a professorship in the present Marx-Lenin Institute, under the leadership of Stalin.

BOOK REVIEW

The Marxian Theory of the State, by Sherman H. M. Chang, Ph. D.

This book is advertised as "the first scholarly book on the Marxist theory of the state." Dr. Chang came to write it by chance. Beginning merely out of curiosity with a chapter on Marxian theory, he discovered that no one had written fully on the political theory of Communism, and therefore decided to make a deep study of "this formidable theory of the state." He devoted two years to this deep study, and accomplished precisely what he intended. In that time, he managed to become acquainted with a half dozen pamphlets by Lenin, a few extracts by Trotsky, and absolutely nothing of Liebknecht, Luxemburg, and Mehring, not to mention such "non-entities" as Plekhanov or Kautsky of the pre-revolutionary period.

Chang's "Slant" on Marxism. In view of the fact that this book bristles with classic quotations of Marxism, and also because such outstanding theorists as Bedacht and Trachtenberg seem to have been somewhat involved in providing Dr. Chang with a genuine "slant" on Marxism, we intended to go somewhat into the scope of this purported interpretation of Marxist theory, and Chang's qualifications as a scientist and scholar in general.

In this "Marxian" study of the state, there is practically no mention whatever made (to say nothing of analysis) of the Russian Revolution of 1905, and the October Revolution. One is led to the suspicion that Chang's reason for studying the Paris Commune, is the fact that it has had some mention among "his authorities."

Chang's scholarship is upon that level which does not transcend scholasticism. The bulk of his bibliography consists of the works of such authorities on Marxism as Max Beer, M. M. Rober, one Kleene, and the like. To prove that his historical materialism is monistic, he refers to the "findings of Kleene and Rober (which serve to strengthen our contention that historical materialism is monistic). Although he refers slightly to Plekhanov as another "great Marxist," Chang obviously never read Plekhanov's classic defense of historical materialism. It is only when his own authorities fail him that he resorts to such dubious sources as Trotsky—for example, "since even such an authority... as Max Beer overlooks this character of the Commune, it is worth while to quote Trotsky."

A Surprising "Discovery"

It is not surprising therefore to find that the Doctor is surprised at the deliberate falsification of Marxism by the revisionists. And, moreover, that from the heights of his erudition, he suspects that even most devoted disciples of Marx were not quite so well informed as he. Chang indirectly imputes to Lenin ignorance of Marx's "The Class Struggles in France." On what grounds? On the grounds that he did not include two well known quotations from that book in his pamphlet "The State and Revolution." According to Chang, "it is interesting to note that such a devoted disciple of Marx had made no mention (of these passages) in his State and Revolution." Had the doctor devoted a few more weeks to Lenin he might have discovered that a number of people had written rather fully on the political theory, and that Lenin had far closer first-hand knowledge about the quotations than Chang! He might have also learned that the "State and Revolution" was never completed, as planned.

But his two years research authorizes Chang not only to note with interest but also to comment on passing upon the relative merits of Marxists. No work of Mehring's is referred to in Chang's book, but he did read a book of Ryazanov, and this leads our doctor to the scientific conclusion that Ryazanov ranks higher than Mehring. "It should be noticed in passing that Ryazanov as a historian of Marxist literature (sic!) ranks higher even than Franks Mehring." We need only remark that Ryazanov ranked Mehring as the greatest historian of Marxism.

Literature and History

Chang not only has hazy notions as to what Marxist literature consists of, but he confounds literature with history, and is blissfully unaware that there is a distinction between dialectic materialism (the philosophy of Marxism) and historical materialism (Marxist sociology). He thinks that "historical materialism is also known as dialectic materialism." In Pennsylvania this passes for scholarship. But these are only the artificial pearls of his erudition, the genuine jewels are still ahead.

The learned Doctor has a preface and an introduction to his book. In the preface he informs us that in his book there is "little mention or use of Marxian economics." But in the introduction he informs us that "it is presumptuous to draw a rigid line between economics and political science." He is convinced of this, on the authority of professor J. H. Laski. On his own words, and upon his own authority, Chang pleads guilty of having been so presumptuous as to draw a rigid line between Marxian economics and Marxian politics.

His lack of knowledge of Marxian economics does not, however, hinder him from speaking authoritatively about it. According to him "one of the productive forces is wage-labor." He confounds productive forces with productive relations. Wage-labor is a productive relation. It is a bourgeois relation of production.

The Marxian concept of "class" is a closed book to Chang, but this does not prevent him from being very erudite in his chapter, "The Class Domination Theory of the State." According to Chang the intellectuals are a class in society. It is perhaps safe to say that even Bedacht knows better.

When the classic quotations of Marxism run counter to Chang's own conclusion, he simulates them,

HITLER THE PACFIST

Hitler wants peace. His speeches and his interviews on this theme are constructed on an ancient formula: war is incapable of solving a single question, war threatens the extermination of the superior races, war brings the ruin of civilization in its wake. The classic argumentation of the pacifists for hundreds of years! No more consoling is the fact that the Chancellor of the Reich has already succeeded in convincing several foreign journalists of his absolute sincerity. It is true that another pacifist, whose sincerity is not open to the least suspicion, Karl Ossietsky, can ask why he continues to remain in a concentration camp, if the leader of the present government applies his fundamental theme assiduously. If not with very much talent. But Ossietsky is imprisoned for the very reason that he is able to pose embarrassing questions.

The Arguments of Hitler

The arguments of Hitler are convincing in the degree that they have volume. All the ministers, all the orators, all the journalists swear that the Third Reich has been called into being to realize the fraternity of people. If all of National Socialist Germany is learning to handle arms, it is only in order the better to become impregnated with hatred for them. Even von Papen who, as early as May 13th, still preached that the true Germany ought to die young on the field of battle and not from hardening of the arteries, does not cease to repeat now that there is nothing more worthy than to give up the ghost peacefully surrounded by one's grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

The peoples of Europe passionately want the preservation of peace. No wonder that they lend an ear full of hope, to the bulky argumentation from Berlin. It is not very difficult to dispel their doubts. Many are asking: and what is to be thought, for instance, of Hitler's autobiography which is entirely built up on the irreconcilability of the interests of France and Germany? An appealing explanation has already been given: the autobiography was written in prison, when the author's nerves were disordered and it is only through an obvious negligence of the minister of propaganda that this disturbing book continues to this day to serve as the basis for national education.

"Peace" Instead of "Struggle". Once the question of "equality of rights" was determined in favor of the Third Reich, Hitler will prepare the publication of a new edition, more reassuring. If the book has been called up to now, "My Struggle", the principal object of "My Struggle" being the Versailles Treaty, in the future it is very probable that it will be called "My Peace" and that they will append to it a report of the National Socialist physicians attesting that the nerves of the author are in better order. And the Leipzig trial shows that the mediocre surveys of the Nazis exist in the world, life will probably be made an eternal delight. But unfortunately side by side with these virtues stupidity and credulity still live on. Who will have to pay for them?

The author of these lines has already at one time attempted to draw the reader's attention to a remarkable document, the "Open Letter" from Hitler to the then Chancellor of the Reich, von Papen. Unfortunately our weak voice obviously has not reached its destination. The "Open Letter" has not become, as we had hoped, the brief of all editors and all diplomatic chancelleries. And it is well deserving of that. The recently published political document of German propaganda are also incontestably very instructive. But they have the drawback of being secrets. One can always suspect a falsification.

Hitler's "Open Letter". The "Open Letter" is not a secret document. This pamphlet was officially published by the Nazi party on October 16, 1932, three months before Hitler's seizure of power. His nervous system at all time had succeeded, we must believe, in completely recovering from the tests of 1932. Hitler already felt himself almost in the government. There remained only the huddling of the last obstacles. The ruling classes looked towards him hopefully, but not without fear. They were particularly apprehensive of any adventure in "romantic" chauvinism. The aim of the "Open Letter" was to assure the possessing classes, the bureaucracy, the generals, the immediate retinue of Hindenburg that he, Hitler, contrary to the light avenger, von Papen, would pursue his ends with the greatest caution. The "Open Letter" discloses a complete system of foreign policy, which only now assumes its full importance. The withdrawal of Germany from the League of Nations was received throughout the entire world as an unexpected and unreasonable improvisation. However, it is stated with absolute precision in the "Open Letter" why Germany would leave Geneva and how it would be necessary to arrange this break.

Nazi Foreign Policy. The exceptional value of this letter consists in that Hitler, still inclined in those days to battle and polemic, rashly unveiled the secret springs of his future foreign policy. The point of departure of the "Letter" is the same as that of the "autobiography": the interests of France and Germany are absolutely irreconcilable; from its whole inclination France can come to an agreement only on the basis of a change of relationship of forces in favor of Germany. Germany cannot hope to obtain "equality of rights" by means of discussion in international conferences; in order that international diplomacy recognize Germany's right to rearm, the Germans must rearm at once. But that is precisely why it is impossible to demand aloud the rearmament of Germany as von Papen must. It is the slogan of a "popular movement" but in no case of diplomacy. A government conscious of its responsibilities—that is the government of Hitler and not of von Papen—should demand only the disarmament of France. And since France is no case could agree to that, Germany should leave the League of Nations in order thus to free its hands. So as to make war? No. Germany is still too weak for its government to speak in the near future in any other language than that of pacifism.

Recreating German Militarism. Invoking the "danger" which threatens it in the East, and utilizing the antagonisms among the states of the West, Germany should regenerate the basis of its militarism, gradually, by proceeding from the general to the particular, to the special. In order to conduct this work to a successful end, there must be a national conspiracy of silence; above all the Ossietsky must be kept under lock and key! A government conscious of its responsibilities must take the instruments of pacifism in its own hands. By following this path they will succeed, in the course of several years, in preparing a radical change in the relation of forces. After that they will be able to pass over from "My Peace" to "My Struggle" and even to "My War".

Such is Hitler's plan. The plan flows from the whole situation, external and internal. Hitler himself has taken care to give humanity a key—or, to use a better known expression, a passport—in order to penetrate the secrets of his future international policy. Despite all the respect we have for the two sympathetic journalists, we prefer to base ourselves on the declarations of Hitler himself, supported by an imposing system of direct and indirect proofs. From a fact, even a strongly established one, different practical conclusions can be drawn. Various answers can be given to the policy of Hitler. It is not at all the intention of the present article to give counsel to those, whoever they may be, who decide the fate of Europe; they truly know themselves what they have to do. But the premises of a realistic policy, whatever its aims and methods, is an understanding of the situation and the forces at work in it.

Hitler's Calculated Plan. We must see what is Hitler's left the League of Nations not under the blow of a nervous improvisation, but in conformance with a coldly calculated plan. Hitler has himself assured the "national" conspiracy of silence. He carries on his work in the direction of a radical change in the relationship of military forces. It is precisely now, when this work has already begun but is still far from having given decisive results, that Hitler must employ the greatest caution in the European arena. Do not frighten anyone, do not irritate anyone; on the contrary, open wide the arms. Hitler is ready to cover the walls of his war factories with pacifist speeches and non-aggression pacts. Paris would rather have a knife. If a clear, simple, non-diplomatic formula of the pacifist of today is necessary, it is the following: for the next two or three years Hitler must painfully avoid a preventive war on the part of his opponents. Within these limits his pacifism is absolutely sincere. But within these limits only.

Wicks at Large Again

After a long period of silence, Wicks is heard from again. H. M. Wicks is now touring the country with a Marx-Lenin exhibit which he supplements with a lecture. But this angle of the affair is only an external covering. The essential purpose of the tour is to incite a program spirit against the Left Opposition and, like all revisionists of Marxism, to do it under the mantle of Marx and Lenin. And who could do that better than H. M. Wicks?

The speech is divided into a discussion of the three Internationals. Wicks is a calm and deliberate man when he speaks of the first and second Internationals. But when his speech covers the ground of the Third International he is changed man. The calm and deliberate Wicks becomes a blustering ignoramus whose speech is filled with invectives against Trotsky and the Left Opposition. "Counter-revolutionaries" and "renegades" are nicknames that pale alongside the new language, the sum and substance of which is the instruction to carry on a campaign of gangsterism against the Left Opposition. True, this policy is not a new one. The Stalinist International and all its sections have carried on a policy of violence against opponent workers organization for a number of years, increasing or decreasing in intensity in equal degree with the credit or discredit of the Parties. In the United States the Central Committee directed this policy of gangsterism. Because of pressure, this policy was put aside for a short period. The C. C. denied that it was responsible for this policy, but it refused to instruct the ranks of the Party to cease employing Fascist tactics in the labor movement.

Revival of Gangster Methods. Now the Parties of Stalin are again making use of the tactic of gangsterism. The heavy defeat in Germany, the weakened position of the Soviet Union at the hands of the Stalinist bureaucracy, the decline of the International—these are all motive forces behind this policy. In recent months there has been revived the tactic of physical attacks on the Left Oppositionists. These attacks are prefaced by theoretical speeches of justification! This Wicks tours the country with a Marx-Lenin exhibit in order to make lynch speeches against the "Trotskyites". He fumes and frets, bellows and howls, with a language characteristic of Wicks. But why Wicks? Why should he be resurrected for this campaign? Why shouldn't Hathaway or Browder make this tour and do this dirty job? They are the leaders of the Party. They stand out as the face of the Party. And there is probably less to fear from them. It would be better, it seems to me, to say, very political, to have the National Secretary of the Party or the editor of the Daily Worker make such a tour; although we assure our readers, there would be little to choose between them. But then, why Wicks? And thereby hangs a tale.

The Record of Wicks. When the Opposition was first organized in this country, H. M. Wicks, it was, who wrote a series of vicious articles against it, comparing the sterling revolutionary character of the Stalinists with the counter-revolutionary make-up of the Left Opposition. Those who know Wicks, and there were a few, could not take him seriously, because to them, the record of Wicks was an open book. But to many, Wicks stood out as the emblem of all that is good, and honest. We thought it in the best interest of the working class to tell who this Wicks is.

In the early days of the foundation of the Communist movement, Wicks played an active part. For a time he disappeared from the scene. Then he returned once more to take an active part in the Party. What happened in the meantime? Wicks turned apostate! He who should renegade so loudly played the role of a renegade. We quote from the Gary, Indiana, Post-Tribune, the issue of March 25, 1920, pages 1 and 9:

"H. M. Wicks, of Chicago, a reform socialist, spoke on the revolutionary tendencies of the times to some forty Gary men last evening. . . . Bill Hayward and his satellites should not be tolerated in this country. Mr. Wicks said, he had been advising American Legion members not to permit these vermin to talk to them, but to knock them down. That he said is the only language they understand. . . . He commended the deportation proceedings that have rid the country of many agitators and urged that other foreign troublemakers be given the same treatment. He urged an Americanization program for the foreign speaking workers and he said the American Legion is the one organization in the country which is doing good Americanization work. . . . He told of attending the congress of the Communist Party in Chicago. By use of a caucus about one-fourth of the delegates controlled the meeting. The caucus is a dictator. The speaker could not find words to describe his disgust for the I. W. W. He charged them with being cowards and the scum of the earth. . . . Wicks is preparing to tour the country on the Chautauque platform this summer in order to let the American people understand the true situation."

Once Excluded from Party. Wicks applied for membership in the Communist Party in 1921, after his excursion into the ranks of true renegades and provocateurs. The "Official Bulletin of the Communist Party of America (Section of the Communist International)" issued by the General Executive Committee, No. 2, page 1, under the heading "Some Important C. E. C. Decisions", declared:

"The recommendation of an investigating committee that Harry Wicks shall not be admitted to the Party was approved. The information proves him to be absolutely undesirable within the Party ranks."

Some years later the matter was brought up in the Party but was squelched by Lovestone and Pepper then in control of the C. E. C. They have since admitted their error! Isn't it understandable now why a Wicks was chosen for such a delicate work? When he spoke for the renegades in Gary he boasted and gloated because he advised the American Legion not to permit the vermin (Hayward and his comrades) to talk to them but to knock them down. He doesn't have to change his act now, because experience has made him fitted for this filthy work. There is no one better suited to calumniate the "Trotskyites" than one who has been a renegade, such as Wicks has been. That is why he was chosen for this task. At any rate we feel it incumbent to warn the workers everywhere that H. M. Wicks, erstwhile renegade and unofficial advisor to the American Legion, is at large again.

MOVIE REVIEW

As movies go Noel Coward's Cavalcade is an old picture. Fox turned it out almost a year ago. The thing got so much publicity, and was talked about by so many people we got curious about it. And we figured that workers felt the same way about it. So we went to see it.

This is what we found: a story which begins in the Victorian era in England and takes us through to 1885. In a way it is a love story. But it is a much more ambitious production than a mere tale of heart beats. The producers think, no doubt, that they have made a faithful chronicle of an epoch that has passed into history and truthfully recorded the life of a generation.

Let us take them on their own terms. What do they tell us about these years and the people who move across the screen? The central figures' men and wife, who are happily married ten years at the opening of the picture, obviously belong to the upper class. They live in a big house, have servants, and move in elite circles. The source of their income is not even indicated. A sordid detail in a story of love that endures through the ages!

The war against the Boers separates them for a time. In the elaborate scenes of the fervor that overtakes every patriotic British citizen the producers who are, no doubt, opposed to propaganda in the movies have an opportunity to tell us the truth about the brutal course that empire treads. Do they? Not a bit. The war is only an incident in the love life of four people.

Do men die in the brush? Are Boers murdered to establish Britain's might? These are unimportant details, are not mentioned in polite society. But our hero comes back at the head of his troop, safe and sound, very much in love with his wife, and is knighted.

The queen dies and everybody dresses in black. That signifies the close of the Victorian era. The world moves on. The butler and his wife, the maid, leave to open a pub. The children grow up. The butler turns out to be a drunkard who dies in a street accident.

The elder son goes down with his bride on the Titanic on their honeymoon. The World War comes. Father and son do their duty. The latter falls in love with the daughter of the dead butler. She is now a famous musical comedy dancer.

The girl's mother goes round to see the boy's mother about the affair. Servant confronts mistress. The mistress is still the same courteous, kindly, sweet woman she has always been toward her servants. But the former maid; she dresses ridiculously and put on airs. Her pretensions of equality are so much vulgarity. Oh, the lower orders! Unworthy wretches, drunkards, ungrateful, offensive. They don't know that quality is inherent.

It is armistice day. The painful interview between mistress and former servant is terminated by a telegram announcing the death of the boy. The girl becomes a night club blues singer. Her mother disappears from the chronicle.

Come crises, revolutions. The world moves at a faster tempo. It is restless, nervous—the twentieth century is full blast. But the old house—it is still the same. Nothing changes here, not custom, not the very furniture (only the curtains are changed one week before the close), and certainly not the people in it. At the end as in the beginning they love each other; they are still in love; that counts more than all else in the world.

Is there a moral to this story? You bet. Old virtues are the best. Just how to the line of bourgeois morality and the world will muddle through somehow. It is not your business to remake the world. Just look at the butler; he was not satisfied with his station in life and kindly treatment. He tried to remake his world and he came to an untimely end. Do your duty; be content with your lot; love your wife! It is written—by Noel Coward and Fox.

"The New Deal"

A NEW STAGE IN THE NRA

Government proclamations dealing with economic measures are issued so often it is difficult to keep up with them. This in itself reveals the mounting difficulties which confront the dominating imperialist power in the decay stage of capitalism. The resort to governmental economic measures in an attempt to "bring back prosperity" is a game that has no end simply because capitalism has contradictions which the most powerful of governments cannot solve or eliminate. In this circumstance the task of the capitalist government is to adopt such measures as will place the ruling class, in the preliminary struggles and preparations for a re-division of the earth, in the most favorable position against the other imperialist powers and the working class at home.

Such is the purpose of the NRA and all of the other measures taken by the government since it was compelled by the situation to work more in the open. As soon as one government measure is used up and faces breakdown new decrees are issued. At one stage the slack is taken up at a critical moment by the Civil Works Program—a form of government relief which is half charity and half stagger plan. At another time the cracks are plastered over with an expanding monetary policy in a series of steps which range from going off the gold standard and placing unlimited power in the president's hands to the gold-buying policy and now to the silver policy of the government. At other times critical stages are maneuvered through by the recognition of the U. S. S. R., the Hull Tariff proposal, or the establishment of the Federal Surplus Relief Association, etc.

President Roosevelt has extended the blanket code four more months, to May the First. This was necessitated by the fact that the process of reorganization, at the expense of the workers and the middle class, has not gone fast enough. There are only two variants possible—or modified forms of these two variants—that the ruling class can take in relation to the NRA and its international supplementary measures. They must either return to the past and give up the "governmental experiment in business," or proceed further on the present path. It can be answered with certainty that there is only one road ahead for American imperialism. That is the road of increased governmental control and regulation of American economy. A rich variety of forms leading toward state capitalism is possible, providing the proletariat does not interpose its own solution and made short work of the whole mess.

The government measures designed to insure a more favorable position for American imperialism on the international field dovetail into those measures which aim to reorganize production within the country. None of the government measures is exclusively internal or international. However, the NRA is primarily an internal object; the majority of the other measures supplement the NRA internally and extend the economic war out into the international arena.

The government monetary policy in its successive stages is not merely a series of internal measures to boost prices, as the administration would have us believe. In the final analysis it has greater international importance. (One may safely say that the central contradiction concealed within the monetary policy is the struggle between the Pound and the Dollar for world supremacy. But England and the United States are not the only two countries striving for a bigger place in the sun. Other imperialists are putting up a desperate fight for the same goal. These struggles inevitably cross this struggle between the Pound and the Dollar, and often monetarily stand out more prominently. An example of this is to be seen in the ratification of the international agreement for the reorganization and stabilization of silver and the president's proclamation on this question.

A new government organization of far-reaching powers, recently established is the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation. The New York Times says it may exercise "any and all powers" that may legally be delegated to it under the NRA, the AAA and the Emergency Relief Act. It may "purchase, store, handle and process" surplus commodities of any kind. It may attempt to "adjust the severe disparity between prices of agriculture and other commodities." Subject to Federal and State laws it may "purchase, hold, own, mortgage, sell, convey, or otherwise dispose of" real and personal property of any sort, and in general, carry on any and all business necessary for the relief of the existing national emergency.

This will act as a sort of a second line trench behind the NRA. It brings out into relief the great difference between the present organization for capitalist reproduction and that which followed past crises when capitalism as a world system was "healthy" and developing. It exposes the spots of decay even in U. S. economy, the dominating section of world economy. Capitalism has now reached a stage where the process of decay is "organized." There is such a thing as "organized capitalism," but in a sense completely opposite to that conveyed by the capitalist theorists. Decay on a world-wide scale proceeds on an "organized" plan; only in this way can the capitalists retain power.

In Germany, the main defeated nation in the last world war, this "organized decay" took on its most violent form—Fascism. America, the main victor of the war and the strongest power now, has been able, up to the present time, to escape both the revolutionary destroyers and the Fascist saviors of capitalism. Nevertheless, it does not escape the need of reorganization by the curtailment and destruction of productive forces that must not be replaced. In previous crises during the growth stage of capitalism the process of reorganization always proceeded by the destruction of certain productive forces and commodities; but the new cycle started out with a more highly developed technique of production than that which obtained before the crises. This destruction of productive forces and commodities is not the new feature of the present stage. The important new fact is that the process of destruction is proceeding in an attempted "organized fashion" by means of government subsidy where political expediency requires it, and without a reorganization on a superior technical level. In the decay stage of capitalism, within which American economy is included, iron shackles are fastened on the productive forces.

This does not mean that the cycle of reproduction and the creation of surplus value cannot again proceed. The NRA and the other measures are working toward this end. However, the rate of surplus value will diminish progressively unless war and revolution alter the whole situation.

The NRA already has greatly assisted the process of reorganization and centralization of industry and government. But by no means has it solved the problem. A new problem confronting the present rulers is the army of permanent unemployed and the prospective Europeanization of the American workers, that is, their political awakening. Against this new and added danger from the working class the executive committee of the capitalist class has created the NRA. They foresee this danger and aim, by means of the NRA, to shackle the rising class in advance. The NRA has a far reaching economic effect but its effects on social and class relations will be even greater.

The middle class has not been roused to action yet. The NRA is only being set through the NRA to squeeze them on a far larger scale. No one can predict which way this class will move. Already the farmers have shown open hostility to the NRA. This has forced concessions and has only postponed struggle on a wider scale. A section of the capitalists which had enjoyed monopolistic positions in certain industries have been opposing the NRA. They already enjoy a special position within their field. The government measures are of no value to them unless they are on the "inside track." That group of capitalists which has the inside track is carrying on a struggle for domination within America against other groups of competing capitalists and is using the NRA for this purpose. Many of the higher-ups in the "sound money bloc" and "gold-bloc" happen to be with that group of capitalists which is under attack.

The working class is being disillusioned. New measures will be attempted to keep the discontent from crystallizing into definite channels of class struggle against the NRA and all that goes with it. The reduction of the living standards of the whole class is proceeding as rapidly as the NRA becomes a "success." The political awakening of the workers will be greatly advanced in the general process now taking place.

—HUGO OEBLER.

From Nazi Germany

Hamburg.—I spent my time in Hamburg not only with many social democratic workers but with leading comrades as well (local, district leaders, old trade union secretaries). All these men feel that they were betrayed by their leaders and they do not dream of continuing to work together with the old leaders of the social democracy. The Prague Vorwarts was distributed here up to three weeks ago.

Following the arrest of a courier, they are examining the boats in the harbor with extreme scrutiny. Most workers utilize the Vorwarts only as a source of information, other distribute it despite its content, only so as to do something against Hitler. Others burn it because they do not want to run any risks, but many burn it because they consider its contents despicable.

The political line of these people is very vague although they have begun to discuss with the Communists and the small groups. Discussion circles were created in this way. A Reichsbanner group is particularly noteworthy. This group was well equipped technically, but its positions were very bad ideologically. They worked on the principle of authority and omniscience of the leader. They showed the S. A. P. with insults considering the latter as undisciplined because they wanted to break the discipline of the ranks of the organization at that time.

Their position towards national socialism was very poor. They explained that they had to attach themselves to the nationalism of the people. Most of the Germans are nationalistic and they cannot be won over by internationalism. Only after the conquest of power can the question of internationalism be posed. Nationalism was only a tactic for them, they said. But I think that there was much sentiment hidden behind this stand.

The Communists with whom I came into contact in Hamburg suffered severe losses throughout. They seldom admitted that they were almost completely annihilated by agent provocateurs. The repression becomes stronger from month to month and men are arrested en bloc, 40 to 50 at a time. They are very dogmatic in their stand and they invariably abide by the old party line. They still have good organizations and they publish printed papers. I received the Rote Fahne, the Junge Garde and the Trommel (children's paper) in Hamburg.

BERLIN.

Berlin.—Wells is still in the leadership of the S. P. D. Four social democratic papers are in existence. Vorwarts has not been circulated here for some time. The workers refuse to take it. The Proletarische Pressendienst (Proletarian Press Service) is much better and even very much liked among Communists. It has a circulation of 2,000 copies. Each copy has 5 readers. The same circle publishes Initiative. The latter is only an information organ for leading functionaries. Roter Stoerup has the same function in Hamburg. They are against all discussion and they are connected with the Reichsbanner who have been taken into the illegal leadership. Their ideas on dictatorship and the principle of authority are very bad.

The Young Socialists who have struggled with K. for a long time are truly revolutionary and are brilliantly active. The Young Socialists keep in connection with the Proletarische Pressendienst on the one hand and work with the Left Opposition on the other.

In 5 weeks 5 printing presses were seized from the Communists. The Rote Fahne, despite all, continues to be published, but only in mimeographed form. The content remains the same. I had an opportunity to speak with a leader of the Brandenburg district. He and others were very sceptical and are now working in discussion circles with the Left Opposition. They feel the pressure from the Communist workers for the united front.

The Left Opposition works marvelously. Relations with Communists and even leading functionaries are established easily. We have equally good relations with the Young Socialists who are now considered "Trotskyites." These comrades reject the straggling discipline of the C. P. G. They have made this crystal clear to K.—and St.—. The Left Opposition can today not only double but triple its membership. But it should be very careful of details and admit only vanguard elements.

Due to the catastrophe not only large sections of the social democracy, but also a section of the Communists have finally understood that Trotsky's analysis of Fascism was correct. Everywhere the question is asked: "What does Trotsky say?" Many voluntarily enter into relations with us. It confirms to me the new relations between the social democrats, communists and Left Oppositionists. It can be seen everywhere that the active comrades are very young. The average age is from 20 to 25 years.

Exploitation and wage cutting have been intensified. I know of a place where they pay 50 pfennigs an hour. The cuts extend from 20 to 25%. The cost of living has risen, which means greater exploitation. Most of the workers earn between 25 and 50 marks, i. e., hardly more than the relief rates. Those receiving aid are forced to work 75 pfennigs a day. Due to this arrangement another worker is unemployed for the three days.

The forced labor camps grow incessantly. Thousands of workers who refuse to go to the forced labor camps have been cut off the relief lists. The general purchasing ability is lowered from day to day. Statistics for beer show that 51% less of this beverage is consumed now than before the war.

Naturally there are many more unemployed than previously. The manner in which the Nazis deceive the people is shown in the case of a young comrade in the Left Opposition at H.—. The comrade was sent from the employment office to K—. They said there was no more unemployment in K—. The workers of K— protested because there were obviously more unemployed there than in all Germany. After 15 days they all returned to H.—.

As I see it there now exists very good opportunities for a rise of the workers movement if the responsible comrades of the Left Opposition can conduct extensive activity in Germany. But lack of money paralyzes the forces. The comrades simply have no money with which to send the most urgent letters.

Strike the Hotels

ONE of the bright spots in the rising labor movement is the sensational rise of the Amalgamated Food Workers and its militant challenge to the big New York hotels which have been completely unorganized and immune to "labor troubles" for many years. Within the space of a few months' time, thanks to the strong sentiment for organization in the ranks of the fiercely exploited workers and a competent leadership in the union, the Amalgamated has bounded forward to a commanding position in the situation and is the indicated medium for the organization of a general strike to smash the infamous NRA code and enforce the workers' demands.

The action of the union in putting the preparation of the general strike now definitely on the agenda, after the arduous preliminary work in spreading the message of unionism and gathering the forces of the workers together, raises the prospect of a battle that can mean much for the labor movement in general as well as for the workers directly involved. Shut off from unionism for so many years, the biggest industry in New York—for that is what the hotel and restaurant business is—remained a stronghold of super-exploitation which helped to depress the standards and undermine the organizations of all the other workers.

In invading this field and establishing the firm basis of a union there the Amalgamated Food Workers has rendered a signed service to the whole movement of organized labor. In the projected strike it will be entitled to the solidarity and support, which are needed to ensure success.

To wrest concessions from the big New York hotels is no small undertaking. It cannot be accomplished without a real battle, and the battle cannot get a good start without serious preparation and a fair basis of organization beforehand. In proceeding from this point of view, and in moving step by step along a consistent line—gathering forces, building up the union, popularizing the idea of general strike action instead of reliance on the NRA—the Amalgamated has already stamped itself in the minds of thousands of disoriented hotel slaves as an organization that means business, not bluff and balldoo. The steady stream of new recruits into the union bears testimony to this. These demonstrations of confidence in the union presage a widespread response to the strike call when it goes out.

The challenge to the NRA code and the hotel magnates in whose interest it was drawn up leads with iron necessity to a strike. There is no other way but by a show of strength to convince these people who refuse to hear or heed the bitter grievances of the workers. The demands gained and the organization established in this way will be all the more secure. There will be no ground for the illusion that anybody gave the workers anything. It will be clear that everything gained is the result of organized struggle and it will not be easy to take the gains away again.

The general strike of the New York hotels will be an undisputed fight between capital and labor under modern conditions. The New York hotels are not one-horse concerns—they represent a huge concentration of capital closely tied up with the banks, and in some cases directly controlled by them. This policy is anti-union from start to finish. The Amalgamated union, on the other hand, is a modern type of labor organization, industrial in form to include all workers in the industry, militant in policy and relying on its own strength.

The A. F. of L. unions in the industry have never tackled the big hotels; they have confined themselves to smaller units—little cafes, caterers and night clubs—leaving the big and powerful concerns and the workers enslaved by them pretty much alone. Antiquated craft unionism demonstrates its inadequacy and the whole theory of the "partnership of capital and labor" goes to pieces when large-scale aggregations of capital are confronted.

The Amalgamated Food Workers arose as an independent industrial union in a field that was deserted and unoccupied just as similar organizations must and will take shape in other big industries which the craft unions are unable or unwilling to organize. It is not a "dual" union but the legitimate organization to serve the needs of the workers. The foremost and fundamental task in preparation for the general strike is to build and strengthen the Amalgamated Food Workers.

Concentration on this fundamental task of organizing the workers into the Amalgamated does not, of course, prevent cooperation with other unions in the industry and, in our opinion, the Executive Board of the Amalgamated was right in declaring its readiness to engage in joint actions with the A. F. of L. unions in case the latter are really prepared to act, that is, to call a strike of the workers under their jurisdiction. Such a proposition can very well remain as a standing attitude provided it does not lead to illusions among the members that some nebulous combination or instrument outside the Hotel and Restaurant workers branch of the Amalgamated can be the driving force of a real strike. The Amalgamated itself is the driving force! It would be fatally wrong to shift attention from the fundamental task of organizing the unorganized hotel workers into the union to the field of negotiations, discussions and re-arrangements with other organizations which have no basis in the hotels. The mechanism for a strike is first of all membership in a UNION. A hundred "joint committees" and "United Front Conferences" cannot be substituted for it.

As the hotel and restaurant workers move toward a show-down with the rapacious exploiters who coin their lives into dollars one warning cannot be repeated too often. That is: Put no faith in the NRA, distrust every move it makes, rely on your organized strength and the solidarity of your fellow-workers alone!

There is no doubt that many hotel and restaurant workers believed in the NRA at first and expected that Roosevelt would really do something for them. They have reason to know better now. After the approval by the NRA of the shameful hotel and restaurant code—one of the very worst of all, with its 54-hour week and similar odious provisions in favor of the bosses—it should be clear to every thinking worker that no help can be expected from this quarter. Just the contrary. The whole NRA scheme was hatched to head off the independent action of the workers, fill them with false hopes, dampen down their militancy and harness them for a long time to the old conditions. The proof of this, which has been amply provided already in the experience of the hotel and restaurant workers, is driving them to unionization and to concrete preparations for a strike. That is the only way to success in the struggle to improve conditions and make life more bearable for the cruelly exploited workers of the hotel and restaurant industry of New York.

Mooney Appeals Again

YEARS pass, the case of Mooney becomes an old story, the movement for his release ebbs and flows and ebbs again, militants grow tired and neglect the fight, but there is one who never tires, never quits and never surrenders, and that is the indomitable rebel, white haired and aging in prison, who carries the burden of the case on his own shoulders. The letter from Tom Mooney which is printed in this issue of the Militant is another reminder of this fact. It is an appeal which no militant worthy of the name can read without emotion and without a resolve to take up the fight again in his behalf.

Only a few weeks ago Mooney passed his 51st birthday—more than a third of his years have been spent continuously in prison. To our shame his birthday passed without a wave of public demonstrations and tumult in the street. To our shame the fight for his release has again become a perfunctory, routine affair. It must not remain on this plane. We must gather all our forces and energies together again to make the labor movement ring with his name, to make the demand for his liberation a living and burning issue of the whole working class.

The Mooney case is not an extraneous issue; it is fused together inseparably with awakening revolt of the American workers against capitalism and all its works. The name of Mooney is a banner of struggle. His spirit is the expression of the aspiring struggle of labor for life and freedom. And just as he symbolizes by his dauntless rebel spirit the undying struggles of the workers, so also does the barbarous and inhuman punishment imposed upon him tell the true story of the class justice of today. The fight for Mooney is a fight against the whole system of slavery, exploitation, hunger and injustice. The fight for Mooney is the workers' own fight.

The weight of the class system bears down ever more heavily on the masses. They feel every more intensely in their own daily lives the inequities of the hateful regime; their grievances bring them into closer sympathy with all who suffer oppression and injustice. They can become one with Mooney who symbolizes their rebellion and pays for it with a living death in the California prison. It is our task to hasten this fusion in a renewed fight for Tom Mooney.

The remarks of Mooney about the Chicago Congress and its aftermath are painful to read. It is clear from these remarks, as has been pointed out in these columns many times, that those who monopolized the leadership of the Left wing labor movement in recent years are able only to disorganize and to destroy. The blight of their influence is felt even in the defense movement for labor prisoners, and the Mooney case is not the first example of their capacity to sacrifice the interests.

A genuine and legitimate non-partisan defense organization is an urgent need. This is widely felt and recognized already. Mooney's letter brings the issue out into the open more prominently. There is much to be said on the questions raised in Mooney's letter. In next week's Militant we shall return to the subject again.

Transport Tie-up in Philadelphia Sympathy Strike

appeals of Senator Wagner and Dr. Leiserson, secretary of the National Association of Taxicab Drivers, the local union of the International Brotherhood declared for a strike of all transportation workers in Philadelphia on Friday, December 22nd. Nine unions with the additions of hundreds not yet organized responded. The following were included: Brotherhood of Transportation Workers, 11,000; Railway Express Drivers, 3,000; Teamsters, 3,000; Milk Wagon drivers, 2,000; Bakery wagon drivers, 2,000; Laundry wagon drivers, 1,100; Dry Cleaning drivers, 75; Piano Movers, 500. Thousands of transport workers stood in the cold for hours outside the strike headquarters and enthusiastically cheered the strike call.

Through striking under a call to make "the bosses agree to a deal by the Labor Board's decision," (from the strike leaflet) the drivers are in conflict not only with the bosses directly, but also with the governmental NRA itself. This must be fully realized by the strikers and all workers as a guard against deception.

Many already understand. They say, "We'll die of old age or starvation or both waiting for the NRA to do something." The strike call itself speaks of the strike as labor's only weapon now.

Supporting Taxicab Drivers

The strike approached but did not become a general strike in transportation. It was called in support of the embattled taxicab drivers. But it is not that alone. The individual unions have their own grievances and demands. Thus the milk drivers who are the strongest enforcement in the strike and are out almost solidly, are striking for better hours and higher wages and union recognition. They have been organizing all Summer long and are now stirred into action by the practice of the milk companies singling out union militants and firing them off the job. The same applies to the laundry drivers and cleaners drivers. The Brotherhood of Transportation Workers, an independently organized union which entered the A. F. of L. as a second local at the conclusion of a successful strike a couple of months ago, is using the strike to further strengthen its organization.

Betrayal of Bakery Drivers

The bakery drivers union has once more been betrayed. Three months ago they went on strike and were misled into returning to their jobs under old conditions, under promise of favorable action by the National Labor Board. For two months the National Labor Board considered their demands—for two months the Bakers' Club (the association of the bosses) have been busy demoralizing the workers by firing the active unionists from the job.

But when it comes to strikes, breaking the NRA and all its boards and officers are on the job. Within two days of the general walkout the National Labor Board "grants" the bakery drivers a 44-hour week maximum and a $27.50 week minimum pay, obviously prompted by efforts to break the unity of the workers. Without any agreement on the part of the bosses, the union officials called off their strike and sent the men back. Now the drivers, who see no indication on the part of the bakers to recognize the award of the union, are demanding action. In fact not all of the drivers went back, hundreds are still out despite the union order. This Thursday the union is taking another strike vote.

Labor Fakers in Action

As soon as the American Federation of Labor Executive Board became cognizant of the sweep of the strike and the enthusiasm it aroused it came to the aid of—the bosses. "Lieutenant" Daniel J. Tobin, International president of the Teamsters' Union came out with his wire to the local state organizer of the union, Thomas O'Brien, that the strike is illegal! "No permission was asked and none was given to call a general strike..." This stab in the back has had its effect. At the present writing five unions remain out on strike, four having gone back. The taxi, milk, laundry men now constitute the backbone of the strike.

It is imperative for the speedy success of the strike—that of the taxi men as well as that of the other unions—that the strike be extended to a complete general tie-up. The strike must go to the P. R. T. workers—subway, bus and street car; and, if need be, to call out not only the drivers but the inside production workers as well.

To date neither the Socialist Party nor the Communist party have made public any announcement on the strike. The S. P. is in the background of the taxiab union and, to a lesser extent of other unions. In this way it hopes not to embarrass the A. F. of L. officialdom and to absolve itself from any commitments before the workers. The C. P. has made no other contribution than a miserable leaflet by the sterile T. U. U. L. The T. U. U. L. Butcher drivers has been given representation, on the strike committee as has the Independent Retail Laundry Drivers.

The leaflet issued by the local branch of the Communist League calls for a complete transport strike, the six-hour day five-day week with union wages and for a policy of class struggle against class collaboration.

Hotel Workers Drive Toward General Strike

cussed and approved definite wage-scales which are now part of the official demands of the union, specifying in detail the minimum rates of pay for different types of work of varying degrees of skill and responsibility. The union demands include:

Full recognition of the union. A minimum wage of $20 a week for the lowest-paid workers in the industry.

Specific minimum wage-scales for higher pay for the more skilled workers.

Tips to be entirely separate from wages.

A minimum working-week of 40 hours, consisting of 5 days of 8 hours each.

No split watch.

No charges for meals, uniforms or laundering.

The next stage in the development of the union will be marked by the increasing popularization and agitation for these demands, which will be put in the center of the organizing activity, and the preparation to enforce the demands by general strike action.

A mass meeting has been called for Thursday evening, Dec. 28, at 9 p. m., at the union headquarters, 915-917-919 Eighth Avenue, to put the demands of the union before the hotel and restaurant workers and explain the preparations which are necessary to obtain them.

The Confidence in NRA

Every worker will have to realize that these demands will not be conceded merely by asking for them. The hotel and restaurant men themselves are well-organized, and prepared to resist every serious demand for improving conditions. This is shown not only by the vicious conditions which they have attempted to saddle firmly on the industry through the codes (54-hour week which is really 60 hours, concealed wage cut through introducing charge for meals, taking wages out of tips, etc.), but by their efforts to promote company unions in one form or another, refusal to deal with unions, attempts to discriminate against active union men, etc.

Here and there, particularly in those where the Amalgamated is well-organized, the bosses have thrown out a few concessions—scattered wage increases, even rearrangements of shifts to shorten hours. This has been particularly true since the Montclair workers went out solidly on strike, cooks, waiters, husbands, dishwashers, etc., under the banner of the Amalgamated. The workers generally understand, however, that these are only sop to keep them quiet and head off further advances of the union.

The American Federation of Labor locals have been coming forward with particularly militant phrases, threatening a general strike of protest against the codes, in which they have claimed to have the support of the Amalgamated and of the Federation of Hotel and Restaurant Guilds (the company-union type organization recently built up out of the previously-existing fraternal clubs and professional societies such as the Geneva, Vatel, Helvetia, etc.). The Federation at once repudiated any connection with a strike, although it appeared to vacillate a little later; meantime it has been advertising for extra workers for New Year's Eve.

Preferring for General Strike

The Amalgamated has made its position clear with regard to the A. F. of L. publicity as to the threatened protest strike. It is unconditionally opposed to the codes, and as long ago as Nov. 21 at a mass meeting passed a resolution denouncing the codes and stating that the workers were prepared in defense of their conditions "to use the effective weapon of the general strike". All our organizing work is directed to this end and we intend to make the general strike a real one.

As opposed to the bosses' demands, embodied in the codes, for perpetrating and aggravating the miserable conditions which prevail in the industry, we set up the working class solution to the problems of the industry: higher wages and shorter hours to raise the standards of the workers and relieve unemployment. We know that we cannot get these things without a struggle, and specifically a general strike.

It is important and necessary to make every effort to obtain the greatest possible unity in action of the labor organizations in the industry in support of any serious action for the purpose of enforcing these class demands, including not only a well-prepared and powerful general strike movement but also such actions as joint mass meetings or protest actions to prepare for it. It is essential, however, that every such step should be a serious part of a definite program calculated on the basis of the real forces available and have behind it the full weight of the organizations concerned.

New York Printers Organize Union

New York.—A general meeting of their organizations. The printers unorganized printers took place on December 17, 1933 at Germania Hall. It was called by the Independent Printing Employees. A prominent feature was the presence of a number of union men who encouraged the new body with warm words from the floor. Official representatives of Big Six and Pressmen's Local No. 51 were also given an opportunity to express their views. Numerous applications for membership were filed with the committee after the speeches and discussion.

These workers listened with attention and enthusiasm to a member of the Organization Committee, D. S. Gordon, who described the wretched conditions in the trade, the disastrous competition between union and non-union printers and the advantage taken of this division by the employers. He pointed out that while the printing bosses were combining to secure higher prices from the NRA code now under discussion more than half of the printers in this city are unorganized and ignored by the A. F. of L. unions, which through their prohibitive initiation fees, their closed membership books and long periods of apprenticeship have become closed corporations to a huge section of the unorganized. Concluding with an appeal for organization and action as the only effective method for the unorganized to improve conditions, Gordon stated that it was the intention of this union to work as closely with the other union men and their organizations as possible and to work for the establishment of one union in the industry.

The floor was thrown open for discussion and printer after printer got up on his feet describing conditions urging the need for organization and counseling courage and determination for the Independent Printing Employees. The printers present took heart and hope when members of "Big Six" and the Pressmen's Union No. 51 told them that they too were opposed to the policies of the leadership of these respective organizations for unions, that they were fighting for an industrial instead of the craft union, for the organization of the unorganized. They wished the new union success and offered to fight for it inside the A. F. of L. unions.

The presence in the meeting of Thomas J. O'Connell, Label Representative of Typographical Union No. 6 and Edwin L. Duck, Special Representative of the N. Y. Printing Pressmen's Union No. 51, gave the new union recognition, however informal, almost from its inception. These A. F. of L. representatives, soft spoken, silver-tongued, confidential back-slappers, consumed considerable time of the meeting explaining to the workers the great work they were carrying on and how easy it was to join up in

MR. ERNEST T. WEIR, steelmaster, very quietly challenged Section 7a of the NRA last week. He held an "election" in the mills of the Weirton Steel Company (a subsidiary of the National Steel, of which he is president) at which 49 company union men were delegated as "representatives of their own choosing" by the mill-hands. To keep up face, the Labor Board and General Johnson protested, fretted and threatened.

But Mr. Weir, the papers tell us, read "David Copperfield" for the hundred and first time. "It gets better with each reading," he remarked.

The steelmaster, "a rugged individualist who came up from the ranks in the old American way", has every cause to maintain his equanimity. "The next step is up to the administration," and that the administration will merely mark time is self-evident from all past experiences.

This is not the first and we don't believe it will be the last instance of the utter contempt with which big business regards the ever so solemn agreements concluded from time to time by the code authorities in Washington. The National Steel made more profit in 1931, according to reports, than all the other steel companies put together. That is a persuasive enough argument to counter any of the General's forceful paper ultimata which serve as a veil for feeble action. Such arguments abound in the ranks of the rugged individualists.

In most cases, the next step on the part of the administration is a surrender to the caplains of industry all along the line. A case in point is the latest development in the needle industry. There the code authorities, after arbitrating the great New York strike last fall with a seeming victory for the workers, have now made public some rulings which practically turn the tables in favor of the employees. A so-called "sub-normality" clause permits the payment of a wage below the established minimum to "slow" workers. What other effect can this have but the granting of a loophole to the needle bosses by which they can abolish the minimum wage altogether? Another ruling in the same industry gives the Southern and Western employers the right to pay their workers from 30 to 40 per cent lower wages than in the East. What other effect can this have but the enforced reestablishment of the Sweatshop?

At a meeting of unorganized workers and union men, an A. F. of L. official who is also serving on one of the NRA Complaint Boards told those present that he believed the chisellers had won their way clear into the NRA itself. Being all hopped up by the propaganda against the chisellers, the good man appeared to be quite outraged by this fact. It never occurred to him that an administration which stands four-square for a system—the profit system of capitalism—which upholds the free-for-all grab and may the best chiseler win, cannot help being swamped by them.

While the American workers may not as yet have come to the realization that it is up to them as a class to take the works into their own hands and run industry for the benefit of all the people, they are nevertheless gropingly doing something about it. They are realizing already with increasing clarity that NRA won't do a thing for them unless they themselves get together in formations of their own and see that they get whatever they can out of it. They no doubt notice with growing apprehension the fact that out of 3,000,000 Blue Eagles issued to the boss class—and how many million violations?—the National Recovery Administration announces only 65 (thirty-eight!) withdrawals....

Another «Friend» of the Soviet Union

The great wit of the bourgeoisie, George Bernard Shaw, has discovered a new love. Before the war it was the Fabian Society, the pinkiest of all pink organizations. During the war he served God and Empire. Recently his love was the Soviet Union, whose hotels at last had hot water, and whose trains at last ran. And now it is Herr Hitler.

"Describing Hitler as 'a very able man' Mr. Shaw said he had the genius to realize 'that Germany had been kicked long enough.' (New York Times.)

We cannot blame Mr. Shaw. He always was just one thing—a bourgeois, a very clever and, at times, a caustically critical one, but none the less a bourgeois. And Mr. Shaw is perfectly right. Adolf is a great man—for the bourgeoisie. For the workers Hitler is hell incarnate.

The danger lies not in Mr. Shaw being a bourgeois, but in the willingness of so-called proletarian leaders to take him for something else. And the danger becomes disaster when the Stalinist leaders of the Comintern rely upon Mr. Shaw and his fellows as the "friends" and defenders of the Soviet Union. Shaw and his friends are only petty bourgeois or bourgeois masqueraders, and when they get tired or scared of the red get-up, they'll change it for black, brown or blue. Henri Barbusse, Romain Rolland, Lord Marley, and all the rest will very probably disappear long before the battle which decides whether the Herr Wessel song shall be sung in Moscow's streets by Hitler's brown shirts—or whether the Internationale shall be heard in Berlin.

Mr. Shaw has shown these people the road. It is useless for Communists to blame them for taking it; they are what they are. But all workers must watch with suspicion those leaders of the Soviet Union, the whole Stalinist bureaucracy, who prefer such friends and defenders to the revolutionary proletariat.

THE LOGICAL CONCLUSION

"The Communist Party of America does not concern Russia, and the Communist Party of Russia does not concern America." Transport this formula of Livinoff to Europe and you have: "The Communist Party of Germany does not concern Russia and the Communist Party of Russia does not concern Germany." OR: "The World Communist Parties do not concern Russia and Russia does not concern the World Communist Parties." Thus Spoke Stalinism!

man—buried alive in this tomb of forgotten men—for seventeen of the best years of his life—denied and deprived of all that life holds dear. How would you feel if you were so brutally treated? Won't you do as much for me as you would like them to do for you, if in a similar predicament?

Accept my heartfelt thankful appreciation for any consideration you may show this desperate appeal.

With my warmest personal regards and best proletarian greetings, I am,

Comradely yours,
